Through the courtesy of the officers of the Methodist church, the church auditorium has been offered for the use in this emergency. A block of seats will be reserved until 8:15 for the 900 holders of season tickets to the Playmaker performances. The remaining seats will be open to the public without charge.

Debate Squad Meets

The debate squad will hold its regular weekly meeting tonight in 201 Murphey hall at 7:30. All members of the squad are urged to be present.

Immediately after this meeting there will be a meeting of all members of Tau Kappa Alpha forensic fraternity.

During commencement week in 1906 the faculty played the seniors in baseball. Score: faculty 4, seniors 6.

"That's perfectly all right with me, as long as you chased with SHERI-ALE."

More Directories To Be Distributed

Many people who did not receive directories when the first bunch was delivered have been coming to the Y asking for them. In order that these people may receive a directory, 500 copies have been ordered, and will be delivered to all homes and houses that did not receive them some time in the next week or so.

Senior Engineers Attend N. C. Water Works Conference

The entire senior class in civil engineering will attend the Tuesday sessions of the convention and conference of the North Carolina section of the American Water Works association and the North Carolina Sewage Works association to be held in High Point this week, and the graduate students in sanitary engineering will attend all of the meetings.

Two members of the associations from Chapel Hill will present papers at the meeting. Professor Thorndike Saville, of the University faculty, will present a paper on "The Distribution and Variation of Annual Rainfall in North Carolina," and E. W. Constable, a graduate student in chemistry and biology, will present one on "Mosquito Control on Water Supply Reservoirs."

The North Carolina section of the A. W. W. A. and the N. C. Sewage Works association are two of the most active bodies of their kind in the United States. The annual meetings are attended by over five hundred engineers, municipal officials, superintendents of water works and sewage plants, and public health officials.

At the last meeting of the associations there were men present from 15 states, practically every state in the south, east and middle west having its representative. H. G. Baity of the University faculty is secretary of both associations.

STUHLMAN TALKS ABOUT HUMIDITY

Plays a Great Part In Our General Health and Comfort, He Says.

Humidity plays a great part in our general health and comfort, according to Dr. Otto Stuhlman, head of the physics department, and the humidity of a room is a sure index of the comfort in the room. A person coming indoors from wet weather will at once feel a change in a steam heated room. Whereas the air outside is seemingly dripping with moisture, the air inside is usually very dry. This dry air causes the pores to open resulting in colds, catarrah, headaches and other ailments.

Heat from the radiator increases the capacity of the air in the room for water vapor. This apparent greediness for moisture must be satisfied in order that living conditions may be maintained at their best.

A lack of moisture in a room will cause a person to feel colder and need more unnecessary heat to give the effect of warmth. But were a sufficient amount of moisture to be introduced into the room less heat would be needed, and the result would tend to better health and effect a saving on the family coal bill.

Steam up to a temperature of 72 degrees Fahrenheit has a relative humidity as low as 23 percent which is as dry as Death Valley. To remedy this evil vapor must be admitted into the air to raise the humidity to at least 65 percent. This can be done by the evaporation of water at the boiler and can best be introduced by means of a hot air furnace.

The conclusion is obvious in that, by increasing the humidity, a proportional amount of coal is saved; and the whole result is a more economical, more healthful and more comfortable condition. Many economical and hygenic errors have been committed because the average housewife would rather suffer, probably through ignorance of the danger involved, the consequences of a dry atmosphere, than be troubled with devices for evaporating water.

Director of U. S. Marine Band

All statements to the contrary, it is the staunch belief of Capt. Taylor Branson, famou director of the renowned United States Marine Band, that the people of America are inherently musical. According to Capt. Branson, the audiences of Europe are more responsive to the music of the masters because they were "raised on it," so to speak. America is a new country, and its people—up to recent years—had little time for the arts. But it is because they are a new people—experimental—pioneers in thought and deed—not afraid to accept the new because it is new—thinks Capt. Branson, that Americans are becoming so intense in their appreciation of music.

It is also due to the fact, says this famous musician, that music is taught in the public schools, that the local boys' bands are more numerous, and because successive Presidents of the United States have permitted the United States Marine Band to reach the people by tours each year.

Carolina Student Stages Miniature Production Of Old German Masterpiece

Donald Rulfs, Sophomore Of Wilmington, Gives Unique Presentation Of "Faust"; Remarkable Lighting Effects.

(By Milt Wood)

"Faust" in a steamer trunk.

That may serve to illustrate how miniature is the production of the great German masterpiece which Donald J. Rulfs, sophomore, of Wilmington, N. C., has assembled with his own hands. One can easily picture in the mind the settings for "Faust" on a small scale.

But only by actually seeing Rulfs produce "Faust" in his own unique way can one appreciate the inherent artistry of this University of North Carolina student. Because of his greater interest, the lighting effects for the five acts are miraculous, especially when daylight fades slowly into darkness in the garden scene. But more than this, his stage settings, done to scale and remarkably resembling the full stage, are a revelation. And to top all this, the genius of Rulfs has enabled him to put life on this stage by means of puppets representing and closely modeled after the characters in "Faust."

It was a rare treat to three University students who were given a private exhibition of "Faust" by Rulfs last evening in his room in Grimes dormitory. The show started on time, too, at exactly 7:15, for Rulfs is not only precise but punctual. The audience of three was seated without delay, the producer took his stand behind a table on which the futuristic stage for "Faust" had been erected, the house lights, both of them, one on either side wall, were darkened, and the "crowd" awaited the curtain. Prior to its rising, however, Rulfs provided the proper atmosphere by playing an overture from "Faust" on his phonograph, also hidden behind scenes.

The curtain rose slowly showing the aged philosopher in a dimly lighted room, pondering over his books. Then Rulfs spoke for "Faust" the words of discontent with his lot as the puppet's arm pounded the book for emphasis. Suddenly, the red clothed figure of Mephistopholes bounds into the room,

DI SENATE SETS DATE FOR DANCE

Affair To Be Formal; Other Activities Discussed During Meeting Tuesday Night.

The meeting of the Dialectic Senate Tuesday night in New West building opened with the election of the following five men to membership: Adams, King, Baretty, Dratler, and Hayes.

Senator Simpson, reporting for the committee on the Mary D. Wright Debate, announced the following query: "Resolved, That the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill now pending before the special session of the seventy-first congress should be passed as introduced." The Senator informed the group that the Dialectic Senate would uphold the negative side of the question and that the debate would be in Gerrard hall on the night of December 10.

Reporting for the dance committee, Senator McPherson read a detailed account of the work of the committee embodying the following among other things:

1. Admission cards will be issued to all members of the senate who have settled with the treasurer. An assessment of one dollar will be levied on each member. 2. All graduate and professional members may be admitted upon payment of the assessment. 3. Members may be granted an additional admission card upon payment of a second assessment. 4. The dance will be held in the Di hall on the night of December 6. It will be a formal affair.

After having attended to all pertinent matters of business, the senate proceeded to discuss: "Resolved, That southern textile workers should be organized into competent, recognized, and efficient labor unions."

The vote of the senate on the measure was a deadlock and was decided by President Williams in favor of the affirmative. The measure, therefore, passed by one vote.

LIBRARY 'BLACK LIST' PREVENTS TOO MANY FINES

Penalties Are to Protect Borrower Who Returns Books Promptly; Encourages Returning Books on Time.

The main purpose of the "black list" which the library has installed within the last few weeks is to prevent the accumulation of large fines on the part of students, and to encourage the returning of all books on time, according to library officials.

The library has had a black list before, but it was not effective for it did not check the accumulation of fines. Under the new system all names of delinquent borrowers are visible simultaneously and the amount of fines are easily read by the staff.

Fines are not imposed upon the student for the purpose of making money for the library. The money collected from this source goes into the general fund. The fundamental purpose of fines is to protect the borrower who returns his book on time from the neglectful borrower.

The old ideas of libraries was to keep all the books on the shelves as the library was a great storehouse. The modern library is regarded as an agent employed between the borrower and the books to keep the volumes circulating.

In connection with the old idea of libraries the following incident is brought to mind: at Harvard University a few years ago, a student met the librarian and asked him how the library was getting along. The librarian replied, "all the books are on the shelves except one, and I am going out after that one now."

Tar Heel Topics

"Wolfpack Wants To Beat Carolina Team," headlines the infant daily. Wonder what the headwriter thinks they play football for, anyway?

One more consolation for we underpaid typewriter pounders is that we didn't have enough coin to buy ourselves some stock before the market went blooie.

Hallowe'en night and nary a false fire alarm, busted plate glass window or old lady frightened to death in Chapel Hill. Maybe the collegian is growing up after all.

A Dangerous Precedent

Three Washington Times reporters were sentenced Wednesday to 45 days each in jail for contempt of court by Judge Peyton Gordon when they refused to reveal to a District of Columbia grand jury the names and addresses of persons from whom they claimed to have purchased liquor. The men told the court they had bought liquor in 49 speakeasies in Washington, that they had gained admittance to them through friends and that they had promised not to reveal the names of bootleggers, asserting their only purpose in going to the speakeasies was to develop news stories concerning crime conditions in Washington.

Though sentenced for 45 days, the reporters face indeterminate sentences, since they will be liable to another contempt action if they refuse to answer the questions at the end of their terms. The judge implied that they might be freed before the expiration of their sentences if they revealed the names of the bootleggers.

It seems to us that the District of Columbia is countenancing a high-handed and highly dangerous procedure if it permits the sentences of the reporters to stand. A precedent would be set which would very effectually prevent newspaper campaigns against crime conditions and political abuses. In the past newspapers have rendered service of inestimable value to the public on numerous occasions by revealing corruption in government and inefficiencies in police administration.

It is the duty of law enforcement officials to act upon reports of crime and the privilege of any citizen or publication to point out violations of the law. Courts and other crime prevention agencies should be appreciative of tips from individuals or newspapers which inform them of instances of law breaking.

Prosecution of criminals hardly lies within the province of journalism. Newspapers have a definite duty to perform for the public in bringing to light deplorable crime conditions; if their reporters are to be required to secure evidence against individual lawbreakers and divulge this evidence before tribunals of justice they should be subsidized by the state. Judge Gordon has attempted to convert a newspaper staff into a police department. It is true that newshounds are often amateur sleuths, but the average reporter would hardly be willing to become a federal "flatfoot," even if his journalistic duties did not prevent it. Strange as it may seem, even a reporter has a few principles.

The Forensic Situation

Along with other developments in the field of extracurricular activity at the University of North Carolina has come an alleged decline of interest in forensic undertakings. It is by no means an uncommon occurrence to hear members of the faculty, who were intercollegiate debaters in their undergraduate days, lament the fact that debating no longer draws a packed house of students, faculty members, and townspeople. Every now and then some elderly person tells of the days when he had to go to Gerrard hall early in order to get a seat for the occasion of the annual Carolina-Virginia debate. That the disappearance of this condition indicates a decline of interest cannot be denied. The writer feels, however, that there are several facts in this connection which should be cited as an explanatory measure.

Debating is the oldest form of extracurricular activity in which representatives of the University now participate. It had its beginning long before the days of football and long before the days of the famous Carolina Playmakers. The Dialectic Senate and the Philanthropic Assembly, essentially forensic organizations, were founded in 1795. Thus, forensics early became a part of the University itself. With this beginning debating here rapidly became the chief activity of the various rival clubs and other organizations which developed in the course of the ensuing century, Carolina's first intercollegiate debate finally taking place in 1904. Forensics at Carolina have a nobility of origin, therefore, which is second only to the founding of the University itself.

Time was when a Carolina student had to debate if he engaged in any form of extracurricular activity whatsoever, for there was nothing else to do in this field of endeavor which is all-important in the present day. Moreover, attendance of the literary societies was assured by faculty regulations from which none were exempt. This situation no longer exists.

But let us be more specific and more modern. Most of the four hundred and twelve organizations which exist on this campus at present originated within the last forty years. Students who would have flocked to intercollegiate debates even twenty years ago now attend various social meetings, political gatherings, picture shows, and the like. The forensic cause is the sufferer. And why? Simply because other things are more dramatic and appeal more to the average youth who is bent upon a good time. The extreme development of the moving picture industry, the rise of brawn worship with its many football heroes, and many other forms of amusement involving the physical element and social appeal have sapped intercollegiate debating of large audiences. The contention of the writer is substantiated by the fact that the annual Carolina-British debate always attracts a large audience. People want to see what the Britishers look like just as they want to see famous football players in action.

Intercollegiate debating is concerned with questions of national and international importance. Moreover, statistics show that the average age of students enrolled in the University is considerably lower than it was fifteen years ago. The tendency from the first class to that of last year is toward graduation at an earlier age. The contention here is that young students are not as much interested in big national and international problems as older ones are. This factor cannot easily be overlooked in explaining the decline of forensic audiences. Youths of eighteen and nineteen years who become very much excited when watching a football game would consider a debate on immigration nothing short of a gripe.

Nevertheless, the pendulum has swung the other way now, and intercollegiate debating here is gaining steadily in prominence. Since the organization of the debate squad, from which all intercollegiate debaters are selected, the number of candidates for teams has increased very noticeably. Owing to better presentations in all debates arising from the aforesaid increased competition for positions on the teams and such features as the debate with the British women in Memorial hall last year, attendance is also increasing from year to year. The Carolina-Virginia radio debate, begun last year and now an annual affair, has done much to arouse interest.

In the whole forensic game at Carolina there seems to be a steady revival after a very lamentable slump.—J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

IN ANSWER TO MR. MEBANE AND HIS DRAMATIC CRITIC

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

But for the rather brutal pun on the word "shrieks," Mr. Greenblatt's letter was a model of dignity and restraint that I might do well to imitate. However, the temptation offered by the content outweighs any admiration I may have for Mr. Greenblatt's literary abilities. Particularly noticeable is Mr. Greenblatt's contempt for "press notices" and "newspaper men." In reply, I should like to ask this question: What written dramatic criticisms are not "press notices?" What are Mr. Greenblatt's comments but "press notices?" And who except "newspaper men" write dramatic criticisms of current plays? Mr. Mebane himself says that the Carolina Magazine theatrical column is patterned after those of "Life" and "Judge." In the broad sense of the word, George Jean Nathan and Ralph Barton are journalists. Even if Mr. Greenblatt is a purist, I consider my talents greatly complimented to be ranked with Percy Hammond, Robert Littell, and St. Johns Ervine. When Mr. Greenblatt improves on these men, I shall be very happy to offer him my heartiest congratulations and most profound admiration.

In comparing Mr. Greenblatt's column with the dramatic department of "Life" and "Judge," which Mr. Mebane assured me were the models of its design, I find one distinct difference. Unlike Mr. Greenblatt's comments, George Jean Nathan's terse criticisms are based upon a more adequate review, which has appeared in a previous issue. Robert Benchley's statement in the last "New Yorker" concerning "Strictly Dishonorable"; "The first real light comedy of the season, etc," was preceded by a two column review in the issue of October 26, even though most of us should be willing to accept Mr. Benchley's unqualified "yes" or "no."

Another matter I should like to mention is the purpose of Mr. Greenblatt's column. As my kind supporter, Another Damyankee, put it: "What is the use of reviewing plays five hundred miles off in New York?" While I thank him for his assistance, I do not entirely agree with him on this point. Carolina prides itself on being progressive and abreast of the times. To ignore anything as much a part of the development of our national culture as the New York theatre would be inconsistent with this policy. If the column is intended to serve as a guide, perhaps the short comment form is the best. However, even in this case, the visiting New Yorkers are told very little of what the plays are about, and have only Mr. Greenblatt's personal opinion as to whether they are good or bad. Mr. Greenblatt's disappointment in "Journey's End" is interesting inasmuch as it is contradictory to the prevalent opinion of the merit of this play, but without further elaboration I should not feel satisfied to accept his verdict. And were I to avoid seeing it merely because he didn't like it, I should be rather angry to discover afterwards that it is generally considered to be the best play in New York.

Everyone is entitled to his own opinion, and I am not advocating sheep-mindedness. However, I do believe that for the guidance of those people who have only a limited time to spend in New York, and wish to see these plays which are most representative, worthwhile, and enjoyable, a more authoritative and mature opinion would be advisable—perhaps that of these same "newspaper men." Despite Mr. Greenblatt's contempt for them, their business is to know and recommend good plays. And I believe that their experience with the theatre is more extensive than his.

If Mr. Greenblatt's column is for the information of those who are unable to attend New York productions, a more detailed review seems to be indicated. It should briefly discuss the nature of the play, the plot, the setting, the characters, as well as the quality of the play and performance as a whole.

In conclusion, I want to apologize for any personal remarks I have made. Unfortunately, when criticising anything so individual as personal opinion, it is hard not to be personal. And then too, Mr. Greenblatt found boring a play which I consider one of the high spots of my life.

Sincerely yours,
A. NEW YORKER.

Three New Members Elected To Vestry

The student vestry of the Episcopal church held the election of new members last Tuesday night at the parish house at which the following men were elected: Bill Draper, Jack Peschan and Mandy Webb.

Dick Winburn resigned as president of the vestry at the meeting because of lack to time to fill properly the duties invested in the office. His successor will be elected at the next meeting. Members of the vestry include Bill Carbine, Joe Eagles, Aubrey Parsley, Peter Brown Ruffin, Beaky Huger, Charlie Waddell and Robert Brawley.

Did You Know That—

The most mispronounced, and misspelled word, is optimist? According to Howard Mumford Jones, many students here say optomist, and some go so far as to spell it that way. Another oft misspelled and mispronounced word is hypocrisy.

The cornflower has been voted the unofficial flower of the University of North Carolina?

An interesting sociological movement is going on within the confines of "I" dormitory? Just as the old Christians, who were so outnumbered by the Romans, formed secret societies and met in the Catacombs, and like the Hugenots in France, the Moors in Spain and like the contemporaneous little races within races, such as the "Little Italy's" and the "Little Hungary's" of New York, endeavored to retain their individualities and withstand the pressure of foreign thought and ideals, so have the Christians in "I" dormitory banded together and formed the "Gentile Club." Of course, as anyone who has ever been to "I" may know, the men eligible to join the "Gentile Club" number not more than forty or forty-five percent of the entire dormitory. Weekly meetings are held, officers have been elected and steps taken to form a strong, powerful organization which will be able to cope with the gradual encroachment of the entire dormitory by the opposition.

Every time President Chase frowns, 50 muscles must work, while every time he smiles, only 13 of his muscles go into play?

When Archibald Henderson goes into the Carolina Barber Shop to have a shave and a haircut, it is said that he always mumbles, "Give me a shavian haircut, please"?

"Dean" Paulsen has been growing more and more amazed at the continued increase in the use of undershirts and underdrawers among the students? Three years ago, only full-grown union suits were to be seen tumbling out of the laundry bags but now not more than one or two men, at the most, out of each dormitory and fraternity house send in the good old-fashioned union-suits.

There is a most disappointed sophomore wandering about, looking forlorn and lovelorn? Last week, he received a letter from his girl in New York stating that her father and mother would be away for the week-end and it would be wonderful if he were to come up to see her. He left Thursday afternoon, after borrowing as much money as he could lay hands on, and leaving with the full knowledge that he was cutting two mid-term examinations. When he finally arrived in New York, he spent the entire week-end talking to his girl, who was in bed, from the threshold of her room. He wasn't allowed to enter her room. Diphtheria had beat him to it. He's broke now, flunked one exam that he had not time to prepare for and must take two exams that he missed this week.

Three Elevens Get Hard Work Against Wolfpack Plays; New Offense Planned For Saturday

With the new offense designed for Saturday's N. C. State game working in shipshape fashion, the Tar Heel coaches yesterday turned their attention to defense.

Gates were barred to all but recognized Tar Heel backers, and until long after the shades of darkness had fallen the coaches sent three full elevens at defensive scrimmage against many freshman crews.

The results were fairly pleasing. The husky frosh got away on occasions and scored a couple of times, but on the whole the lines were diagnosing the deceptive Wolfpack plays and stopping them rather well.

Julian Fenner, injured right end, was back in the varsity line and looking in shape again, but the veterans Koenig, tackle, and Eskew, guard, were still out, as was also Jimmy Ward, veteran left halfback.

The shift from offensive to defensive is taken as evidence of the fact that the Tar Heels are about satisfied with the driving new offense, centered on line plays, which the Tar Heels have been concocting especially for the Wolfpack.

The Tar Heel mentors have had their squad hard at this new offense all week, with results that have made life hard for the freshman crews who have opposed them in the daily scrimmages.

The first team scrimmaging yesterday showed Holt and Fenner, ends; Thompson and Adkins, tackles; Farris and Fysal, guards; Lipscomb, center; Branch, quarter; Magner and Slusser, halves, and House, fullback.

The second team working had Reid and Brown, ends; Koenig and Harper, tackles; Crew and Hudson, guards; Gilbreath, center; Wyrick, quarter; Maus and Nash, halves, and Spaulding, fullback.

WRESTLERS MAKING GOOD AS TAR HEEL GRIDMEN

A varsity wrestler who came out for football because he wanted to get in shape for wrestling is promising to show varsity tackles a few things about offensive football tactics, and incidentally, may start the N. C. State game.

Reference is to George Thompson, hefty Goldsboro boy, who probably will get the call at Bill Koenig's regular tackle post if the veteran Koenig isn't completely recovered from the injury that has had him on the shelf since the Georgia Tech game.

Thompson filled Koenig's post last Saturday, as the Tar Heels repulsed V. P. I., and the varsity grappler proved one of the hardest hitting men in a hard charging Tar Heel line.

He stands 6 feet 1 and weighs 190. He has size, drive and power, and with a little more seasoning looks good to become one of the Tar Heels' best line bets. The veteran Adkins and Koenig both finish their careers this year, and Thompson bids fair to assume a regular tackle post.

It is an odd coincidence that last year's N. C. State game "made" Bill Koenig, who stepped into the starting lineup in place of the injured veteran Nelson Howard. Now, it seems the N. C. State game may "make" another tackle for the Tar Heels.

Other reserve linemen who stand fine chances of crashing through in the Wolfpack battle are "Red" Parsley, Herb Nelson and Theron Brown, ends; Ellis Fysal and Ellis Crew, guards; Gavin Dortch, tackle, and "Red" Gilbreath, center.

Reports from the Capital City indicate that the Wolfpack eleven are eating raw meat while planning an attack on the Tar Heel camp. The invasion of the 'Pack this year will mean the 22nd meeting of the two rival state institutions within a 35-year period of rivalry.

Governor Max Gardner again holds the limelight as the two teams meet. While in college the Guv-nor was a mainstay of both teams. First at State and then here, and both the Wolfpack and the Tar Heels have a claim to his support tomorrow. Although the Tar Heels played State the year the Guv'nor was here, he did not go up against his old Alma Mater.

Rumors from State college are saying that the Tar Heels will have a big surprise when the whistle brings to a close the game tomorrow. From all accounts the 'Pack is almost as optimistic as in previous years. The rumors include reports that the majority of the State varsity did not see service for very much of the time against Michigan last week, because of the "surprise" in store for the Heels.

It is quite probable that the "surprise" from State may come in the same type of package that Wake Forest served called "Mystery eleven."

This will be the first game that the Wolfpack will play at Kenan stadium and many are wondering how the natural beauty of the surroundings will effect the hungry Wolves. Up until 1926 the Carolina-State game was an annual state fair attraction.

According to the scores so far this season the varsity will take the Wolfpack in tow by a large margin. Wake Forest held State to a close win, 8-6, while the Tar Heels took the Deacons down by a 48-0 score. Those who know the Wolfpack teams of yore give scant credit to such flimsy material for prophecies as the 'Pack usually furnishes a hard game for the Blue and White no matter what the odds before the the game. Last year's 6-6 tie evidenced this fact.

Out of 22 games played between the two teams within a 35-year period of rivalry, Carolina has won 13, tied 5, and lost 3.

So far this season the Blue and White has played every game in fair weather. If the game tomorrow is played under blue skies it will bid toward a record fair-weather season. Usually the visitors to U. N. C. are greeted by a cloudburst, snow, or some other form of foul weather.

Duke's game this week with Boston will make it the third time in as many week-ends that Duke has traveled "east." Duke bowed to Navy and Villanova by large scores and bids fair to succumb again under a heavy score.

Tomorrow's backfield lineup will probably be the same as last week's with Johnny Branch at quarter, Nash and Magner at halfs, and House at full. Jimmy Maus, expert pass heaver, will probably see service tomorrow. Last year Maus was on the sending end of the pass that saved the game with a 6-6 tie.

WINNING TEAMS SCORE HEAVILY IN TOUGH GAMES

D. K. E., Chi Psi, and Pikas Annex Intramural Contests; Five Tilts Listed for Today.

Three intramural games were played yesterday. Delta Kappa Epsilon won from Sigma Phi Sigma 39 to 0, Chi Psi won from Theta Chi four first downs to two, and Pi Kappa Alpha won from Sigma Chi 18 to 0. Phi Delta Theta won from Kappa Psi on a forfeit. The fifth game was postponed on account of the absence of both teams.

On the second play of the Chi Psi-Theta Chi game Baggs intercepted a Theta Chi pass and ran 48 yards for a touchdown. The teams battled on even terms until the third quarter, when White made a 40 yard end run for a Theta Chi touchdown, tying the score. Chi Psi pushed over two more first downs, making the count 4 first downs to 2, and giving Chi Psi the decision.

Clarence Jensen, who led the field home, as the Tar Babies raced the Gobbler frosh, will be the Tar Babies' best bet Saturday, while Troutman is reported to be the outstanding runner on the State freshman team.

E. S. Patterson of Pi Kappa Alpha was perhaps the outstanding performer of the day, being able to run up first downs consistently. He got off several nice punts to put his team out of danger, and threw passes that netted 30 and 40 yard gaint. J. Blue of Pi Kappa Alpha was responsible for several long gains, and his clipping was largely responsible for Patterson's gains. For Sigma Chi the work of Holcomb was commendable.

In the D. K. E.-Sigma Phi Sigma it was mostly D. K. E. To date this team appears to be the class of the pack. The passing of R. H. Chatham, and the kicking of C. G. Chatham were most noticeable for the Dekes.

The schedule for today is as follows:

3:30—(1) Steele vs. "J."
(2) Ruffin vs. "I."
(3) No game.

4:30—(1) Old East vs. "F."
(2) Grimes vs. Manly.
(3) Carr vs. Mangum.

TAR HEELS BOAST 32 POINT AVERAGE

With almost two weeks of intense work behind them, the varsity and freshman cross-country teams are rapidly rounding into shape for Saturday's race with the N. C. State hill and dale squads, which will be run between halves of the Tar Heel-Wolfpack grid battle here.

With Johnson, Pearcy and Brock standing out especially, State is reported to have another fine team this year.

The Tar Heels, southern champions for three years, who slipped in losing a close opening meet to V. P. I., will be striving to hit their stride again, and to lay preparations for the forthcoming championship meet, to be held here November 23.

Cliff Baucom, Captain Minor Barkley and Walter Lowry ran good races against the Gobblers. Coach Dale Ranson has been busy grooming other men to supplement these veterans and the Tar Heels promise to show a stronger team in this N. C. State test.

Pierce, J. J. Cohen, M. G. Cohen, Farris, Phoenix, Wrenn and Simpson are among the most promising besides Baucom, Barkley and Lowry.

For Theta Chi the work of Anglin, White and Weeks was outstanding, while Swope, Baggs and Glascock starred for the winners.

CAROLINA, STATE MEET 22ND TIME

State Has Won 3 Tar Heel Games Since 1894

FIRST GAME WON BY TECH IN 1920

Underdog or upperdog—which is favored psychologically in a football game?

The answer may be seen, partly at least, when the varsity engages N. C. State's Wolfpack here in the 22nd renewal of a 35-year old grid rivalry.

For, of 21 meetings between the ancient rivals, the Tar Heels have won 13, tied five and lost but three.

The important question just now is will the underdog or upperdog philosophy prevail Saturday?

The ancient rivarly began in 1894, and it took the Wolfpack exactly six seasons and seven games to cross the University goal line.

The first score for State came in a 11 to 11 tie game in 1899. The next time a red-jerseyed ball carrier passed the Tar Heel goal was in 1919, following the renewal of relations after the World War.

Each season from 1894 until 1901—excepting the tie battle of '99—the Tar Heels won by large scores ranging from 16 to 0 up to 44 to 0.

In 1902 and 1905 the Wolfpack eked out scoreless ties, but a break in relations followed the 1905 meeting, and the Techmen had to wait until after the World War for their first win.

The Tar Heels barely won the first post-war game 13 to 12, and Dick Gurley, now coach at Lenoir-Rhyne, led the Wolves to victory in 1920 by a 13 to 3 count.

Runt Lowe booted a field goal that day to save the Tar Heels from a shut-out, but the following year Lowe fumbled and gave State a chance to win the 1921 game 7 to 3. Runt Faucette, Raleigh boy and State college quarterback, recovered Lowe's fumble and sprinted half the field for the winning touchdown.

"Monk" McDonald, "Red" Johnson, Emmett Underwood and other Tar Heel stars renewed the winning habit. Monk McDonald ran 95 yards for a touchdown to feature the 14 to 9 victory of 1922. For four years the Tar Heels blanked the Wolves.

The great Jack McDowall upset the count in 1927 to lead the Wolves to a 19 to 6 win. The Tar Heels were doped to win by two touchdowns last year, but a great Wolfpack held them to a 6-6 tie.

Season records favor the Tar Heels this year, but the traditional Wolfpack fight has many supporters predicting one of the Tar Heels' hardest fights for Saturday.

TAR HEELS HAVE RECORD AVERAGE FOR 1929 GAMES

Collin's Men Reach High Scoring Mark Established By Famous 1914 Eleven.

North Carolina's great scoring machine, with 159 points to its credit for five games, is becoming the subject of much wonderment.

Can the Tar Heels maintain this great record of 32 points a game against N. C. State Saturday and in their hard games to follow? Can they keep running roughshod over opposing elevens to set a new record for Tar Heel teams of all times?

The dim and distant future will tell the tale. It's a fact, though, that Chuck Collins and his Notre Dame-trained coaching partners have developed one of the greatest of all Tar Heel scoring machines this year.

Whether State can stop them Saturday remains to be seen. State has had an off-season, but the Wolfpack has been saving considerable for this Tar Heel battle and may well be expected to play their greatest game Saturday.

A few figures might be illuminating. The highest powered Tar Heel scoring machine of all time was Captain Dave Tayloe's famous 1914 eleven, which, oddly enough, averaged 32 points and a fraction over for an 11-game season, the same the 1929 Tar Heels are averaging to date.

The boys of 1911 ran wild over everybody except Virginia, slumping at the close of a brilliant season to lose 20-3.

The Tar Heels' one undefeated eleven, that of 1898, scored 187 points, but if you examine the other side of the ledger, you find their opponents bagged only 8.

The highest powered of the Blue and White scoring machines was Captain Grady Pritchard's 1922 team, on which the famous Red Johnson led a great crew of backs through a 10-game, 211-point season.

Can these 1929 Tar Heels turn the trick and set a new high average? State may have much to say about that Saturday. It is a fact, however, that the Tar Heels in hurdling Georgia Tech and Georgia have passed two of their most formidable opponents.

They have a 32-point average now, as good as the greatest scoring Tar Heel outfit. Can Magner, Ward, Spaulding, Nash, Branch, Slusser, Erickson, Harden, Wyrick, House, Jackson, Maus and Company maintain the pace?

Rowe's Condition Reported Better

The condition of Ezra Rowe, varsity football player who was rushed to Watts hospital Durham, Wednesday night for possible appendicitis operation, was improved Thursday night. He will remain at the hospital for observation for the next few days, according to Dr. Foy Roberson.

Frosh Tennis Star Is In Semi-Finals Of Pinehurst Meet

Wilmer Hines Plays Herbert Vail, Veteran Racqueteer of New York, Today.

The Pinehurst tennis tournament progressed to the semi-finals yesterday with Wilmer Hines, U. N. C. entry, still going strong. Today he plays Herbert Vail, veteran racqueteer of New York, for finalist honors. Bob Crosland, Charlotte, and Grady Franks of Duke play the other semi-finals match.

Hines got a default first round by virtue of his high seeding and then advanced to the semi-finals at the expense of Phillips, Duke player, 8-6, 6-3. Crosland was disastrous to Carolina interests by defeating Al Brown and Lenoir Wright. Sonny Graham fell by the wayside to the tune of 6-0, 6-4, when he encountered Vail. Franks was too ambitious for Bill Merritt who bowed in the first round 6-0, 6-4. Then Franks settled an old score with Yeomans by eliminating him 7-5, 6-3. It will be remembered that Yeomans licked Franks in the finals of the state intercollegiate tourney last spring.

In the doubles, two Carolina teams monopolize the spotlight. Yeomans and Merritt fight it out with Vail and Crosland in the semi-finals while Hines and Wright clash racquets with Myers and Stratton in the other bracket. Myers is another denizen of Duke.

The tournament here has been discontinued until the Pinehurst play is over.

High Grid Men Meet Roxboro Team Today

The Chapel Hill high school eleven has shown a great amount of pepper in its drills this week in preparation for the annual tilt with Roxboro high school. Increased strength is to be had in Neville, Stone and Williams who have been laid off on account of injuries. These men are all patched up and rearing to go Friday.

Captain Odell King, the most consistent ground gainer of the Hillians, will lead them into the fray Friday from the fullback position.

Upchurch is making good at guard, after beginning the season at end, but his lack of experience caused him to be placed at guard instead. Bob Ray, former guard, made good on end in the Alexander-Wilson game, and has been shifted to the flank position.

Jesse Sparrow has improved much since the first of the season, and has just about cinched a place on the varsity.

Roxboro isn't to be ignored because all their losses were by close scores and Coach Jones is taking no chances with dark-horses. The team journeys to Roxboro this morning.

A Real Coach as Football Director For Film Romance

Jeff Cravath, all-American center of the University of Southern California two years ago, now football coach at Denver University, Denver, Colo., played an important part in the filming of "Salute," the West Point-Annapolis all-talking picture now at the Carolina Theatre, although he did not appear once before the cameras.

Cravath prepared the plays used by the "West Point" and "Annapolis" teams in the football game which provides the climax. The formations used by both teams in the thrill screen game are similar to those used in real gridiron battles by the rival government academies.

George O'Brien is shown as an all-American West Point halfback in this Fox Movietone production, while William Janney, who appears as his brother, functions as a substitute Annapolis end.

Helen Chandler and Joyce Campton are the girls in the case. Stepin Fetchit, Frank Albertson and other favorites also are in the cast.

Musical Revue To Give Performance

"Padlocks Of 1929" Shows At Durham Next Tuesday.

"Padlocks of 1929," the unusual musical revue which comes from the Shubert Theatre, New York, to the Carolina Theatre, Durham, N. C., Tuesday, November 5th, goes later into the Studebaker, Chicago, for an extended run. Some of the unique features consist of a very large stage band under the direction of Harry Shannon, an original troupe of Tiller girls, direct from the Palace Theatre, London, and the original "Shadowgraph," originally seen in Ziegfeld Follies. The large cast includes Norma Gallo, Richard Ryan, Davie Burns, Allene Pring, Dorothy Randolph, Danny Beck, Carl Byal, Patsie Dane, Sally Scott, "Miss Billie" Ferris, Pearle McKinney, and a numerous beauty chorus. Loretta Campeau, the young French comedienne, who but lately appeared in pictures, has been added to the cast, as the entrepreneuse, or, in short Miss Campeau tells the audience what they may expect in this and that scene, all said in a delightful broken French-English dialect. The settings are by Josef Urban, and the costumes from Max Weldy, Paris, and Maurice Mahieu, New York.

Slusser Speedy Boy

"Rip" Slusser, ten-second sophomore trackman, is putting his great speed to good use in the Tar Heel backfield. Fans count on Slusser to get loose at least once a game anyway. He reeled off a number of flashy runs against Tech. He took a long pass off a Bulldog's hands and made a beautiful sprint for a 42-yard gain and touchdown in the Georgia game. He made another beautiful catch and run for a 20-yard gain, leading a couple of plays later to a score, in the V.P.I. game. Fans will be watching his stellar work when the Tar Heels meet N. C. State here Saturday in a game that will make and break state titular hopes for two teams undefeated in the Big Five.

Teacher-Trainers Doing Heavy Duty

Members of the teacher-training division of the school of education are doing heavy duty these days at the district teachers' meetings. J. M. Gwynn, assistant professor of Latin, has already addressed the Latin teachers at the Asheville and Greensboro meetings. As president of the Latin section of the North Carolina Teachers association, he will also attend the district meetings at Charlotte, Raleigh, Elizabeth City and Wilmington.

H. F. Munch, associate professor of mathematics, addressed the mathematics teachers last week at Greensboro.

A. K. King, assistant professor of history, has spoken to the history teachers at Asheville and Greensboro, and will also attend the meeting at Wilmington.

Dr. C. E. Preston, associate professor of natural science, is scheduled to address the science teachers at the Raleigh meeting.

Hugo Giduz, assistant professor of French, will attend the Raleigh meeting to assist in the organization of a French section of the North Carolina Teachers association.

Reserve Ends Shine

An injury to Julian Fenner left a big gap at right end in the Tar Heel forward wall, but "Red" Parsley, Wilmington boy, stepped in and filled the post in great style in the V.P.I. game. V.P.I.'s fast moving backs gained exactly minus three yards around the Tar Heel ends, guarded by Parsley, and the veteran Holt. The Wilmington boy, a reserve from last season, also shined on several pass catches and at covering on punts. Fenner is due to be back in shape for the N. C. State game here Saturday, but it is a sure thing that Tar Heel supporters will see more of this son of the seaside in future games.

Carolina Student Stages Production

engages Faust in conversation and makes his proposition of youth to him. The puppet is brought into physical action by the strings in Rulfs' hands.

Before the first act is ended one forgets that he is in a dormitory room and knows that he is in the auditorium theatre at Chicago or the Shrine Opera House in Los Angeles.

It takes Rulfs about five minutes to change the scenery for the second act, during which time more music from "Faust" is played on the phonograph. Then comes a pleasing surprise as the curtain lifts on the cathedral scene. The puppet figure of Marguerite is seen kneeling begore the altar but you do not see her first. Your eyes are riveted on the French Gothic windows stained in various colors and shadings so that they are a fine replica of the real ones. The gothic pillars look real, and guarding the altar is the figure of a madonna, also secured from the mail order house by Rulfs. Faust and Satan enter the cathedral, only the puppet of Faust is now changed to represent his new youth. The conversation, which we all know, passes between the two men after Marguerite goes out. The curtain is rung down on the Cathedral scene too early for one does not tire of looking at the craftsmanship which Rulfs has put into it.

Next comes the garden scene with Marguerite's home in the background. Figures of Marguerite, her sister, Faust and the red one appear in the yard and stroll off in pairs into the adjoining garden.

The fourth act is the dungeon scene with the pile of straw and Rulfs has used skillful lighting to create the atmosphere. It is difficult to work the puppets in this scene, however.

The climax comes in the fifth act when Satan takes Faust down into Hell. Moving mountains along the way, flashes of brilliant real-looking lightning, and the hellish red glow over all in this scene attest to Rulfs' craftsmanship.

Some lines have been cut by Rulfs but the sequence is not destroyed. On the whole, it is a remarkable piece of work and is of absorbing interest.

A glimpse "back stage" to find out how it is all done, bewilders the lawman. There is an endless array of wires, multi-colored bulbs, strings, wires; a piece of blue cloth about the size of a handkerchief which Rulfs says is his sky; the moving mountains in the last act are on an endless chain and turned by a crank; the lightning is produced by flashes of light on a panel which has been cut so that the outlines of the jagged beams of lightning shine through. Each puppet has from four to seven wires on it.

The investigator wonders how one person, Rulfs, can read the lines, move the puppets, shut off the phonograph, operate the lights, and a dozen other things all at the same time. But it is a one-man show if there ever was one, and designed and built by one person also.

Asked how long it took him to make it and what materials he used, Rulfs modestly admits that the cathedral scene required a month for construction and that almost all of the scenery is made of cardboard.

The French gothic windows of the cathedral were stained with intricate care and balance of colors. The madonna and the curtain were the only things which Rulfs purchased, all the other materials in the five sets having been picked up here and there around his home in Wilmington. The bowl for the altar fire, for instance, is the cap of a coca cola bottle.

Rulfs has previously found vent for his interesting hobby by making sets for "The Student Prince," a light opera and others. In "Faust," however, is the first time that he has made use of puppets. "I am mainly interested," he said, "in lighting effects and stage sets, as you see. The puppets aren't much, but they put life on my stage."

Following entreaties, Rulfs said that he would consider producing his "Faust" before classes in the dramatic department of the University sometime in the future.

Memorial Hall Closed Pending State Examiners' Inspection

Business Manager Woollen States That Building Will Be Closed Until Repairs Are Made.

$25,000 FOR REPAIRS

Three state engineers, under the direction of Sherwood Brockwell, state building inspector, are making an extensive examination of Memorial hall. The examination will be more than a week in its completion, at the end of which time a detailed report on the findings of the engineers will be released. The 1927 state legislature appropriated $25,000 for repairs and improvements on the building, and the investigation is being held in order to determine what repairs are necessary. The building is closed while the examination is under way.

Charles T. Woollen, business manager of the University, issued the following statement concerning Memorial hall:

"Some days ago it was decided to undertake certain repairs to the roof structure of Memorial hall. While this was going forward it was decided that it was a convenient time to undertake a thorough examination of the entire structure, which has been standing for 50 years, and the construction of which is of heavy timbers throughout with no steel reinforcements. This examination and the necessary checks and observations will require some weeks. In the meantime, there can naturally be no use of the structure, and it has therefore been closed for all purposes while the examination is going on."

Harland Talks About Greek Architecture At Engineer Meeting

J. P. Harland, professor of archeology, spoke to the University student branch of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers at its regular meeting held Thursday evening.

The subject of Professor Harland's talk was "Problems in Greek architecture," and it was illustrated by lantern slides. During the course of his talk Mr. Harland explained the methods of construction used in Greek architecture and showed how the principles of mechanics and physics were used in their design.

An interesting part of the talk was that showing how structure steel, thought to be a modern detail of construction, was used in making the ancient masterpieces.

The accuracy of the Grecian architects and the caution with which the structures now considered masterpieces of architecture were built were explained.

After the talk Professor George F. Bason, head of the department of electrical engineering, spoke briefly, urging the students to develop contacts with practicing engineers early in their work. He also urged the students to learn to become engineers by becoming affiliated with the engineering societies and taking part in the meetings.

REV. ROZZELLE ATTENDS EXERCISES AT KINSTON

The Reverend C. E. Rozzelle, pastor of the local Methodist church, is at present attending the North Carolina annual Methodist conference which is meeting at Kinston from October 29 to November 3. This Conference, which comprises the eastern half of the state is presided over by Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon. Other delegates to the conference from Chapel Hill are J. G. Philips, student pastor of the local church, and Dr. L. R. Wilson, chairman of the board of stewards. Mr. Rozzelle will return to take charge of the regular services Sunday.

HENDERSON SAYS BERNARD SHAW IS GREAT DRAMATIST

Article In Forum Entitled "Is Bernard Shaw a Dramatist?" Written By University Professor.

In the November number of Forum there appears an article by Dr. Archibald Henderson. It is a novel form of debate and the question is, "Is George Bernard Shaw a dramatist?" The debate is in form of two letters, the first from Dr. Henderson to Shaw, and the second from Shaw to Henderson. This article is one of the main features of this number, being placed first in order.

In his letter to Shaw, Dr. Henderson reminds Shaw that for the last twenty-five years scholars have said that he (Shaw) was no dramatist and that one William Archer, who bore the responsibility of producing him as a dramatist, asserted that Shaw had no specific talent for playwriting. Archer, back in the eighties, supplied Shaw with an elaborate plot and dared him to do his worst. The play was to be called "Rheingold." Some weeks later he heard from Shaw who wrote, "I've used up all your plot and have written only one-half the first act. Please send me some more by return mail." Archer says that he saw then that Shaw was hopeless. He had merely written a lot of clever dialogue about everything and nothing in particular, as he writes all of his plays.

Dr. Henderson says that Shaw employs his diabolical ingenuity in throwing the reader off the track by labeling his fantastic concoctions not plays, but conversations, arguments, discussions and the like. Of his criticism of Shaw Dr. Henderson writes, "In spite of my friendship for Shaw I have always kept my critical faculty intact. His witty blandishments have never lulled to slumber my unerring sense of dramatic values and my fidelity to classic principles. Aristotle, my master, would never have sanctioned Shaw, who has consistently flouted classics standard and jeered at traditions, especially the glorious traditions of the French stage. Such levity is unforgivable."

Dr. Henderson pictures Shaw's plays and criticises them and at the end of his letter says that he does not hesitate to pronounce Shaw to be the greatest living dramatist.

Chace And Foerster Write For Magazine

Featuring the third issue of the Carolina Magazine which will appear tomorrow is an article, "Mencken and Sherman," by Professor Norman Foerster of the department of English of this University. Richard A. Chace has written a critical appreciation of poetry entitled "In Defence of Poetry". There are short stories by Jay Curtis and Philip DeVilbiss, and poems by Dorothy Mumford, Richard A. Chace, and Philip DeVilbiss. J. J. Slade, Jr. has contributed the third of the series of four articles which he is writing for the Magazine, "Universal Finitude."

The Carolina Magazine appears two Sundays each month and is contributed to by the students of the University.

PLAYERS PRESENT RECITAL TONIGHT

Henry Lawrence Southwick, Noted Dramatic Interpreter, Will Appear At Methodist Church.

Henry Lawrence Southwick, noted dramatic interpreter, will give a dramatic recital of Shakespeare's King Richard, The Third, at the auditorium of the Methodist church at 8:30 tonight. Mr. Southwick is brought to the University by the Carolina Playmakers, appearing as the second program in their regular season bill.

Mr. Southwick is a prominent and brilliant figure on the lyceum platform, being known particularly for his interpretations of Shakespeare. Of his appearance in Atlanta, where he gave King Lear, the Atlanta reviewer said: "So distinct and so realistic was Mr. Southwick's presentation that every one was promptly under the spell of a story doubly profound in its significance. All this Mr. Southwick developed single-handed with a perfection surpassed only by the lamented Mantel with the aid of stage paraphernalia and expert actors and actresses living the story opposite him."

As a young actor Mr. Southwick went to London as a member of the famous stock company of Austin Daly. At the present time he is president of Emerson college of oratory in Boston.

The auditorium of the Methodist church was offered to meet the emergency caused by the closing of Memorial hall. Seats will be reserved until 8:15 for the 900 holders of season tickets to the Playmaker performances. The remaining seats of the large auditorium will be open to the public free of charge.

Pay For Rides With Knowledge Suggests Editor Joe Daniels

"There is nothing wrong with college boys asking for rides about the country," said Hon. Josephus Daniels to his State college Sunday school class at Edenton street Methodist church Sunday, "if they always pay for their rides."

He paused a moment to let his statement sink in, and then continued: "I do not mean that a boy should offer to pay for his life in money as he would a taxi driver. The average college student knows a great many things the average motorist does not know, so why can't he teach the driver something as they travel along?

"Several days ago, as I was returning from a trip to Richmond, I picked up a couple of boys at Wake Forest and brought them over to Raleigh. On the way over I said to one of them: 'I never had a chance to go to college. I always wanted to study psychology. Suppose you tell me about psychology between here and Raleigh.' And"—here Mr. Daniels smiled benignly—"when we got to Raleigh I knew about psychology.

"Several months ago several articles came out in the News and Observer condemning the practice, so common among college students, of 'hitch-hiking.' In my opinion, asking for rides is all right, but only as long as they're paid for."

Lynch Explains Use Compressed Air In East River Tunnel

At the meeting of the William Cain student chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers held Thursday evening, John Lynch, a graduate of the University now connected with the tunnel construction work in New York city, spoke on "Compressed Air Tunneling."

Mr. Lynch's talk was based on his experience during the past two years while working on the new tunnel under the East river of New York.

In his talk Mr. Lynch described the methods used in digging a tunnel in which compressed air is used. The East river tunnel was of this type.

During his talk Mr. Lynch stated that the precision necessary in this work is very great. Angles are checked six times, and all measurements are checked and rechecked. The results of this degree of accuracy was shown by the fact that when the two ends of the tunnel met in the middle of the river, there was a difference of only 3-16 of an inch in line and 3-100 of a foot in elevation of the two parts.

Twenty-eight Dance Officials Elected In Less Than Ten Minutes.

NO OPPOSITION

With less shouting and in considerably less time than was consumed in the nomination of Calvin Coolidge by the Republican National Convention in 1924, the German Club yesterday in Gerrard hall elected leaders, ball managers, and marshalls for the 1929- 1930 dances. George Race, president of the club presided over the meeting and Will Yarborough, assistant secretary, acted as secretary in the absence of Robert Zealy, secretary.

The meeting called for one-thirty began promptly on time. Ten minutes later 28 men had been elected by those present and Gerrard hall was empty. Most of the ten minutes was consumed in reading the groups of men to be elected.

President Race opened the meeting by calling for nominations for a leader and two assistants of the Thanksgiving Dances. Bert Haywood was nominated and elected leader; Julian Palmore and Craig Shelton were elected first and second assistants, respectively. Steve Millender, Art Sickles, and Barron Grier were elected leader and assistants of the Mid-winter dances, respectively.

Following the election of the leaders of the two dances, ball managers and commencement marshalls were elected. The following were elected: Charles Woodard, chief marshall, George Thompson, Charles Skinner, Chauncey Royster, Bill Lindsey, Ike Manning, Paul Gilbert, and Claude Farrell; chief ball manager, Leonard Hole, Jack Calhoun, Archie Allen, Tom Hunter, Phil

University Debate Squad Plan Stimulates Forensic Interest

(By J. C. Williams)

Since its organization in 1927 the University debate squad system has doubled the interest of the student body in forensics—especially intercollegiate debating. This is borne out by the steadily increasing competition for places on the varsity debate teams.

The squad system is something of an innovation in this section. Its strongest point is organization. In the case of the local squad, meetings are held each week from the time that the query for any intercollegiate debate is announced until the tryout for the team. Each meeting takes the form of a general discussion which is led by some faculty member who is a specialist in the particular field with which the query is concerned. The squad is composed entirely of students who are interested in debating. Such a system has been found very effective here in training speakers not only in the fundamentals of delivery but in the fundamentals of argument as well.

A companion class of the debate squad is the debate class, which is a part of the squad. This meets every week throughout the entire three quarters. By virtue of a special arrangement with the department of English, one-half course credit is given to those who attend the lectures and who write one term paper per quarter in addition. Each of these papers relates to some query which has been debated during the particular quarter that it is written. The debate squad as an organization, therefore, has a double purpose: that of training debaters and conducting a course for credit at the same time. This systematic organization in the field of debating is nothing short of an asset.

In 1927 the debate council, which is the forensic governing body, was also organized. This body is composed of two representatives from the student body at large, one representative from each of the two literary societies, and three faculty members. By virtue of the diversified groups represented on the council, the forensic efforts of the literary societies, the student body and the faculty are concentrated into one working organization—the squad. This system represents a very finely developed concentration of effort toward the cause of debating.

One of the big criticisms which is being leveled against intercollegiate debating today is that the debaters themselves are untrained. This is also cited as a cause of poor attendance. The aim of the debate squad is to eliminate this condition by faculty instruction and general discussion in an organized way.

Correspondence Instruction Shows Increased Popularity

That correspondence instruction is no longer an experiment but an assured success is shown by some of the facts revealed by the University of North Carolina Extension Division, and by new correspondence instruction catalog of that Division which has just come from the press.

It is now possible to study any of 150 different University courses by correspondence. Practically all of these courses lead either to the A. B. or B. S. degree or to the advancement of teacher certification credit.

There were 1695 individuals registered for University correspondence work last year. This number represented a total enrollment of approximately 2500, due to the fact that many of the students were registered for more than one course. The enrollment for last year showed a gain over that of previous years.

The records show a high percentage of completions for the courses begun. More than 75 percent of all those beginning courses in the past have completed them. To give some idea of the prodigious amount of work handled by the Bureau of Correspondence Instruction of the Extension Division, it was reported that 42,000 lesson assignments were examined during the school year 1928-29.

A distinct advantage of correspondence instruction is that it is especially adaptable to adult education. Special arrangements are made to meet the requirements of adult students who, for various reasons, desire to continue study without securing academic or professional credit. Any mature person, regardless of previous education, may register as a non-credit student for any of the subjects listed especially for such persons. The Extension Division endeavors to adjust the adult education courses to the individual's needs and interests.

Correspondence instruction offers many unusual advantages, especially to students who are engaged in a full-time position, or teachers who wish additional professional training.

Is Football On The Wane?

Although southern newspapers are giving more space to college football this fall than ever before and attendance at the games will probably set a new all-time record, there are certain indications that the students and players themselves are not as interested in the game as they once were.

Even in the brief three years which we have spent on the University campus, there has been a noticeable decline in undergraduate interest in football—and that in the face of the fact that the record of the team itself has improved vastly each year. Gigantic pep meetings were held frequently until a year or so ago, and excitement was intense before every game. Bonfires and other exhibitions of the Rah-Rah spirit occurred every week-end. But pep meetings have been abandoned this fall because of lack of student interest.

A marked decline of organized cheering has been in evidence, especially this fall when the team is in the midst of the most successful season that it has had in years. Although the cheerleaders have steadily declined in performance since the days of Kike Kiser, responsibility for the gradual disappearance of organized cheering here cannot be entirely laid upon them.

"I don't enjoy playing college football half as much as I expected to," a regular on the Carolina varsity remarked recently. "During my high school days I secured a great deal of pleasure out of the game, but I have learned that college football is almost entirely a monotonous round of drudgery and physical discomfort." Such remarks would have been considered heresy a few years ago.

In the November issue of Harper's appears an article by John R. Tunis in which the conclusion is advanced that college football is definitely on the wane in the east. Mr. Tunis quotes a brilliant tackle on one of the most outstanding teams in the country as saying that "football is like war. It is a necessary evil."

Football in the south is definitely emerging from the Rah-Rah stage and entering the era of Big Business. Huge stadiums have been constructed throughout this section of the country in the past year or two, and the game has been commercialized to a great extent. And with the coming of this new commercial stage, undergraduate interest seems to be gradually changing from an active personal enthusiasm for the game to a latent appreciation of the spectacle presented by the contests. A few years ago the campus was shrouded in gloom for several days after every major football reverse, but such has not been the case during the past year or two.

In all probability football games will continue to be an important phase of college life for many decades, but there are indications that undergraduate interest in the sport has reached its peak at the University. Because of the colorful spectacle afforded by a college football game, the outside public will probably continue to evince keen interest in the sport, but there are indications that the popularity of football is being undermined at its very core. There is some justification for the belief that intellectual and scholastic interests are gradually asserting their rightful place on the University campus, shunting athletics, including football, the king of them all, into a minor role.

Junior-Senior Class Attendance

Theoretically, rare privileges are granted to juniors and seniors of this university in the form of optional class attendance. Yet a defect in the system employed here continues to baffle and embarrass those upperclassmen who make use of it. We refer to the practice of daily roll-calling on junior and senior classes. This alone serves to nullify the aforesaid privilege of optional attendance.

It must be admitted that frequent and unexcused absences, if the attention of the professor be attracted to them, produce a psychological effect which is far from beneficial to the absentee concerned. Regardless of the kind and considerate attitude of an instructor, he cannot grade John Jones' examination paper fairly if he remembers that Jones has missed twenty of his lectures. The contention which the writer wishes to emphasize is that optional class attendance automatically banishes the practice of the daily roll call and, likewise, academic punishment for the mere fact of being absent. Those professors, therefore, who persist in calling the roll daily on junior and senior classes are overstepping the provisions of the system of optional class attendance employed here. As the matter now stands, upperclassmen often receive academic punishment for cutting a few classes, although they are entirely within the bounds of optional class attendance as defined by the dean of the college of liberal arts early in the collegiate year of 1927-28. The inconsistency of such a situation is without a parallel.

If our understanding of the principle of optional class attendance is correct, it recognizes the efficacy of a student's spending some of his classroom hours outside of the classroom. Although the faculty regulation granting optional attendance to upperclassmen recognizes this, there are still quite a number of professors who brand absences as offenses worthy of academic punishment and who persist in calling the roll daily in order to know which students to visit the aforesaid academic punishment on.

On the other hand, the students persist in abusing the privilege. Those juniors and seniors who "cut" an unreasonable number of classes nullify the whole system of optional attendance. Upon observing the habitual absence of a few men day by day, the professor naturally assumes an attitude toward his whole class which is cause of good grades.

Although regular attendance is vital in the case of courses, there are others which soon become a grind. Why should an upperclassman who is surrounded by excellent lectures be forced to confine himself to one class? True it is that the theory of optional class attendance grants him the privilege of alternating courses. But can he do it without making a low grade on some other course because of the mere fact of his absence? The answer is NO.

If we're going to abide by the optional attendance principle for upperclassmen, why call the roll?—J. C. W.

Courteous Bums

Recently, bumming in the vicinity of Chapel Hill has begun to take on that aspect which was so deplored over the state last year. Students of this university have had the reputation of being "gentlemanly bummers" as contrasted with goodly numbers of those whose insolence and disrespect while bumming have called forth more than gentle reprimands. Yet, not so many days ago complaints were made by Chapel Hill citizens that university students, while riding with them to Durham, not only lacked courtesy but were actually insolent and insulting.

Various states have laws regarding bumming. The matter concerning its prohibition in this state was discussed in the newspapers of last year. It is not that all university students continually show disrespect to those with whom they are riding, but that some of them do; and those students who persist in their belief that Chapel Hill citizens and visitors are under obligations to their belifeetaoie obligations to take them wherever they wish to go, and who, consequently, see no necessity for displaying common courtesy, not only lower the chances of other students to obtain rides, but tend to lead people to believe that students of this university are lacking in manners and courtesy.

Initials

V. P. I. may indeed stand for Virginia Polytechnic Institute, but last Saturday there were, perhaps, a goodly number of Techmen who bemoaned the fact that these same initials might just as well stand for "Virginia Pathetic Institute."

By the same process of reasoning in the case of Davidson College, D. C. might well stand for "Defeated by Carolina." Or will this prediction hold true for the coming game?

Our Political Friends

At this point we should like to suggest that some of our campus politicians who are expecting to run in the annual elections next spring get a bit of fall practice by going out for cross country. On rainy days they might get acquainted with dirty work.

A Matter of Importance

Tuesday night the time-honored Di Senate will meet to discuss a very vital issue: "Should co-eds be admitted to all classes?" The campus—and the entire town—awaits with unbounded suspense the sentiment-moulding decision of the senate.

Road to Raleigh Closed

Second Tar Treatment Is Being Given To the Short Route

The road from here to Nelson, which forms a part of the short route to Raleigh, is closed to traffic and will remain closed about two weeks longer. This is to permit the state highway forces to make the second application of tar, supplementing and improving the initial surface treatment which the road received about a year ago.

"But we are going to arrange to let traffic through on days of football games at Chapel Hill," said an official of the highway commission Thursday. Which means that people coming from Raleigh and other points east to see the Carolina-State game today will be able to use the short cut. The method of spreading a new tar surface is such that, when the demand for passage is urgent, part of the width of the road can be left open while the other part is closed.

Detour signs have been posted at junctions here in Chapel Hill to inform travelers bound for the east that they must go the longer way through Durham.

Carolina Meets State In Second Big Five Tilt

TAR HEELS MAY SHOW NEW PLAYS THIS AFTERNOON

Practically Entire Carolina Squad In Shape For Clash In Kenan Stadium; Both Have Victories Over Wake Forest.

Backed by a week of heavy defensive scrimmage, a Tar Heel team boasting full strength for the first time in a month takes the field at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon against State College favorites to win the 36th renewal of their rivalry.

On the outcome of the contest today rests the probable State championship. Neither team has met defeat by a State team, while both turned back Wake Forest. The Tar Heels won 48-0 while the Wolfpack managed to eke out an 8-6 victory.

Fearing a let-up after the victory over V. P. I. last week, Tar Heel mentors scrimmaged their charges for the greater part of the week. Freshman elevens versed in Wolfpack plays have bucked varsity lineups every afternoon during the time.

Satisfied with the new offensive prepared for the Wolfpack, Coach Collins began heavy defensive work Thursday. Defense against passes was stressed as it was shown in the V. P. I. game that the Tar Heels were weak in this department.

In the State camp Gus Tebell and Peck Slaughter worked overtime pointing their charges for today's game. The contest is the most important on the Tech schedule and a win would go a long way to soothe the hurt of defeats earlier in the season.

Following the loss to Michigan State last week, a shakeup was made in the State lineup. Regulars were removed from the first string eleven to make way for more ambitious raw material. The revamped line reads: Gardner and Patterson, ends; Smathers and Lepo, tackles; May and Vann, guards; and Stout, center.

Two Tar Heel veterans are due to remain on the sidelines when the whistle blows for today's game. The regulars, Bill Koenig, left tackle, and Julian Fenner, right-end, will probably see service in the latter stages of the game. Neither have engaged in hard work, during the week, resting while two rookies played in their positions during practice sessions.

An interesting sideline to today's struggle should be the fight between Jimmy Ward and Jim Magner for high scoring honors in the state. Both Ward and Magner have garnered five touchdowns during the first half of the season, and both are in the van for the State title.

Ward, a triple threat and a third-year man, opened the season with a bang, scoring twice on Wake Forest and three times on Maryland. Injuries have held down his scoring since.

Magner, on the other hand, started his string of markers with a 65-yard sprint against the Old Liners. Two touchdowns in the Georgia Tech game one against Georgia and another at V. P. I.'s expense brought his total to five.

1929 Tar Heels

SPORTS EDITOR PICKS WINNERS FOR DAY'S GAMES

Thinks Kentucky and Tennessee Will Remain Undefeated.

(By Joe Eagles)

Today the Tar Heels meet the Wolfpack in the 22nd game played between the two teams in a series which has been going on since 1894. Seasons records show that the Carolina team is perhaps the stronger both on offense and defense. Carolina boasts wins over Georgia Tech, Maryland and other strong teams, and has suffered defeat only once. State, on the contrary, has experienced a bad year. Starting the season with a scarcity of experienced material the Wolfpack has suffered greatly by injuries and other unforseen accidents. To date they have won only one battle, that against Wake Forest, a team which Carolina defeated by a 48 to 0 score. Accordingly there seems little doubt that the Tar Heels will win this afternoon when the two teams battle in Kenan stadium.

The Kentucky-Clemson battle brings together two teams undefeated in southern conference play this year. Each boasts an exceptionally strong team. Kentucky has won decisive victories over Maryville, W. and L., Carson-Newman and Centre. Clemson, on the other hand, has won six games chief of which were those with Davidson, Woffard, and South Carolina. The game this afternoon will be close, undoubtedly. However we venture to predict that Kentucky will score a win by one or two touchdowns. In any event one team will emerge from the battle as a strong contender for the conference crown while the other will have its hopes wrecked.

We also predict: Maryland to win over Virginia; Tennessee to win over Auburn; V. P. I. to win over W. and L.; Florida to win over Harvard.

(By J. C. Eagles)

Whenever Carolina battles State, that game always assumes the headline on the grid slate in North Carolina. This Saturday's game will be no exception.

The game this week-end will be the 22nd between the two schools. Regardless of the comparative strengths of the teams, the games have always proved hard fought battles, often surprising the dopesters who had picked one of the elevens to overwhelm the other without any trouble. This fall, although Gus Tebell has little to boast about on his team's early season showing, and it is generally conceded that Coach Collins has, there is still the chance that an upset may occur. Witness the game last year. The Tar Heels were admittedly the stronger team and were doped to win, yet they were exceedingly lucky to tie the game. Just another instance where the unexpected happened. State had scored in the first half on a blocked punt. It remained for Maus and Gray to execute a pass on the last play of the game to save the day for the Tar Heels.

This fall the State team has been lacking in punch and has been handicapped by a light line. However, Tebell always has a bunch of tricks and he may spring them again this Saturday. The game will mark the first appearance of the State eleven in Kenan stadium. For the past two seasons the games have been played in Raleigh. The first meeting between State and Carolina football teams was in 1894. That fall the Tar Heels scored two victories by the scores of 44 to 0 and 16 to 0. During the next ten years the State teams were unable to score against Carolina. In 1904, however, they broke through to score one touchdown and tie the game at six all.

Since the beginning of football between the two schools there have been 21 games. Of these Carolina has won 13. Five have resulted in ties and State has won three. From 1905 to 1919 there were no games between the two schools. Since the war games have been played annually. Since the resumption of the series all the games have been marked by exceptionally low scores regardless of the comparative strength of the teams before the battle. The 19 points scored by State in the game year before last is the highest total that has been amassed during this period. The 44 points scored by the Carolina team in the first game ever played between the two teams has never been surpassed.

Cross-country Men Meet State Today

Coach Alexander Redfern will bring his N. C. State harriers to Chapel Hill this afternoon to meet the Tar Heel cross country-men. Both varsity and freshman teams will compete in this meet, the varsity teams running a four-mile course and the freshmen running a three-mile course.

The starting and finishing point for the harriers will be the goal nearest the field house in Kenan stadium. The runners will be started on the south side of the stadium before the first half of the football game is over.

Coach Dale Ranson, Tar Heel mentor, has announced the following varsity lineup for this afternoon's meet: Barkley (captain), Baucom, J. J. Cohen, Lowry, Phoenix, Pierce and Wrenn. Boyce, Purser, Rhodes and Simpson will run with the team, but their scores will not be included in the official score. Jensen (captain), Cordle, Cox, Lewis, Lumpkin, Strikeleather, and Zelly will compose the freshman team.

FROSH HARRIERS ELECT CAPTAIN

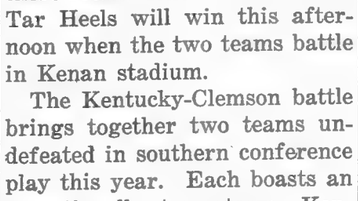
Clarence A. Jensen, former Newark prep star, was elected captain of the freshman cross country team yesterday afternoon. Jensen hails from East Orange, N. J., and while in attendance at Newark Prep he broke many scholastic sprint records.

The new captain of the freshman harriers has the distinction of being all-American scholastic two miler. While running in the eastern interscholastic meet at Newark last year he created the fastest time in the country, covering the distance in 10:05. Jensen also placed second in the American scholastic cross country meet in 1928.

A SUGGESTION TO THE GOVERNOR OF NORTH CAROLINA

Let Him Do Tomorrow as the President Used to Do at the Army-Navy Game

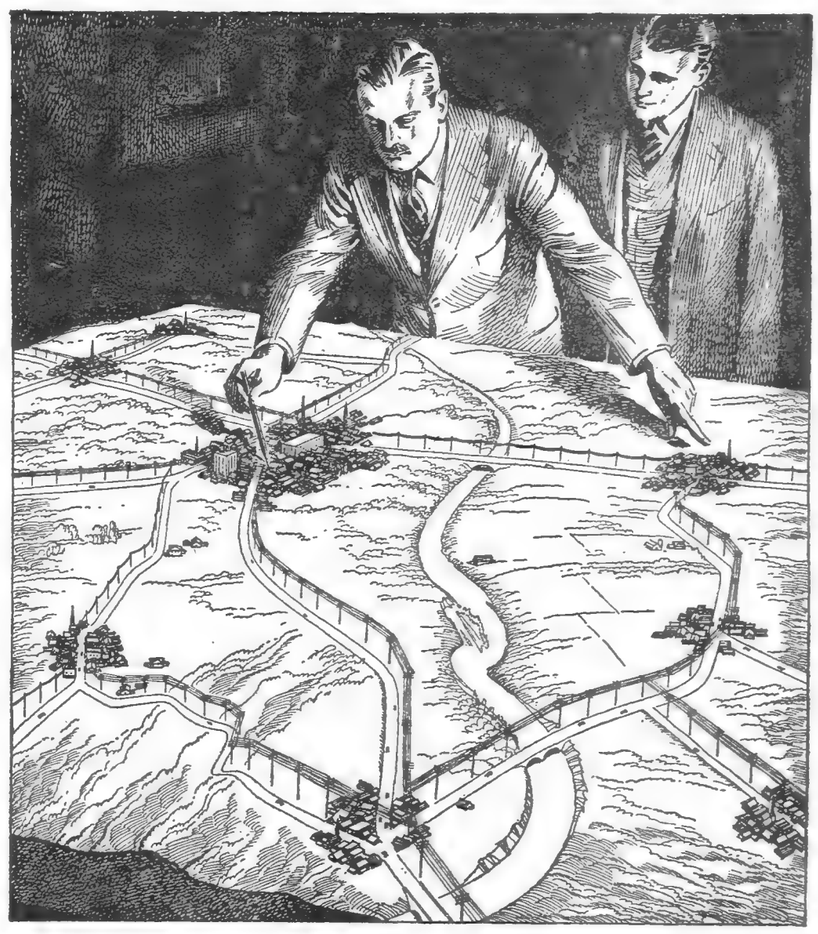
SOLUTION OF A DILEMMA



(From The Chapel Hill Weekly)

"Governor O. Max Gardner finds himself in a dilemma this week," says a despatch to the newspapers from Chapel Hill. He is an alumnus of both the University and the State College. Where will his heart be when he comes to the game here tomorrow between his two almae matres? Which team will he cheer for?

I suggest that the Governor do as the President of the United States does at Army-Navy games. Or, rather as he used to do, for the Army and the Navy, having fallen out over eligibility rules, are not meeting each other on the gridiron now.



The stand on one side of the field was the Army's, and the stand on the other side was the Navy's. The President of the United States sat on one side during the first half and on the other side during the second half. Many a time I have seen the Presidential party — the President, cabinet officers, several wives and daughters, and detectives, with a surrounding fringe of policemen — march across the field between the halves, to the playing of a band and the cheers of the multitude.

Key Town selling
-a new telephone idea

Commercial development men of the Bell System have originated a new use of the telephone which is proving economical and efficient for modern salesmanship. From important central towns the salesman makes periodic visits to customers and prospects by telephone.

To conceive this idea, to make it practical by selecting Key Towns on a basis of most advantageous rates to surrounding points, and to sell it as a business practice—all this illustrates how telephone service is as open as any commodity to constructive imagination.

Key Town selling is one of many indications of the steady demand, present and to come, for more and more telephone service.

"OUR PIONEERING WORK HAS JUST BEGUN"

The Decorative Value of Football

By Mary deB. Graves

The athletes of ancient Greece, no doubt, in the eyes of some art critics could put it all over our present-day football players in respect to costume, which, according to the sculptors, never consisted of anything more than a bit of vegetation, while of course our boys are almost completely covered by bulbous uniforms. But for lovely surroundings even fair Greece could not surpass a contest held in our stadium on a sparkling October afternoon. Grass, sky, and foliage lend charm and color to the white concrete bowl fitted so gracefully into the gentle curves of the valley. Spectators, who individually might not take a prize at a beauty show, collectively make an interesting, harmonious panorama of a myriad hues. And to the modern eye there is even beauty in the trim efficiency of our players' uniforms.

As one sits on the South Stand of the Kenan stadium one sees, through the opening of fifty feet or so between the stands at the western end, a delightfully sylvan vista of pine trees. As evening advances long, smooth shadows also advance upon the green surface of the field until one looks over these to a sunny spot in the woods beyond, which might make a dwelling place for nymphs. Around the field the spectators, forming many blobs of gay colors, send up airy clouds of smoke from hundreds and thousands of cigarettes. These clouds form a blue and lavendar autumnal haze as effective as Nature's own—and of its essence native to Carolina where most of the tobacco is grown for these loyal smokers.

Above the stands in the center soar two slim flag poles, one behind each central box. Behind these, and forming a perfect background, are the pine trees, and above their rich green the bluest of skies across which sails an orange-bodied, silver-winged airplane. At the East end of the stadium, snugly settled on the emerald sward, stands the field house. Only one thinks of sitting rather than standing, for it looks so comfortably ensconced in its nest of green—like a house in a fairy tale. Behind it again we have a beautiful background of soaring pines, perfectly setting off the pinkish tiled roof. From the chimney there rises a spiral of smoke produced by the furnace for heating water for the players, which gives a cozy air of hominess. Beside the cream stucco walls is the stand for colored spectators, who also send up their incense of North Carolina smoke. A peaceful scene, one might almost say.

But there is no peace. Amid wild cheers out trot the players in snappy uniforms. Last year our boys contributed their bit of color with orange jerseys. This year they were not so gaily garbed. Of course, as we have remarked, the Greek uniforms provided by Nature may have been more graceful, but the absolute utility of those of today compare with them as does the automobile compare with the horse. New times, new types of beauty. With their function in mind one can admire the smooth tan leather helmets fitting so snugly the heads they are designed to protect from buffets, the well-padded shoulders, the well-padded breeches — sturdy brown legs are better, however, than striped stockings—and then the shoes so adroitly fashioned to grip the turf. When these admirably armored armies trot out, some lifting their feet like sportive colts, no wonder the stands rise and shout. They are a superb sight. Their beauty thrills the crowd.

And the band. Our band prances out in uniforms of blue and white. The blue is not the pale anaemic shade sometimes used by us, but a vigorous blue with a kick to it, deeper than the blue of the October sky and yet akin to it. The white braid, the caps, are jauntily worn by all the young men, but best of all is the drum major with his slim figure, and his snappy strut. As his silver baton catches the sunlight, his crested head reared high, he is as wonderful as a Russian dancer.

In this scene of variegated movement and color each onlooker may find some particular aspect most charming, depending upon his point of view. To the undergraduate no doubt the accompanying flapper is the piece de resistance; to the proud papa, clamping his cigar and leaning forward resting on his baywindow, the substituting son enveloped in a blanket on the players' bench; to the Chapel Hill mother the little boy in khaki knickers scampering out on the West end of the field beyond the goal posts, where he and his kind gambol and frolic like puppies, seeing none of the plays yet imagining they are football fans. Any mother can safely let her eyes keep track of her youngster as he nimbly scales the wall separating the field from the spectators, flies up the steps, or attempts to climb the flagpole, since the absolutely fool-proof announcing system has been installed. She may even plan her Thanksgiving dinner while her ears take in the fact that Rothstein is everywhere, or that the last forward pass has been intercepted. If her ears by chance fail she is saved by a quick glance at the score board.

Gone forever is one feature of the old football—the masculine smile of superiority. The wise and the dumb are now on an equal footing. The amplifying trumpets, gracefully shaped and clustered on a tall pole high above one's head in front of the stands, emit sounds which suggest mightily the voice of Jupiter. As it thunders on and on, giving clearly minute and precise details of the plays, one wonders at times if it is really better to be wise than simple. There was something mentally restful about the old way of sitting like a lizard, sunning yourself with the peace of your somewhat fogged mind, only occasionally disturbed by a few tart explanations from an escort. Now even the clingingest vine cannot think up a question to ask her Brave, for, no matter how much of a real he man he is, he knows no more about what is going on down there on the grass than she does. And, as though the flow of exact information from the trumpets in the sky were not enough, there emerges the Jovian admonition: "Let's have quiet in the stands—quiet please!" Surely nobody but an Olympian would dare make such a suggestion with the ball on the five-yard line and three downs to go. Well, times do change and maybe the gods are coming into their own again.

There is another difference in the great game noticeable to the flapper of an earlier era, and that is the scarcity of bouquets adorning the feminine forms. years ago at the Army-Navy games violets and chrysanthemums were on sale everywhere among the crowd, and we felt as bereft of proper attire as Eve if our attendants did not see to it that we had at least one huge golden crysanthemum or an equally mammoth bunch of violets. In Northern climes fur coats have always predominated, but here if one sees a student in a shaggy fur coat it is a shock; and squirrel, mole or lynx on a woman is the mark of a Spartan nature able to endure torture for the sake of vanity, for the sun shines brightly and sometimes early in the season stout ladies in silk dresses adhere to the concrete.

Carping critics have made sharp comments on the modern trend from the classics to athletics. They say that when alumni with fat pocketbooks and paunches foregather it is not for the purpose of discussing the latest post-graduate scientific courses, or the size of the medical laboratory, but that the tie that binds these earnest spirits is to see Smith put in as fullback, or to secure a coach who can guarantee a successful season on the gridiron. The highbrows discern nothing in this zeal for athletics but materialism. The thought arises, however, that perhaps after all there is a craving for beauty and color in the lives of these doctors, lawyers and manufacturers, unsuspected even by themselves, which is satisfied by the spectacle of a football game, played by perfectly formed youths in a beautiful stadium on a lovely Indian Summer day. Perhaps when loyal Carolinians rise to sing "I'm a Tarheel born, I'm a Tarheel bred, and when I die I'll be a Tarheel dead," they look about them at the "sailing pines," at the simple Grecian symmetry of the stadium, at the incense floating up from the Golden Leaf that has made many of them rich, and they become not merely sport fans but in reality true worshippers of Beauty singing its hymn of praise.

BOYHOOD DREAM COMES TRUE FOR RICHARD DIX

Thirteen years ago a boy saw the stage play "The Boomerang" ten times. Then an ambition was born to play the lead in that play. That boy was Richard Dix, the place was New York. That boy's dream has now materialized, in Hollywood, where he has just completed the all-talking Paramount picture "The Love Doctor," the screen name of the stage play.

"The Love Doctor," like its stage predecessor, is a farce comedy of a promising young society doctor who is a very confirmed bachelor yet gives all his friends advice on their love affairs. His first patient is a young social scion whose love left him as soon as their engagement was announced. His mother, fearing for his health, brought him to "The Love Doctor" who decided that some good advice and a rest was all he needed. The young chap was bundled off to the country with a beautiful nurse, who was secretly in love with the doctor.

"Then, what are you all puffed up over?"

President Says University Largely Self-Help In Reply To Carnegie Survey Report

Statement That Coach Has Assumed Duties of Physical Education Director Due to "Misconception."

COPY BULLETIN 23 IS RECEIVED HERE

With the receipt at the University of the full Carnegie report on college athletics last week instead of in December as the newspapers had previously announced, President Chase yesterday issued his first statement on the report.

"A misconception is responsible for the statement that the head coach has assumed the authority of the director of physical education," said Dr. Chase's statement in part. "This is not the correct state of affairs here.

"Since Carolina is largely a self-selp institution," President Chase continued, "many students work their way through. No preference, however, is shown to athletes in the distribution of self-help opportunities, scholarships, or loan funds." Dr. Chase said the University would rather risk an occasional injustice than exclude athletes entirely from scholarships, loan funds, and the like.

Dr. Chase has only glanced over the bulletin, which has raised many problems about the present state of college athletics in America. It contains so much matter that more leisurely reading is necessary to digest it thoroughly.

Only two copies of the report have arrived at the University: one is Dr. Chase's private copy, and the other will be placed in the education library Monday. Many students who have expressed a desire to read the report will be able to obtain it there. A copy of the bulletin may be obtained, free of charge, from the Carnegie foundation for the advancement of teaching, 522 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Dr. Chase's statement in full is as follows:

"The bulletin of the Carnegie foundation on college athletics has now been distributed. From a hasty reading of its nearly four hundred pages, the following facts stand out. First, the later Associated Press dispatches were correct in stating that the University of North Carolina is mentioned only three times. It is commended for the form of its athletic control and for the keeping of its athletic records and accounts. The third mention states that the head coach seems to have assumed an au-

Dr. Wilson Meets Carnegie Library Group in New York

Dr. Louis R. Wilson, University librarian, has gone to New York to attend a meeting of the advisory group of college librarians of the Carnegie Corporation.

Dr. Wilson is playing an increasingly important part in the library activities of the South. He was recently elected president of the North Carolina Library association for the third time. He has also served one term as president of the Southeastern Library association, which he was instrumental in founding.

Dr. Wilson will return Monday.

President Chase

Dr. Harry W. Chase, president of the University, issued his first statement yesterday since the publication of the Carnegie Survey Report on Intercollegiate Athletics. Dr. Chase declared that he saw no reason for discriminating against a man because he was an athlete in the awarding of scholarships.

N. C. To Beautify The Davis Highway

$1,600 To Be Spent; Red and White Crepe Myrtle Trees To Be Planted.

Plans are now underway for the expenditure of the $1600 fund recently authorized by the state division of the Daughters of the Confederacy for the beautification of the North Carolina section of the Jefferson Davis highway, it was announced here today by Mrs. John H. Anderson of Chapel Hill, state director of the highway.

The Jefferson Davis highway passes from the National Capital through the most beautiful and historic sections of this state and on to the Pacific coast. The states traversed by this road have recently been vieing with each other in beautifying the highway.

The North Carolina division of the United Daughters of the Confederacy plans to make the section of the road that passes through this state one of the most beautiful and renowned highways of the country. It is their aim to plant red and white crepe myrtle trees along the way and to encourage farmers to compete in making the section of the road adjoining their property more beautiful.

Special attention will be paid to the beautification of the large granite markers placed at the boundaries of the state as well as to the improvement of these smaller markers along the highway.

This program is in keeping with the policy of other states to emphasize their routes by marking the historic spots thru which the highway passes.

North Carolina was the first state to place permanent markers along her entire route, and it is now the plan of this state's division of the United Daughters of the Confederacy to make this the first state to beautify its entire section of the highway.

There was some trouble in securing a commencement orator for the graduation exercises in 1870.

Traders In This Village Escaped Losses In Panic

The Chapel Hill citizens who trade in stocks—most of them, anyway — suffered no serious loss in the recent panic. They got out of the market while the prices were still fairly high.

Very few of them are traders in the Wall Street sense of that word. That is, they do not operate on margin. They buy, outright, stocks that they think are good and hold them primarily for investment; but sometimes, when they read in the newspapers that stock prices have had a big rise, they sell out and reap a good profit.

The stock of the Cities Service Company, which has been bought extensively in this section largely because it has been marketed actively through its subsidiary, the Durham Public Service Company, experienced one of the worst declines in Wall Street last week and this week. It dropped from 68 to 22 in about fifteen days, most of the drop coming between last Thursday and last Tuesday. But many Chapel Hill owners had sold out on the rise. One merchant here sold his holdings at 66, two points from the peak.

Legion Arranges To Present Play On November 10

The Chapel Hill post of the American Legion has arranged to present the famous moving picture play, "The Soul of France," Sunday afternoon and evening, November 10, at the Carolina Theatre in connection with the celebration of Armistice Day. There will be no admission charge, but there will be a free-will offering for the benefit of the fund which the Legion post uses for the relief of the disabled World War veterans.

The presentation of the picture is made by the cooperation of E. Carrington Smith, manager of the Carolina, with the officers of the post. A committee of Legionnaires called upon Mr. Smith and asked for the use of the theatre to present a benefit performance the 10th.

"I will put the theatre at your disposal and try to get you any picture you want," he replied. After a discussion they decided on the stirring war drama which is now drawing large crowds in New York.

Rev. Alfred S. Lawrence, state chaplain of the Legion as well as post chaplain here, will conduct a brief memorial service and make a few minutes' talk before the picture is shown on the afternoon of the 10th. Before the evening performance, which will be timed not to conflict with the church services, Robert B. House is expected to welcome the crowd and say a few words about the post's purpose in presenting the play.

Collins Uses Many Men As Tar Heels Trample State's Wolfpack 32-0

Raleigh Team Outclassed From Beginning; Carolina Line Holds to Keep State From Scoring.

Nash and Erickson Feature With Runs

The North Carolina State Wolfpack slunk back to its lair yesterday humbled and beaten by a strong Tar Heel eleven, 32-0, before 8,000 spectators.

Their claws rendered impotent by a charging line, State fell before a bewildering attack by one of the largest scores in the 36 years of competition. But once during the entire contest did the Tech men threaten the Carolina goal.

The great Tech team of 1927, which defeated Carolina 19-6, and the fighting team of last year, which held a favored Tar Heel eleven to a 6-6 tie, was not in evidence on the field of battle today. Line plays were smothered before well under way, and passes were knocked down or intercepted.

The mixture of straight football and a deceptive passing attack was too much for State. Where a line play failed to gain a pass netted the necessary yards. When a pass threw the line off guard a quick thrust through the middle or a concerted drive off tackle made it first down with ten to go.

Thirty-three players, three full teams, were used by Coach Chuck Collins to win the fray. Every possible substitute on the sidelines saw some service during the afternoon. No combination was favored over any other, and all relentlessly pushed the ball into Tech territory, with a setback here and there, finally to add to the string of markers.

A second string eleven started the contest. After an exchange of punts Carolina took the ball in midfield. A pass Maus to Nash carried the ball to the 17 yard line. Maus shot another bullet-like heave to Brown for the first touchdown.

State received the kickoff on their own 34 yard line. The Carolina line stiffened and State was forced to punt. Nash received the kick on his own 40 yard line and side-stepped through the entire State team for a touchdown. The long run was one of the prettiest broken-

PRESS RELEASES JOHNSON'S BOOK

Author Previously Collaborated With Howard W. Odum In Negro Folk-Lore Works.

"John Henry," a new book by Prof. Guy B. Johnson, who previously collaborated with Prof. Howard W. Odum in "The Negro and His Songs" and "Negro Workaday Songs," is now ready for release by the University of North Carolina Press.

For some time Professor Johnson has been engaged in tracking down a negro legend—the legend of John Henry, the Paul Bunyan of the south, the "natural man" who died "with his hammer in his hand." Was he man or myth? No one really knows. Did he actually win a race with a steam drill while driving steel in Big Ben Tunnel? Maybe.

Whether John Henry lived or whether he was simply the Negro's fabrication of the superhuman hero, the legends about him make fascinating reading, and the ballads that have sprung up about him are some of the richest in Negro lore.

"John Henry is, I suppose," says Professor Johnson, "the Negro's greatest folk character. His fame is sung in every nook and corner of the United States where Negroes live, sung oftenest by wanderers and laborers who could tell three times as much about John Henry as they could about Booker T. Washington."

Aside from the popular interest, Professor Johnson had a special interest in finding whether there is any basis in fact for the legends that have sprung up about John Henry. What was his relation to John Hardy? In his research in this connection this University professor has amassed more evidence about this Paul Bunyan of the South and more versions of rich balladry than have before been brought together.

"I marvel," writes Professor Johnson, "that some new Negroes with an artistic bent do not exploit the wealth of John Henry lore. Here is material for an epic poem, for a play, for an opera, for a Negro symphony.

"Maybe there was no John Henry," concludes the author. "One can easily doubt it. But there is a vivid, fascinating, tragic legend about him which Negro folk have kept alive and have cherished for more than half a century and in so doing they have enriched the culture of America."

And so, while his lineage in reality disputed, his grave unmarked, John Henry's spirit goes marching on.

This Lecture Business

Large classes and so-called "bull" courses have greatly increased the popularity of the lecture system of class instruction in this and other universities. Although there are several advantages which this method affords, there are at the same time several conditions derivative of it which need to be scrutinized very carefully.

Seemingly, the lecture system is based on the assumption that students are unwilling to work. But educational advancement must proceed from the adoption, tentatively at least, of the hypothesis that students can and will work of their own volition.

The chief indictment which can be leveled against the lecture system of teaching is that it tends to force the student into a passive rather than an active attitude. Such a system is apt to be all professor and none student. Furthermore, the student becomes such a receiving mechanism that he is dependent upon the instructor for information. The urge and the desire to investigate gradually dwindles away and is supplanted by a passive attitude of reception.

Perhaps the most undesirable feature of the "spoonfeeding" system lies in the fact that it is antagonistic to the development of initiative. Moreover, the student becomes uncritical of information offered him—the word of the instructor becoming law. From his instructors he finds out what to accept and what not to accept. What is he going to do when he no longer has an instructor? Over against this question consider the fact that he has had no occasion in his lecture courses to investigate matters, the instructor having "dished the material out."

There is something radically wrong when college students are subjected to conditions which make of them little more than stenographers, busily engaged in the business of taking notes from dictating professors. The difficulty here is the fact that students write down the instructor's words without giving any thought as to their meaning.

It is by no means the purpose of this editorial, however, to condemn the lecture system of class instruction. Without a doubt, there are some courses in the curriculum of this university which demand that those who teach them give no time to the opinions of students. In the light of the preceding objections, however, the writer is forced to disagree with those who advocate the unbounded use of the lecture system and is inclined, furthermore, to believe that it enjoys a position of too much prominence here.—J.C.W.

Readers' Opinions

MR. JONES DEFENDS THE ENGLISH DEPARTMENT

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Your editorial of Tuesday with its charge of "unfairness" against the departments conducting comprehensive examinations for juniors and seniors, and particularly mentioning the department of English, seems to me to stand in need of some correction. You state that "juniors and seniors . . . were given no warning in the first and second years here" and consequently do not know "what to expect from these examinations." After the faculty adopted the regulations (June 2, 1928), the Tar Heel carried an account of the regulations; and on p. 75 of the University catalogue a further statement is made that the regulations go into effect with the class receiving degrees in June, 1930. Ample publicity would seem to have been given.

You imply that students majoring in English, "not knowing what to expect, have chosen courses with less of a view to generalization than to specialization in a particular branch of the subject," and state that many students have not read particular authors.

The facts are that ever since the faculty regulation went into effect, majors in English, when registering for courses, have been reminded by the secretary of the department of the comprehensive examination; and that the department has regularly given a course (English 50abc) intended to help students prepare for these examinations. If students have not chosen to follow the advice or elect the course, the responsibility is scarcely that of the department.

If you will consult the letter recently sent out to students majoring in English by the department, you will further discover that, far from insisting on a specialized knowledge of Addison, Johnson, or Fielding, as you seem to imply, the committee in charge of the examinations has laid down broad and general lines of study.

Lastly, you express surprise that the student has had only one or two quarters warning of the comprehensive examination. In view of the facts herein set forth, the letter recently sent out by this department is clearly only the last of a series of warnings given to majors in English.

I do not know what the action of other departments has been, but I wish you would more fully inform yourself of the facts before bringing public charges of unfairness against a particular department of the University.

HOWARD M. JONES.

CONCERNING DEFACING LIBRARY WALLS

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

In Thursday's issue of the Daily Tar Heel one of the assistant editors condemned the practice of "borrowing" books from the library and never returning them. This practice is certainly a bad one; nevertheless there are other habits which are equally as deleterious.

The new library building, less than three months old, is terribly branded with dirty finger prints. The walls of the stairs leading down into the basement from the main corridor look as if the ones using the steps into the basement have not washed their hands in six months. Even the walls along the two stairways on either side of the building are disgraceful too.

Some students are not only guilty of ruining the walls and throwing paper on the floors, but even break the library rules by smoking and then have the audacity to drop the cigarette stumps on the floor.

The library seems to be partly responsible for the dirty walls, because no railings are provided for the stairway patrons. Certainly the library should install them immediately, but during the meantime the students should not show their ill-bred manners by messing up the library.

H. L.

AN ASSISTANT EDITOR IS SET ARIGHT

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I should like to offer a few remarks in criticism of the article in the October 31 Daily Tar Heel under the title, "The University Plane." In that article, the writer seemed to have allowed his enthusiasm to overstep the bounds of his information.

In the first place, when scientific terms appear in popular literature, they are often loosely used, and erroneous impressions are produced. Strictly defined, "Aviation is the art of operating heavier-than-air craft," while "Aeronautics is the science and art pertaining to the flight of air craft." Government and commercial flying schools teach aviation and produce pilots, or trained operators of aircraft. Universities teach Aeronautics, and produce engineers who are competent to design aircraft and advance the "science and art" of aeronautics.

In the second place, this plane, which was presented to the mechanical engineering department by the War department, is condemned and cannot be flown. The only use to which it will be put will be to illustrate certain aerodynamic and structural principles, and it will not be used to "train young Lindberghs." The department of mechanical engineering is desirous of doing everything possible to train engineers in aeronautic and design principles, but has no desire to compete with flying schools in producing "trained operators of aircraft."

AN UNINTELLIGENT PROCEDURE

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

If the captaincy of the football team were left to the hands of the entire student body, who although appreciating good football and enjoying exciting games, can make no claim to knowing football well enough to be played expertly, there would be howls and yells of protest heard from Chapel Hill as far away as Raleigh or Greensboro. It is very possible to carry our imagination just a bit farther and picture a general election to be held for the captaincy of the team. How many students know all the points that must be known before the captain is to be chosen. The answer is obvious.

It does not even require the above example to show how unintelligent it is to have a specialized position, knowledge of which, or even knowledge of the candidates, is known by only very few men, filled by general elections. It is democratic, yes. But certainly not efficient.

There are approximately 30 men whose names appear at the mast-head of the Daily Tar Heel. Which among those eligible is best fitted for the position of editor-in-chief? Who knows? The Publications Union board.

And the position of editor-in-chief should be filled by those men on the board, who are best able to judge. They are responsible. They are recognized. And the most important point is that they are far more competent to decide who is worthy of promotion than 2,000 more or less disinterested men whose knowledge and ability and energy of the Tar Heel men is decidedly nil.

The present method of choosing the editor-in-chief is certainly incompatible with a strong, direct, intelligent editorship. Fortunately the Tar Heel has been more or less successful in having good men at its head but there has been and there will continue to be too much of an opportunity for campus politics to sacrifice the Tar Heel to mere political aims.

STOLEN SLICKERS

To the Editor:

Only a few minutes before the writing of this letter to the student body of this university, I have had a brand new slicker taken from the coat room of the new library. I conscientiously hope I am not making a mistake when I say that the coat was stolen from me. If this slicker was taken by mistake, I will be truly sorry for having written this letter. However, as this is the second raincoat I have lost this quarter from University buildings, I, personally, think I have sufficient grounds for complaint. But this is not a letter to air my own troubles. I know it to be a fact that there have been numerous cases of lost coats this fall.

The only rule of conduct placed on the student body of this noble University is "be a gentleman." Our form of student government and its success has a wide reputation. These acts of stealing from fellow students by some few low-down ungentlemanly students should be stopped, and the most rigorous actions, both in the court of our student body and the criminal court of our state, should be brought against these men, who are not true Carolina men, in order that we may deserve these praises given us as a student body. I know that the bulk of the students is above such acts, and that they wish to stamp out all such degraded actions. By a determined effort, I am sure, these can be broken up and the offenders sufficiently punished. Fellows, lets put a stop to this damnable thievery!

"AN UNLUCKY GUY."

Tar Heel Trackmen Meet Princeton Tigers In Spring

Impressive Schedule for State Champions Arranged by Athletic Authorities; First Bid For Eastern Honors.

The University of North Carolina track team, Southern Conference champions once recently and State champions for the past eight consecutive years, today announced the addition of the Princeton Tigers to an already impressive 1930 schedule.

The first meet announced was a dual affair with Penn State. Scheduling of the Princeton meet is taken to mean that the Tar Heel cindermen, long famous for a great line of distance aces, are ready to tackle the best teams in the land.

Princeton produced one of the East's strongest track outfits last year, including such individual stars as Ben Hodges, who placed second in the high jump at the Olympic games, and Rosner, great half-miler.

Seventy men are working out daily in fall track practice at the New Jersey institution, and all reports indicate the Tigers will present an equally strong and well-rounded team this year.

Exact dates have not yet been announced for either the Penn State or Princeton meets. Both, it is understood, are to be on a home and home basis. The dates, along with the remainder of the Tar Heels' 1930 schedule, are to be announced soon, according to Charles T. Woollen, Graduate Manager of Athletics.

NEIMAN HAS GOOD RECORD IN TRACK

Meets with Penn State and Princeton promise to put the 1930 Tar Heel track team to an acid test, but such outstanding performers as Dave Neiman are mitigating the worries of Coaches Fetzer and Ranson no little bit.

Neiman, as a sophomore, piled up 45 points for the Tar Heels last year, just one point shy of what the best Tar Heel scorer did.

He shattered a University broad jump record of 22 feet 5 inches, better by inches than the then state record, that had stood for 13 years, and showed great promise in the pole vault as well, reaching 11 feet 6 inches consistently.

Neiman placed second in the broad jump in both the state and Southern Conference meets. With his great speed, his activity, and his quickness to respond to tutoring, the coaches expect him to reach new high marks and to be one of the principal mainstays of the Tar Heel team. He is from Charlotte.

The Tar Heels are working hard in fall practice in anticipation of this hard schedule, for the Tar Heels have an enviable record to maintain. They have not lost a dual meet, and have won one Southern Conference and eight state titles in the last eight years. They placed second at the Southern Conference meet last year.

field exhibitions seen on Kenan field this year. The quarter ended with the score 13-0 in favor of Carolina.

Following the kickoff, Coach Collins substituted an entire new eleven. Two passes Ward to Fenner brought the ball to State's 15 yard line. The passes were both in the same place, and good for 35 yards. Slusser shot through right tackle for nine yards. It was first down on the four yard line. House rushed center for the third touchdown. The half ended with the ball in Carolina's possession in midfield.

The superiority of the Tar Heel aggregation over the Tech men was easily apparent. Thirty-two men entered the fray for Carolina during the first session. To the observer there was no visible difference in the different combinations used. State offered enough resistance to make it a football contest, but the Carolina eleven rarely extended itself.

The second half was a repetition of the first half. Once or twice State carried the ball into Carolina territory, but each time the Carolina line held for downs. A State threat was turned back in the last quarter when Carolina repulsed four thrusts on its own four yard line. This was the only time the Tar Heels were called upon to display strength.

Near the end of the third period Erickson intercepted a pass on his own 25 yard line and twisted his way to State's four yard line. Harden carried the ball across for the touchdown.

Intramural Standings

The race for intramural honors in tag football is very close, with several undefeated teams in the lead at present. The marked decrease in the number of forfeits is held by intramural officials to be the reason for the close competition.

Two of the leaders will meet this week. Beta Theta Pi and Zeta Psi will fight it out on Wednesday afternoon. Delta Kappa Epsilon and Pi Kappa Phi both have two games scheduled for the coming week.

Snell Active in Sports

Chester D. Snell has been active in tennis since he went from here to become director of extension at the University of Wisconsin. He and Bruton, a Carolina alumnus now at Wisconsin, won the doubles tournament of the city of Madison this last summer, and Mr. Snell has won two of six tournaments in which he has played since May. He has also found time for fishing, and he writes to a friend here: "On a trip to the northern lakes country we caught eight large wall-eyed pike, some pickerel, and all the perch we wanted. As soon as I get fully on to the art of casting we are going after the muskies, which have to be over 30 inches long before they can be taken."

60 Yard Run

Taking one of State's punts on his own forty yard line, Strud Nash, halfback, exhibited one of the neatest bits of running seen in Kenan stadium this year in returning the punt for a touchdown. Half a dozen State tacklers had their hands on him but none seemed able to hold him.

TAR HEELS MEET GAMECOCKS NEXT

Battle Of Carolinas To Be Played In Columbia; Palmetto Team Has Won Only Two Games In 17 Game Series.

The annual "Battle of the Carolinas," when North Carolina "Republicans" will renew their quarter-century grid feud with the South Carolina "Democrats," is carded for the Gamecocks' stadium in Columbia, S. C., next Saturday.

The Tar Heels displayed drive and flash against N. C. State yesterday, and with South Carolina showing great power against Citadel, conquerors of the Oglethorpe team that beat Georgia, prospects are for a hard, close battle.

The series history is a different story, for the Tar Heels hold a lop-sided edge of 12 victories to two losses and three ties, one of which was last year's scoreless affair. The Tar Heels also hold a wide edge on points scored, having countered 236 points for the series to the Gamecocks' 46.

The two teams held their first meeting in 1903, and it took the Gamecocks 21 years to win a game, with just two tie scraps in between. The Tar Heels won the first five games by margins of from three to five touchdowns, with South Carolina registering its first score in the 27 to 6 game of 1910.

The first of three tied battles came in 1912 when each team pushed over one touchdown, but the Tar Heels won in 1913 and 1914, with the latter victory counting a 48 to 0 margin.

Since resumption of the rivalry after the World War, North Carolina has won five, lost two, and tied two games. These figures show the series is waxing warmer. The close scores show the same thing. Even the famous 1922 Tar Heels, undefeated South Atlantic champions, barely nosed out the Gamecocks 10 to 7 in a game featured by Snipes' 67-yard run for South Carolina.

Bill Dodderer, fleet end and great Tar Heel basketball star, recovered a blocked kick and ran 20 yards for a North Carolina touchdown and a 6 to 0 win in 1925. Tom Young, Tar Heel halfback, did the same thing to give North Carolina a victory the next year. The Tar Heels lost 14 to 6 in Columbia in 1927, and last year's game, played on a mud-soaked Kenan field here, ended in a scoreless tie.

Furnishes Big Thrill

Chuck Erickson, halfback, has the knack of furnishing big thrills in football games. Yesterday he intercepted a State pass and ran 70 yards before being pulled down on State's four yard mark. He is one of the fastest men in the Carolina group of halfbacks.

HARRIERS ROMP OVER WOLFPACK IN EASY STYLE

Jensen Leads Freshmen to 17-39 Win; Five Varsity Men Join Hands As They Finish.

With five Carolina men breaking the tape at the same time, the Tar Heel varsity cross country team defeated Coach Alex Redfern's N. C. State proteges at Kenan stadium yesterday afternoon, scoring the lowest possible number of points. Clarence Jensen, freshman captain, also led his team to an overwhelming victory over the State freshmen, breaking the tape more than a hundred yards ahead of the nearest man.

Barkley, Baucom, Pierce, Wrenn and Phoenix of Carolina, coming in together, covered the distance of four miles in 22:24. Redfern and Alexander of State followed these men, with Cohen of Carolina not far behind. In the freshman meet, Jensen of Carolina, first to cross the line, was followed by Cox and Cordle, also of Carolina. Troutman of State came in fourth and closely behind him were Lumpkin and Zelley. Jensen's time in covering the three mile course was 18:54.

The final score for the varsity teams was Carolina 15, State 45. The score for the freshmen was Carolina 17, State 37.

Lowry, varsity harrier, was unable to run in yesterday's meet because of an abscessed tooth. However, he is expected to be in good shape for the meet with Duke, which is scheduled to be held next Friday, November 8.

Conference Plan Of Study Called Success At Rollins

Winter Park, Fla. (Special)—The Rollins College Conference Plan of Study, which President Hamilton Holt, former editor of "The Independent," likes to call "An adventure in new-fangled education," was inaugurated at the Winter Park college four years ago and has been a success from the viewpoints of both the students and the faculty.

One purpose of the Rollins system is to bring the students and professor into closer contact.

"The chief besetting sin of our modern colleges," according to President Holt, "is the lack of human contact between professors and students.

"When I left college and entered my professional career as a magazine editor, I was profoundly impressed to find that my colleagues in the editorial room, who never thought of teaching me anything, taught me everything; while my professors at the university, who were paid to teach me, had taught me almost nothing. Yet my fellow workers in journalism and my professors in college were the same type of men—that is the members of each group were older, abler, and nobler than myself: they were socialists in their own fields, as I was not; they were leading the intellectual life on a high moral plane. As I pondered over this paradox, the explanation seemed perfectly clear to me. With my business associates I worked elbow to elbow, desk to desk, eight hours a day, six days a week. Our relationship was constant, continuous, cooperative democratic, friendly and human. With my instructors at the university, however, I had no relationship except in the most formal and forbidding way. When I was with them, under both the recitation system at Yale and the lecture system at Columbia, they were active and I was passive. Did anybody ever get an education by being a sponge?

DR. HAMILTON HOLT

"I have tried to solve the problem of bringing the teacher and taught together by abolishing both the recitation and the lecture systems in toto, and establishing in their place the so-called 'Two-Hour Conference Plan.' This proposal has for its purpose, and hopes to effect, continuous consultation and cooperation between teacher and student. The theory behind this innovation is that the student's mind is immature, that frequently he does not know how to study, and that he most needs the professor when he is preparing his lesson and not after he has learned or failed to learn it.

"Thus the maximum impact of the instructor's personality will be exerted on the student's mind at the time when it is most needed. This does not mean, of course, that the teacher solves every difficulty when the student gets stuck. Only a foolish teacher would do that. It does mean that someone will be at hand ready to aid the student when aid is necessary. And it means that the waste of unsupervised time for which student life has become notorious will be largely eliminated."

FAMOUS DRUMMER WILL APPEAR WITH MARINES

Wilbur D. Kieffer, America's foremost performer on the drums and xylophones, started his musical career as a member of the G. A. R. Fife and Drum corps of Lancaster, Pa. From this early experience, Mr. Keiffer gained a lot of "drum lore" that it is interesting to note.

"The old-time fife and drum corps," says Mr. Kieffer, "serves in the place of the modern military band. There were no bugles—hence no bugle calls—all calls and orders were played on the drum. The old-time regimental drummer had to know his stuff. In a way, he was something of a commander. A certain roll of his drum got the men up in the morning—a certain roll told them when to eat—a certain beat sent them into battle—or to bed.

"There really wasn't much place for a general in the days of the old-time regimental drummer," added Mr. Kieffer with a smile.

Mr. Kieffer will be heard with the United States Marine band when that organization visits the University.

N. Y. Times Reviewer Praises Wolfe's Book

The New York Times publishes a review by Margaret Wallace praising Tom Wolf's novel, Look Homeward, Angel, as "a book of great drive and vigor, of profound originality, of rich and variant color."

"Its material is the material of every-day life," writes Miss Wallace, "its scene is a small provincial Southern city, its characters are the ordinary persons who come and go in our daily lives. Yet the color of the book is not borrowed; it is native and essential. Mr. Wolfe has a very great gift—the ability to find in simple events and in humble, unpromising lives the whole meaning and poetry of human existence. He reveals to us facets of observation and depths of reality hitherto unsuspected, but he does so without outraging our notions of truth and order. His revelations do not startle. We come upon them, instead, with an almost electric sense of recognition.

"Look Homeward, Angel, is as interesting and powerful a book as has ever been made out of the drab circumstances of provincial American life. It is at once enormously sensuous, full of the joy and gusto of life, and shrinkingly sensitive, torn with revulsion and disgust. Mr. Wolfe's style is sprawling, fecund, subtly rhythmic and amazingly vital. He twists language masterfully to his own uses, heeding neither the decency of a word nor its licensed existence, so long as he secures his sought for and instantaneous effect. Assuredly, this is a book to be savored slowly and reread, and the final decision upon it, in all probability, rests with another generation than ours."

President Says U. N. C. Largely Self Help In Carnegie Survey Reply

thority vested theoretically in a director of physical education. This statement is due to some sort of misconception, as it does not correctly represent the state of affairs either at the time the report was made, or now.

"So much for specific references. The bulletin further publishes a list of twenty-eight institutions in the United States and Canada in which its investigators found no evidence that athletes were subsidized. The University of North Carolina does not appear in that list, and so by implication is grouped with some eighty other colleges and universities studied as in some way offending at the time the report was made. No evidence of any sort is given.

"The situation, it seems to me, is about as follows: The University of North Carolina is, to an unusual degree, a self-help institution. Hundreds of its students are working all or a part of their way through college. In extending its opportunities to such students, it is the policy of the University to attempt to make no distinction between athletes and non-athletes. It has no scholarships reserved for athletes; its scholarships are granted, after careful study, on the basis of worth and financial need, and are withdrawn from students not making at least a C average. Its loan funds are available to all alike, and are administered without the slightest discrimination, and are in every case protected by responsible endorsers.

"Of its self-help opportunities there are many, and some of the most productive and worthwhile ones are those from which athletes are excluded on account of their schedules. There are, on the other hand, other types of self-help work in which, from their own interests, connections, and schedules, they are likely to find more opportunities than non-athletes. The whole point is whether these men are treated as self-help students whose problem is complicated by the fact that they are playing on teams, or as athletes to be found soft jobs irrespective of services rendered, class standing and University duties performed.

"The University tries to take the former attitude. Unquestionably, there will, under such a system, exist from time to time what some one has called "soft spots." They ought not to exist; they ought to be eliminated where and if they do exist. But, for my part, I would rather risk an occasional injustice in the complicated task of holding the balance even than to take the easy way recommended by some of excluding athletes from scholarships, loan funds and self-help opportunities altogether. That road seems to me to lead in a direction that no institution that tries to keep the democratic spirit alive cares to travel.

"There remain three vexed questions, all applying to institutions in general. First, what is legitimate and what not with regard to financial aid from outside sources? Alumni and friends of any institution constantly help needy students through college. Should a man receiving any such assistance be automatically excluded from playing on a team, should there be an attempt to judge each such case on its merits and get at its motives, or should there be no difference made in this respect between athletes and non-athletes?

"Second, what is legitimate and what not in presenting the opportunities of any given institution to high and preparatory school students? The present practices, in this part of the country, at any rate, are, as concern promising athletes, open to serious objections, and can be discarded only by the cooperative action of all institutions.

"Third, how far is the present American practice of inter-collegiate athletics, as revealed in the bulletin, healthy and permanent? Such are some of the larger questions which inevitably occur to one who runs through the important report."

There will be a meeting of the Red Cross at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening in the Episcopal parish house. Everybody interested in work of the Red Cross is invited.

UNIVERSITY MEN TO SPEAK BEFORE WELFARE MEET

Dr. Harry Crane "Mental Factors of Particular Importance For Juvenile Court Consideration."

From the office of George H. Lawrence, Superintendent of Public Welfare of Orange County, comes this announcement and invitation concerning the 1929 meeting of the Central District Welfare Conference: "Mrs. W. B. Waddill and the people of Vance County have kindly arranged for the annual meeting of the Central District Welfare Conference to be held at Henderson on Wednesday, November 6th.

"This conference will center on the subject of Juvenile Courts. We have arranged a program to include talks by specialists in some of the important phases of Juvenile Court work; there will be ample opportunity for discussion.

"The meetings are open to all persons interested and should you know of some other persons who would care to attend please by all means urge them to do so. We are of course hoping that you will be able to come yourself."

Several men connected with departments of the University will be on the speaking program. While the program is in charge of Mr. Lawrence, president of the organization, Mrs. T. B. Davis, also of Chapel Hill, is secretary of the Association.

Dr. Roy M. Brown, who is the first of the University speakers on the program, will give a 15 minutes discussion of "Juvenile Court Law in Operation." He will be followed directly by Dr. Wiley B. Sanders, speaking on "The Juvenile Court in Operation." Both of these men are connected with the School of Public Welfare.

Directly after the luncheon, one of the features of the meeting, Dr. Harry W. Crane, of the State Department of Public Welfare and the University Department of Psychology, will discuss "Mental Factors of Particular Importance for Juvenile Consideration."

Debaters To Meet South Carolinians

The debate council announces that arrangements have been completed for a single debate with the University of South Carolina at Columbia on the night of December 13. The Carolina debaters will uphold the negative side of "Resolved, that the United States should advocate the disarmament of all armed forces, except those which are needed for police purposes."

Arrangements are nearing completion for a triangular debate between Carolina, Wake Forest and N. C. State on this same question. In this case Carolina will be represented in Chapel Hill by an affirmative team and in Raleigh by a negative aggregation. The triangular debate is expected to take place about December 12.

Tryouts will be held in 201 Murphey hall on the night of November 21. Rules of the debate squad will determine the eligibility of candidates; that is, only those who are members of the debate squad and who have attended the weekly meetings pertaining to the query to be debated will be eligible to compete for positions on the teams.

Old "Tin Can" To Be Remodeled And a Modern Heating Plant Installed; Temporary Stage For Concerts.

NEW NAME IS NECESSARY

(By Chas. G. Rose, Jr.)

The "Tin-Can" is to be modernized!

It is hard to think that the old icy cold "Can" of the past years is to have a really modern heating system. Yet no matter how hard it is to imagine, it is true just the same.

A heating system is being installed which will make the "Can" a more useful place. Then too there will be a place for a temporary stage in case of concerts and performances.

It will be necessary that another name be gotten for the old place, because heretofore when the name "Tin-Can" was mentioned everybody thought of chattering teeth, three overcoats, extra gloves, and everything else that goes to make for comfort in the North Pole. He felt a cold chill run up his spine as the name "Tin-Can" was brought up. For he, if he has ever been in the "Can" well remembers the cold evenings that he has spent there, the hundred colds that were caught there, and the numerous quarts that were emptied in an effort to keep warm.

This year, however, the name "Tin-Can" will carry a different meaning. A place of comfort warmth, an auditorium, enjoyable "box" parties, and all other such things will flash through one's mind when he hears the word "Tin-Can." Basket-ball fans will enjoy the games more, concert and entertainment lovers will begin to patronize the place more. For besides the games and track meets there will be many concerts, entertainments and other attractions held in the "Can."

The first concert to be given in the "New Can" will be given Thursday night Nov. 14. Then the U. S. Marine Band, one of the oldest and the best bands in the country, will be the opening feature of the modern "Can." From 800 to 1000 chairs will be placed in the basket-ball playing court, and also a temporary stage will be put up.

All the upper-classmen will be able to appreciate this new modern convenience. It will make the old "Tin-Can" a different place. Whereas heretofore there were nothing but games and track meets held there, now it can be used as an auditorium with all modern equipment and heating system.

Third Initiation Meeting Tonight

The Dialectic senate will hold its third initiation of the quarter tonight in the Di hall at 7:15. Several men who were elected to membership at the last meeting will be initiated along with the new candidates.

After the meeting the entire senate will participate in a smoker.

Meyer Will Present Eagle Scout Badges

H. D. Meyer of the department of sociology will leave this afternoon for Goldsboro where he will present an address before a special community meeting called for the purpose of awarding Eagle Scout badges to five boys of the city.

FRESHMEN MUST ATTEND CHAPEL

No Excuses For Absences; Sophomores Are Not Required To Be Present Until Monday.

The first chapel exercises, since the closing of Memorial hall, will be held today in Gerrard hall, according to an announcement made by Dean Bradshaw. The half of the freshman class which attends chapel today will also attend on Thursdays, while the other half will attend on Wednesdays and Fridays. There will be no chapel for the sophomores until Monday, November 11.

Seat assignments have already been mailed out and all freshmen should have received theirs by today. Under the new plan, necessitated by the decision to close Memorial hall, freshmen have to be present at only two chapel exercises a week.

All students who are members of the class of '33 and whose last names begin with a letter between "A" and "K," and as far in "L" as through E. H. Lee, have been assigned to attend chapel on Tuesdays and Thursdays; while those whose last names begin with a letter in the remaining part of the alphabet will attend on Wednesdays and Fridays.

All freshmen, who through some mistake have not received their seat assignments, should call by 205 South this afternoon and make proper arrangements. After today every freshman, except those previously excused, will absolutely be held responsible for his presence in chapel on the day and in the seat designated to him.

Roosevelt Nunn, white, charged with public drunkeness, was fined $5 and costs.

Luther Pendergrass, white, charged with driving while under the influence of liquor, was fined $50 and costs.

Rufus Weaver, negro, was charged with trespassing on lands belonging to Anna Weaver and refusing to leave when ordered. He was fined $10, the costs of court.

Red Cross Meeting

There will be a meeting of the Red Cross tonight at 8 o'clock in the Episcopal parish house to take up the annual roll call and the year's work of the local chapter. All members are invited to attend and bring a friend. A social hour will follow the regular meeting.

LITERATURE SECTION WILL MEET TONIGHT

The literature department of the Community club will meet tonight in the social rooms of the Methodist church at 7:30. Mrs. Margaret Vail Howe will read from Fianz Molnar's plays, "Lilion."

WAGSTAFF SAYS WORLD PEACE IS NOT IN DANGER

Agreements With England Show She Is Willing To Establish Amicable Relations.

World peace can be rescued from the realm of pure fantasy, Dr. H. M. Wagstaff of the history department told the members of the North Carolina Literary and Historical association at its recent meeting in Raleigh.

Dr. Wagstaff in his presidential address on Thursday evening broke a precedent of the association by looking beyond the borders of North Carolina for the subject of his address. "There is not," he said, "a wide enough knowledge of international relations in the United States today, at a time when there is a particular necessity for such a knowledge."

American historians have usually depicted England as an arch-villain, always ready to take advantage of the United States, but he went on to prove that England has been willing to yield her points in order to secure an amicable settlement about twice as often as America has. An example of this placability is in this recent sea supremacy contest, in which England has relinquished her pride, in order to reach an agreement.

"All these agreements," Dr. Wagstaff said, "point to a path of peace. Her relinquishment shows a real courage in excepting a parity agreement and reveal of confidence in America's sense of sportsmanship and fair play."

The other speaker of the association was William Starr Myers, noted lecturer on political and historical subjects, and an alumnus of the University, who spoke on the subject, "Representative Government—Past and Present."

Several interesting papers on historical subjects were read, one of which was written by Guy B. Johnson of Chapel Hill.

Southwick Is Impressive As Dramatic Interpreter

(By John Mebane)

Despite the faulty acoustics in the Methodist Church and the difficulties which those on the back seats experienced in hearing, Henry Lawrence Southwick, noted dramatic interpreter, gave a creditable recital Saturday night of Shakespeare's "King Richard, the Third."

The greatest difficulties in understanding Mr. Southwick were evident during the first part of the recital, but later, as the play itself grew more dramatic and Mr. Southwick slowed his lines a bit, the inability to hear diminished. The only fault of the recital was that Mr. Southwick spoke a bit too fast, hindering the clearness of his enunciation.

Mr. Southwick was free from the fault of so many dramatic interpreters—that of becoming too dramatic. He was eloquent, but he didn't allow himself to overstep the proper bounds of eloquence. The scene of the murder of Clarence and the dream scene of Richard were masterfully interpreted. In the matters of gesture and facial expression Mr. Southwick was very good. Before the recitation in each scene the performer explained briefly what happened and the characters who appeared in them. Before his recitation, he sketched in a delightful manner the historical events which formed the background for the famous tragedy of England's "Fighting King."

While Mr. Southwick didn't quite come up to the standard of E. H. Southern who recited soliloquies from Shakespeare's "Hamlet" and interpreted several other characters here last year, he was well-received by a larger audience than was expected and was given an encore at the completion of the recital.

Mr. Southwick who is president of Emerson College of Orotory at Boston was brought to Chapel Hill by the Carolina Playmakers as the second program on their regular season bill and was introduced by professor Koch. The performer has had many years of experience as an actor and a dramatic interpreter. As a young actor he went to London as a member of the famous stock company of Austin Daly. Since then he has become well known for his interpretations of Shakespearean roles.

Motor Club Drives For Members Here

One of the greatest opportunities ever offered to a self-help student is being presented in a special membership drive launched by the Carolina Motor club, a branch of the American Automobile association. This campaign starts immediately and all those interested should file an application at once.

A very liberal commission is being offered to those students who are willing to devote their spare time to the soliciting of memberships in the Carolina Motor club. A unique feature of this drive is that the inexperienced salesman has a chance to build up a spare time income in an ideal way.

The Carolina Motor club is the largest motor club in the South. This motor club is said to offer more real service and protection to the automobile and the owner than can be obtained anywhere else in the entire United States at the small cost of three cents a day.

As a special inducement bonuses are being offered to energetic workers. All students interested are urged to call on Henry Johnston, Jr., bureau of vocational information, today, and fill out the application blank.

Many Plan To Attend Marine Band Concert

The U. S. Marine band concerts, which will be given November 14, will be a time of many social gatherings. Many parties have already reserved seats for the occasion.

The Tin Can, where the evening concert is to be given, will be thoroughly heated with a new heating system that is being installed. The basketball playing court will be covered with about 1000 chairs which will be sold and reserved at $1.50 each, while the bench seats will sell at $1.

Playmakers Present "Job's Kinfolks" This Week-End

Loretto Carroll Bailey's Three-Act Play Opens Here Thursday Night.

THIRD NUMBER OF SEASON'S PROGRAM

The Carolina Playmakers present Loretta Carroll Bailey's three-act play, "Job's Kinfolks," in the Playmaker theatre, Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights. This is the third number on the regular season program of the Playmakers.

The original one-act version of "Job's Kinfolks" was produced in 1928. "So great was the interest in the production," says the program for the present play, "that the author was prompted to write a sequel, 'Black Water.' Since then the playwright has written two more plays about the same group of characters, really completing a cycle of five short plays. Last summer she wrote the latest version of 'Job's Kinfolks' in three acts, using the earlier plays as a foundation for the longer one."

The New York Times critic wrote of the play, "The piece is extraordinary, both in the originality of the idea, and the courage with which the idea is carried out." Of the young author the Theatre Magazine said, "In her remarkable characterization of the old grandmother, she caught the image of tired, despairing old age with such sincerity and understanding as might be expected from a seasoned, mature actress—certainly not from a young woman of twenty."

The program for the play says, "The author is interested primarily in character in this play. She does not localize her scene, nor deal with the right or wrong of a particular mill situation. She is, rather, interested in the lives of these people, so newly come to town from the mountains and from the tenant farms and so unable to make the most of their wages. For back of the struggle over wages and hours lies a greater struggle—that of a people born to a life in the country and forced to adjust themselves to living in town.

"In this play Kizzie, the grandmother, is an individual. But she is more than that. She is all the old ones whose world is very simply made up of 'the poor' and 'the rich that's got

Tar Heel Topics

Yale University has established an ape farm in Florida, according to the Hearst sheets. Too bad that Carolina hasn't cash enough to follow Yale's example in getting rid of that type of prof and student.

Brokers worked all day Sunday in an attempt to "fix" accounts disrupted by the market collapse, says the AP. It seems to us that the Wall street gentry have done too much fixing already.

Edwin Bjorkman, internationally famous critic and man of letters, saw his first football game Saturday when the Wolfpack was smothered under a 32-0 score by the Tar Heels. Probably he thought that the track meet between halves was merely a continuation of the gridiron contest; judging by the score he would have been perfectly justified in such a belief, at any rate.

Liberalism and Tolerance On the University Campus

Several years ago Dr. Franklin H. Giddings, prominent educator and member of the Columbia University faculty, predicted that Carolina would eventually become the South's foremost institution of higher learning. At that time the University had not entered its latest period of development and expansion, and ostensibly there was little upon which to base such a prediction.

Yet Dr. Giddings ventured four reasons for his confidence in the University's future: the climate of Chapel Hill is admirably suited to scholastic endeavors; the University is on the borderline in culture, combining the literary and intellectual interests of the old South with the new culture of the modern era; it is large enough and possessed of resources sufficient to attract some of the most competent professors from the North as well as the best that the South has to offer; the state approaches closely the ideal attitude combining liberalism and tolerance with ardent individualism.

In a few brief years Dr. Giddings prophecy has been demonstrated to be sound. The Carolina Magazine has for several years issued a Negro Number, devoted entirely to literary productions by members of the negro race. A Human Relations Institute, which brought representatives of almost every race and nationality to the campus, was enthusiastically received and heartily supported by the undergraduates. Racial and national antagonisms have been rare in deed on the University campus.

At this time it is especially important that the University's reputation for liberality be maintained. Especially during the past few years has the reputation of the institution become nation-wide; a critical stage has been reached in the development of the University, and the intellectual eyes of the entire country are focused upon Chapel Hill. If Dr. Giddings' prediction is to be completely fulfilled, the University undergraduates must demonstrate conclusively that they are impervious to the hatreds that have already almost torn asunder the student bodies of several southern institutions.

On Mid-Term Examinations

The average student looks upon mid-term exams with much the same horror and disgust with which he sees final examinations, or, for that matter, quizzes of any sort. He thinks of exams as being utterly unnecessary and as hindrances rather than aids to ascertaining just how much he knows or doesn't know. The examination, to him, is a method which was practiced in the old conventional type of institution and which has no place in the new school of education.

But be that as it may, the mid-term examination has positive benefits which are not to be overlooked. In reality it is nothing more than a milestone. After half the course has been completed, a checking up of what has been accomplished and what is lacking is a necessary part of the efficient handling of any study, whether it be a course in science, English, history, or what not. It is this retrospective light which the mid-term exam furnishes, just as New Year's turns back our minds on events of the past year and causes resolutions to be made. Certainly to anyone who is interested in procuring education or culture or whatever it is we go to school for, the outcome of midterms, with an attendant analysis of past actions, should spur him on to increased activity in his courses.

Many professors assert that the best work of students is done between mid-terms and finals. This is the last week of mid-term examinations, and a great majority of students are no doubt realizing that courses, in order to be worth anything, require some amount of study. Now is the time when the student body can and must settle down to real work.—B. M.

The Emblem Fad

The urge to adorn one's self seems to be among the strongest of human urges. This is borne out conclusively by the existence here of what might be called the emblem fad; that is, the use of numerous badges for purposes of distinction and ornament.

Most of the 412 student organizations which are affiliated with the University have some adopted type of emblem. The number and diversity of these is so great that even a close observer can't discover what half of them represent unless he has made a special study of the matter. And such a process takes no small amount of time and memory.

No sooner is a new organization founded than its members get together and design a badge of membership in order to keep abreast of the other organizations of the campus. The truth of the matter is that there are such a grand assortment of watch charms representing student organizations here that any given emblem can hardly be considered a distinction any longer. Medals, pins, keys, and the like have become the rule rather than the exception. The man who wears one is merely exercising a common privilege. Having become very commonplace on this campus, emblems no longer convey the element of individual privilege arising from recognized merit in some field of activity.

Now let us consider another phase of the situation. The records of Mr. Hinson, manager of the Book Exchange, show that students of the University spend about $150 annually for various items of jewelry consisting of such things as pins, seals, cigarette cases, rings, etc. Indeed, the urge to adorn one's self is very strong. Moreover, his records show that students spend about $300 dollars annually for Carolina pins and seals (in the form of watch charms). These seals, which are worn on numerous watch chains, represent absolutely no achievement in any phase of activity unless it be achievement in the art of wasting money. Watch charms, therefore, which really do represent something are dimmed in significance by numerous emblems which never were meant to represent anything.

We feel that the unprecedented and unthwarted urge to adorn one's self has displayed itself to an unreasonable extent here at Carolina. We call attention to the fact that the true significance of emblems which really represent achievement has been dimmed thereby.—J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

AN INTRODUCTION TO "HARK THE SOUND"

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I am of the opinion that a member of the music department or a non-member, if he has official license to do so, should prefix an introduction to the school song, "Hark the Sound." As the song now exists, the band commences with the opening bars, and as a result the student body chimes in one by one, a good volume being created only by the time the song has advanced to "Tar Heel voices." It is known that the most emphatic parts of a composition are the beginning and the end. If the beginning is weak, the effect of the entire structure is spoiled to a considerable extent.

As a suggestion, I should point out the fact that the end of the verse beginning: "Carolina priceless gem . . ." would make an appropriate introduction for the band to play, or just: "Receive all praises thine" would give the students ample time to rise, clear their throats, and sing "Hark."

HAROLD S. CONE.

SENIOR ENGINEERS WILL VISIT HIGH POINT TODAY

The senior class of the civil engineering department is going to High Point this morning with Professor Baity and Mr. Saville to attend the meeting of the North Carolina section of the American Waterworks association. In addition to these, four juniors who have been spending their cooperative year in filter plants are going.

The students are being taken there to hear various papers read, to see the exhibits of waterworks appliances put on by various manufacturers and to make an inspection of the modern water and sewage plants of High Point.

Merely Meandering

john mebane

J. E. Dungan is making his column "In the Wake of News" somewhat personal. There we find names of students who have been doing various things on the campus. Recently someone objected because he saw fit to publish a list of girls' names as candidates for the popularity title of the campus. Probably this objection was raised by a girl whose name had been omitted.

O, well, we can publish girls' names too. And let someone raise objections and just see if we get mad. We nominate for Miss 1930 (beautiful but dumb) the following: Mary, Flossie, Judy, Connie, Jane, Kat, Peggy and Edna.

Of course, we don't know, of course, any of these girls personally, of course; we've just heard their names.

Now just to show the merits of these young ladies and the extent of our belief in their prowess, we shall immortalize them in verse.

FLOSSIE

Flossie, Flossie, you're an Ace!
With me you're standing pat.
A pity there's an empty space
Just underneath your hat!

MARY

I like you, Mary, when it snows,
I like you when it rains;
But girls I love is them that shows
A little bit of brains.

CONNIE

Connie likes to flirt and break
Men's hearts and then forget.
She likes to make them sigh and say,
"I wish we'd never met!"

JUDY

Judy is a comely dame
With curls of artificial red:
No other virtue to her name,
And not a thought within her head.

KAT

Kat, you might as well confess
(And do it with a smile)
Your modesty and bashfulness
Have long been out of style.

JANE

Jane, there is no need to seek
Refuge behind those coughs:
I know you pass your courses with
Those smiles you give your profs.

PEGGY

Give this little girl a hand:
She doesn't paint or powder.
Place lilies on her coffin and
With daffodils enshroud 'er.

EDNA

Edna, all your looks and grace
Will not get you any place
Except, of course, with college swains
Who look for face instead of brains.

After hearing Henry Lawrence Southwick Saturday night we went back to our room and recited Hamlet's soliloquy until a feline maurader outside the window gratuitously accompanied us. We threw our copy of Hamlet out of the window at it and went downstairs to play Chopin's Etude in B Flat Major on the victrola. After that, we felt much better.

Collins Will Work Tar Heels Hard For South Carolina Game

Team Came Through Tussle With State In Good Shape Except For Loss of Wyrick.

MAGNER EXPECTED TO BE IN FINE SHAPE

Gamecocks Have Shown Great Improvement Since Loss To Virginia Early In Season; Planning To Stage Great Battle With Tar Heels.

With Quarterback Wyrick definitely out with injuries but with prospects that Halfback Magner will be back in shape, the Tar Heels stand facing a week's intensive work in preparation for what is regarded one of the hardest tests left on their schedule—Saturday's battle with South Carolina at Columbia.

The Gamecock supporters are reported to be crowing loudly—to the effect that South Carolina will beat the Tar Heels by three touchdowns. Tar Heel supporters hadn't come to admit that today, but they were pretty glum about this loss of Wyrick.

The heady and veteran field general suffered a new injury to his back in Saturday's game with N. C. State and the Tar Heel trainer has said that he is definitely out of the South Carolina game and will be out of the Tar Heel lineup in all probability until the Thanksgiving game with Virginia.

His steadiness and finesse were being counted on as one of the biggest assets against South Carolina.

The Gamecocks' victory over Citadel, plus a 26-6 victory over Maryland and a great showing against Clemson, makes the Cocks loom large on the Tar Heel schedule. The further fact that Zobel, their big explosive last year, is now a second stringer, is regarded as additional proof that South Carolina has plenty this year.

Except for Wyrick, the Tar Heels came through the N. C. State game in fine shape. In fact, the Tar Heels have prospects of grooming the strongest line for the Gamecocks that they have put in the field since their opening game. Jim Magner is expected to be back in shape also, Magner being the Tar Heels' high scoring ace and the flashy halfback who has averaged eight yards a try for his ball-carrying attempts this year.

S. I. C. Cross Country Meet Here Nov. 23

Preparations are being made to receive more than a hundred men, who will be in Chapel Hill on Saturday, November 23, to participate in the Southern Conference cross country meet, according to Dale Ranson, track and cross country coach.

Probable entries in the meet, many of whom have already signified their intention of entering, include Georgia Tech, Georgia, Clemson, N. C. State, Duke, V. P. I., Maryland, Florida, Sewanee, Vanderbilt, V. M. I., Washington and Lee, Auburn and North Carolina. This will be the first time that Florida, Sewanee and Vanderbilt have competed in the meet.

Gamecock Tickets

Tickets for the North Carolina-South Carolina football game to be played Saturday at Columbia, S. C., will be on sale at the Book Exchange during this week.

Pete Wyrick Not To Play Saturday

Additional injuries to his back received Saturday by Pete Wyrick, veteran quarterback of the Tar Heel squad, will prevent him from participating in any games until Thanksgiving, Chuck Quinlan, trainer announced Monday.

Wyrick sustained an injury to his vertebrae in the Maryland game which put him on the sidelines for the Georgia Tech and Georgia games. His return to shape was celebrated by wins from V. P. I. two weeks ago and from State Saturday. He was pulled from the State Game after the first quarter apparently little worse for the scrimmage.

Sunday Wyrick complained of a soreness in his back. Examination disclosed that the vertebrae had received further injury serious enough to prevent him from playing the rest of the season. The remainder of the squad came through the game Saturday without injury.

MANY REPORT FOR FIRST CAGE WORK

Basketball Practice Begins With 30 Candidates Reporting; Good Material.

Thirty candidates for the basketball squad answered Coach Jim Ashmore's first call for basketball practice late last week. Several new men reported along with most of the members of last winter's varsity squad.

Coach Ashmore thinks that the prospects are more promising this lear than last and that the Tar Heels will have a better rounded team. With Marpet, Harper, and Brown from last years varsity and Dameron, Farleigh, Choate, Smith, Neiman, and T. Craig from the varsity squad, as the leading contenders for berths, a group of new men and a dozen men from last year's freshman team will furnish good material for the squad.

Last year the team annexed the state title, winning games from all the "Big Five" only to go down before Duke in the Southern Conference championship, in which State college emerged champions and Duke runner-up. Carolina which has won the Southern Championship several times expects to be back in the race this year as one of the leading contestants, renewing its reputation as one of the consistently best teams in the south.

The loss of Captain Rufus Hackney and Henry Satterfield will be keenly felt, for, in these two diminutive stars, Carolina had two of the quickest and most reliable forwards in the south. Farleigh and Neiman will be there to take their places along with Hutchinson, Sachs, and Jimmy Moore from last year's freshmen.

Harper, Dameron and Myers will make a formidable array of centers. Harper with one year of varsity experience behind him should make an excellent center, as he performed very creditably last year. Dameron is expected to give some good competition and it will be a close fight with Bill Myers.

Alexander, freshman captain last season, is sure to keep Marpet and Brown busy as guards. There is also Choate, Smith, and Craig in this field.

Practice is held every afternoon in the Tin Can at four o'clock and all men not out for football and who are interested in basketball, both freshman and varsity should report for early practice as the schedule calls for games around the first of the year.

SCORING RECORD AT STAKE WHEN TEAM MEETS S. C.

Only Clemson Has Scored As Many As Three Touchdowns On Gamecocks; Heels Averaging 32 Points Per Game.

An all-time scoring record will be in the balance Saturday when the Carolina eleven journeys southward to Columbia to beard the South Carolina gridmen in their native lair.

These Tar Heels had an average of 32 points a game when they faced N. C. State last Saturday. Head Coach Chuck Collins played a total of 38 men, more than three elevens. Oddly enough, when the Tar Heels finished, the score read "North Carolina 32, N. C. State 0."

The highest powered Tar Heel scoring machine of all times—Captain Dave Tayloe's famous 1914 eleven—averaged exactly the same 32 points a game for an 11-game season.

Can the 1929 Tar Heels maintain the grade against the Gamecocks?

Clemson, with one of the strongest teams in the Conference couldn't do it. Clemson got three touchdowns, and Citadel two at the Gamecocks' expense, but no other team has been able to push over more than one on the stalwart Gamecock forwards.

The figures would seem to say no. Coach Collins' attitude would say no also, because Coach Collins doesn't believe in running up large scores, when a game is sewed up, at the possible risk of injuring and crippling his lineup.

But you never can tell what those Tar Heels will do. They upset the dope pots to drive over three touchdowns and trim Georgia Tech. The Georgia Bulldogs blanked Yale's great Booth & Co., that whipped Army, but these same Bulldogs could only hold the Tar Heels to two touchdowns. And that is the best any Tar Heel foe has done this year.

Coach Collins has no first string backfield. The veteran halfbacks Nash, Ward, Magner, Erickson, Jackson and Maus, and the sophomore, Slusser, all rate on an equal par. There are two third-year fullbacks, Spaulding and Harden, and a second-year fullback, House, who likewise rate equal. All are hard drivers, half are passers, and the other half are fine receivers. Opponents have found it hard to stop such great reserve strength.

VANDY STEPS TO FRONT IN RACE

Five Teams Top Conference With No Defeats; Carolina Leads Second Division.

Saturday's football games all over the south brought many upsets and left the standings of the conference even more muddled than ever. After the melee was over five out of the six undefeated teams were found to have preserved their perfect record. Only Clemson dropped out of the select class. This came as a result of their loss to the fighting Colonels from Kentucky.

Ward Will Play In Native State Sat.

Jimmy Ward, who used to cavort on the gridiron for Florence, S. C., High School, will be one of the principal backfield aces of the Carolina team that invades Columbia Saturday for the annual battle with the South Carolina Gamecocks. Ward, a triple-threater, with five touchdowns to his credit this season, is in a tie for high scoring honors on the Tar Heel club. The former South Carolinian, who now makes his home at Hendersonville, N. C., is playing his last year on the Tar Heel squad. He is 5 feet 10 and weighs 165.

SEASON after season, college men register their preference for John Wards. By constantly increased purchases, they indicate their approval of the fine leathers, the correct lines and handsome workmanship that characterize these smart shoes.

ITALIAN OPERAS SUBJECT MUSIC MEETING TODAY

Regular Semi-Monthly Meeting Of Community Club Meets This Afternoon in Music Building; Operatic Development To Be Traced.

The music department of the Chapel Hill community club will hold the regular semi-monthly meeting in room 9 of the music building, Wednesday afternoon at 3:30. The public is invited.

Mrs. A. S. Wheeler has charge of today's program, which will be given over to a survey of the development of Italian opera. Going back to the inception of the opera, Mrs. C. T. Murchison will sing brief songs from the works of Peri, Cacinni and Monteverdi. Moving on to the second period in Italian operatic development, Mrs. L. M. Brooks and Mrs. F. E. Edmister will play a piano duet transcription of Rosinni's overture to his opera "Semiramis." And Prof. U. T. Holmes will sing the first scene aria from Verdi's "Il Trovatore." Representing the third and thus far final stage of this development, Mrs. Murchison will sing "One Fine Day" from Puccini's "Madama Butterfly."

In addition to these presentations, the chairman will lecture on the subject, and will present a number of phonograph recordings from the library of the University music department to further illustrate the growth and development of this extremely important field of musical literature.

BOOK BY GRADUATE OF UNIVERSITY ON SALE AT BOOKSHOP

Copies of "Look Homeward Angel" by Thomas Wolfe have been received and are available at the Bull's Head book shop. An article in the New York Times and appearing in the Daily Tar Heel, highly praised Mr. Wolfe for his work. Mr. Wolfe in this book has presented with masterful language the joy and gusto of provincial American life.

Mr. Wolfe was born in Asheville in 1900. He graduated from the University and three years later received his M. A. degree from Harvard University. At Harvard he worked in the "'47 Workshop," continuing the work begun in the Carolina Playmakers.

"The Unwilling God" by Percy Marks, author of "The Plastic Age," is also in the book shop. This book will be of interest in connection with the recent Carnegie survey report. The Bull's Head book shop invites any student to visit the shop and read these books.

Co-ed Tea

All co-eds are invited to the regular Wednesday tea at Spencer building this afternoon from 4:30 to 6 o'clock. Catherine Sherrod and Kate Parks Kitchen will be the hostesses.

Dr. Gray Will Begin Series Of Lectures Here Tonight Under Auspices Of Local Y

Visiting Speaker Is Prominent Figure In British Labor Party.

Dr. A. Herbert Gray, noted British minister and Labor party leader, will arrive here this afternoon to deliver a series of lectures under the auspices of the local Y. He will open his program here tonight by leading a faculty and graduate seminar in Bingham hall at 7:30. This seminar will be for all members of the faculty who are interested regardless of whether they are in the commerce school or not.

Dr. Gray will speak again Thursday morning in chapel. He will also speak again that night to a joint meeting of the three Y cabinets in Bingham hall at 7:15. Then at 8:30 p. m. he will deliver a lecture to a mass meeting in Gerrard hall on "Men's and Women's Relationships."

He will speak again in chapel Friday morning, and at 1 p. m. he will attend a faculty luncheon given in his honor. Dr. Gray will close his program here by a talk to the monthly meeting of the religious workers council at 6:30.

Dr. Gray is a noted statesman as well as a preacher and author. He was one of the organizers of the Labor party, and also played a large part in the election of Ramsay MacDonald.

By profession Dr. Gray is a minister, and is at present pastor of the Church Hill Presbyterian church of London. He, as do most of the English ministers, takes a large part in the leadership in his country.

As well as being a statesman and a minister, Dr. Gray is a noted author of books pertaining to social relationships. He has written many books of this type that have had wide distribution. His best known book, "Men, Women and God," is very popular among the college men of today. (38,000 copies of this book have been sold in the United States alone.) Some of his other famous books are "Christian Adventure," "As Tommy Sees Us" (written during the war), and "With Christ as Guide."

Dr. Gray has been making a tour of a few of the large colleges in the United States. When he left Dartmouth college, where he had delivered a series of lectures, Professor W. J. Rose of the department of sociology there characterized Dr. Gray as "one of the few distinguished leaders of thought whom Dartmouth men have been privileged to hear."

According to H. F. Comer, secretary of the local Y, Dr. Gray is one of the main speakers on the Y program, and the University should feel highly honored and privileged in having such a man as its guest.

Club Meeting

The Philological club met in the lounge of the graduate club Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock. W. P. Cumming of the English department at Davidson college presented a study of "The Influence of Ovid's Metamorphoses on Spenser's Mutabilitic Cantos." R. S. Boggs of the department of romance languages here followed this with a discussion of "A Method of Classifying Folk Tales."

N. C. ENGINEERING SCHOOL IS LAUDED BY GEORGE BASON

Says Curriculum To Be Years Ahead of That of Most Technical Schools.

IS FIRST YEAR AT N. C.

"The curriculum of the engineering school at Chapel Hill is, in the opinion of many, years ahead of the curricula of most technical schools in the amount of its liberalizing content," stated Professor George F. Bason, head of the electrical engineering department of the University, in an article appearing in the Charlotte Observer last Sunday.

When asked what was the standing of the University engineering school among men who employ graduating electrical engineers, Mr. Bason stated that men from North Carolina are far better equipped to enter their field than the graduates of the majority of technical schools.

Professor Bason in his article goes on to say that at the present time the demand for engineers is for those who have had liberal work in addition to the strictly technical instruction. The University of North Carolina is filling this need for men with other than technical training, and consequently it occupies a high position [illegible] those who are in a position to judge a school from the point of the training given its graduates.

Not only is the school of engineering praised by Professor Bason, who came here this year from Cornell where he was head of the department of electrical engineering, for its liberal work but the mathematical work presented to the students also comes in for its share of praise. Whereas the average student comes to the University with less mathematical training than is required for admittance to most technical schools, the graduate leaves more than ordinarily well equipped with this valuable tool of the engineers' technical equipment.

A large part of the strictly manual training courses which are given at most technical schools is not included in the curiculum at Carolina, and the time given to this subject is devoted to so-called liberal courses.

There has been a growing sentiment that universities have an obligation to fulfill in helping the graduate to find the field of work for which he is best fitted. Of this work at the University Mr. Bason says that Carolina has been especially successful through the work of Dean F. F. Bradshaw.

The cooperative work given during the junior year when the students are in actual work half of the time, is an outstanding feature of the work, for in this period the student receives an insight into actual business which cannot be obtained in any other way.

A Correction

Due to an error in the records the Tar Heel stated yesterday that Jimmie Ward had played for Florence High School in South Carolina before entering the University. This information is incorrect. Ward did not play for Florence High School. The Tar Heel is glad to make the correction.

Examinations Stand As Culmination Of Year's Study Says R. B. House

Executive Secretary of University Speaks To Freshmen At Chapel Exercises.

BRADSHAW TELLS OF GERRARD HALL

R. B. House spoke to part of the freshman class on the general theme of studying Tuesday morning when chapel was resumed in Gerrard hall.

Dean Bradshaw opened the exercise by describing his memories of chapel in Gerrard hall when he entered the University as a freshman. He announced that chapel will continue to meet under the present arrangements while Memorial hall is undergoing repairs.

Mr. House took the greater part of the chapel period to discuss some of the difficulties that have confronted the freshmen in their academic work. Speaking first of the student's attitude toward examinations, he said that examinations should be regarded as a very essential part of college work as they represent what the student has accomplished.

"While examinations stand as the culmination of the student's study, studying itself is the actual problem," Mr. House reminded the freshmen. "Some men think themselves lacking in ability in certain fields when in reality their difficulties are certain fallacies in their methods of studying. These fallacies may lie in their attitude toward the work or in their efforts toward concentration and practice." In regard to attitude toward work, Mr. House urged the freshmen that in spite of dislike for and the difficulty of certain courses they determine to master them. He told them that it was within the ability of any one to pass college work, passing being merely a matter of day by day work.

Recommending practical helps for studying, Mr. House said that one should remember at all times to concentrate on the work in hand. He declared that little of the time a student spent studying was given to earnest concentration. Last of all, he said that a student should make the information he gathers a fixed part of his knowledge by constant repetition and practice.

N. W. Walker Heads Faculty Committee

President Chase has reconstituted the faculty committee on entrance requirements, with N. W. Walker of the school of education as chairman. The first meeting of the committee will be held next Monday night, and its work will be continued for some time.

The purpose of the committee's work will be to formulate recommendations, to be embodied in a report which will later be presented to the faculty, respecting such modification as may seem necessary in the University's entrance requirements. With this object in view the committee will critically examine the University's present requirements, will study the requirements of other representative state universities and of several of the endowed institutions throughout the nation, and will further take up the study of how well our present entrance requirements correlate with the work and curriculum of North Carolina high schools.

Meyer Names Six Keys Of Success

Yesterday evening, before a large and distinguished audience in Goldsboro, Professor Harold D. Meyer of the department of sociology at the University, spoke upon the six keys that are necessary to success in life, as well as in the Boy Scout movement.

Among the six rungs or keys that Mr. Meyer suggested, he stressed the necessity of having a correct attitude to life, and of having a suitable and good background as well as proper and sufficient knowledge.

The special community meeting called by Mr. A. A. Joseph, head of the Tuscorora Council of the Boy Scouts of America, was to celebrate the extraordinary event of having eight Eagle Scouts from one city. As guest speaker, Mr. Joseph invited Mr. Meyer, member of the educational committee of the Boy Scouts for the district comprising North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

Extra-Curricular Course In Retail Management Is Given

(By Frank J. Manheim)

"General course dealing with the fundamental factors of store management. Attention will be given to stocking the store with supplies, extending credit, treating disgruntled patrons so that they return again to patronize, and maintaining a high level of efficiency. Eight hours a day, every day in the week, fall, winter and spring quarters."

One would look in vain in the catalogue of the University of North Carolina for such an announcement of a course. Nevertheless, there are 26 students who are taking such a course at the present time. Their classrooms are located in the 13 dormitories, one in each, and consist of two students, who alternate in attendance. And the classes are long ones, lasting usually four or five hours per day. Professors or instructors are not to be seen. But the students learn from experience and contact. And not only do they profit in the way of knowledge but in a more material sense. Most of the 26 dormitory agents are able to pay their expenses for the entire year at school by their earnings as dormitory agents.

Their problems are interesting ones. One dormitory agent was confronted by a ticklish situation when one of the fellows living in the dormitory, and an excellent customer, received two large boxes of gum from his father. The two boxes contained approximately 50 packages of "Wrigley's" gum. Which, of course, would last him for many, many days. But "Milky Ways," chocolate flavored, were more to his taste and he suggested that the dormitory agent exchange "Milky Ways" for his gum. If the agent accepted the gum in exchange for the "Milky Ways," he would, perhaps, make more per sale but it would take countless times longer to sell 50 packages of chewing gum than the same number of "Milky Ways." And, if he declined the offer, his customer would, perhaps, be angry at it and cease patronizing the store. The agent cogitated for a long time, and after several suggestions that smacked of financial wizardry, a deal was culminated by giving but 35 or 40 "Milky Ways" for about 50 packages of chewing gum.

But oftimes the problem besetting the harassed agents are of less pleasant nature. At present, the various pressing clubs are protesting at the sudden rush of suits that comes on the week-end. And the store-keepers are trying to make the fellows in their dorms realize that if they give their suits to be dry-cleaned or pressed earlier in the week, they will receive far better attention than if they leave them until the last minute.

There is an association of dormitory agents, whose president is J. H. Sheffield of Old West dormitory. And at its weekly meetings, often with a representative of the University present, the various knots that have arisen during the elapsed week are presented for mutual untying. Thus, when a dormitory agent reported that a suit he had sent to such and such a pressing club was not returned within a reasonable period, it was uncovered in some other dormitory where it had been sent in error.

Labor Girds Its Loins

President Green of the American Federation of Labor issued a call to battle yesterday that contains tidings of ominous portent for the industrial peace of North Carolina. His message called upon presidents of 105 labor unions to send representatives to Washington November 14 to plan an extensive organization campaign in the south.

"Let us accept the challenge which comes to us from those extremists among employers of the south who classify the American Federation of Labor as communist and destructionist," the labor chieftain urged. "The labor movement of the south finds itself confronted with one of the most gigantic campaigns ever launched by employers to prevent organized labor from doing its duty."

Evidently the forces of labor are preparing for a long war against the capitalists in this state. The bloody battles at Marion and Gastonia are but the opening skirmishes in the campaign. And the uselessness of it all is painfully apparent, if past history is any indication. In England one of the most gigantic struggles in the history of civilization was waged, extending over a 75-year period, before labor gained the right to organize. In New England the forces of capital and labor battled from 1835 to 1874 before the principle of social regulation between the employer and employe was acknowledged. It seems that the south should be able to profit by the lessons gained in England and New England through bitter experience, but present indications are that the same weary round of unceasing warfare, sabotage, waste and suffering is destined to take place in North Carolina, unless some outside force intervenes.

The English government has taken a vigorous hand in capital-labor disputes during the past decade, and much needless strife and suffering has been averted. Probably the sole hope of the south, if it is to escape a bloody industrial war, lies in the well-established principle of social regulation of employer-employe disputes. But a seemingly insurmountable obstacle lies in the path of governmental regulation of the differences between labor and capital; it is an open secret that the forces and influences of capitalistic interests control the United States government, just as surely as they control the state and local governments here in North Carolina. Why should labor submit its case to a tribunal obviously under the thumb of the enemy?

Two strong forces face each other in England, with respect for each other's power and confidence in each other's ability. The labor party is just as influential in English politics as those dominated by capitalistic interests. Thus it is that the English government is able to arbitrate successfully disputes which would lead to industrial warfare in this country.

A strong American labor party would do more than anything else to make governmental regulation of the critical situation existing in the south practicable. Comparative peace now reigns in the south, but it is suspiciously similar to a lull before the battle.

We North Carolinians are in for it—there can be no doubt about that. All hell has already been a popping, to use the vulgar but expressive parlance, and it's agoin' to pop some more damn soon. About all we can do is to dig ourselves a good strong cellar and duck into it at the first shot. And practically our only hope for even a breathing spell within the next 35 or 40 years is that a strong political organization representative of labor interests will arise to become a power at Washington. Then only will governmental arbitration and social regulation of capital-labor relations be possible.

The Decline Of Mencken

Four years ago, and even more recently, it was customary for undergraduates who made any pretenses toward intelectualism to take as their standard bearer H. L. Mencken, rabid critic from the metropolis. It was to him that they went to fetch most of their ideas and it was upon him that they relied to solve all matters which concerned either their country or the Arts. But lately, however, they have begun to turn to other sources for their opinions. Occasionally these sources are their own minds and this gradual weaning from the opinions of America's most notorious critic indicates a development which would have otherwise remained unsuspected.

In an article by Norman Foerster recently published in the Carolina Magazine Supplement, Mr. Foerster points to the decline of Mencken's popularity among American readers at large. This decline is especially evident among undergraduate minds who have come to realize that bombasticism goes only half-way towards reaching a kind of criticism that is satisfactory. The undergraduates are slowly turning to the more sober and stable of literary critics and the famous emphasis of Mr. Mencken is being neglected.

It is likely that from now on the various demands which readers make of a critic will be definitely raised and will require more than Restoration expressions and explosive sentences. These new demands will ask for interpretation as well as attack and a knowledge of literature as well as an ability to write.

"Women," says Mr. Alfred E. Smith, and for the life of us we can't understand why his magazine stuff is, in our opinion, so much less interesting than Mr. Coolidge's, "are just as much interested in government as men are, and just as intelligent." Just about, which, if you ask us, is praise so faint as to be inaudible.—F. P. A. in The New York World.

Lawns for Athletic Fields

Notices have been posted in all the dormitories asking that the use of the lawns for tag football fields be discontinued; it is pointed out that only one man is employed to keep the students off the grass in this University and that it is imperative that everyone cooperate and stay off the lawns in order to keep them beautiful.

We heartily endorse the idea of keeping the campus beautiful and not walking on the grass. However, if we prohibit the use of the grassy plots between the dormitories for athletic fields, where shall we drive the average student who wishes to practice tag football or play any other game with a few of his companions? The intramural field is not large enough to accommodate all the students who desire to play tag football; it must of necessity be reserved for scheduled games. The stadia are used by the varsity players; the tennis courts are constantly in use; the gymnasium is only large enough to accommodate the freshmen for 20-minute classes.

It is a deplorable fact that more ground is not available for the use of intramural athletes. If adequate fields were available, no one would think of using the lawn. But under present circumstances, it seems to us that the lawns must be used if the students are to have any ground at all to play upon.—J. D. M.

Student Finance

The University of North Carolina is known far and wide as an institution which affords unrivalled opportunities to self-help students. Resultant of this reputation many students come here from other states merely because they can earn part of their expenses and satisfy the academic requirements of the institution at the same time. In this case the self-help policy is not altogether a success. The state of North Carolina, no doubt, has her share of young men of college age who for financial reasons are not able to pay all of the costs of an education. In consideration of the future of the state, it seems to us that the self-help advantages should be reserved for these. Although this attitude may seem a bit selfish upon first glance, careful scrutiny of the matter will show that the future welfare of the state overshadows the element of selfishness.

But let us consider the question of student finance from another angle. The interrogation which naturally arises is—How much self-help work is profitable, if any? On the one extreme, there are students who spend so much time earning money to defray college expenses that their academic undertakings are sadly neglected. On the other hand, there are some who don't do any kind of outside work and yet allow their class work to go neglected. Between these two extremes is to be found one of the most pertinent of student problems—the problem of adaptation and adjustment.

What are the facts in the case? The average wage paid students here for work is twenty-five cents per hour. Authorities claim that every day in the high school is worth eight dollars and that every day in college is worth considerably more, fifteen dollars being the amount usually quoted. In the light of these figures working to earn money instead of putting that time on academic undertakings looks like a losing game. In other words, self-help work is a necessary evil which varies with the amount done. If the student could possibly borrow the money necessary to defray his college expenses, it would pay him to do so. The time occupied in making expenses at twenty-five cents per hour would in the end bring greater profit to the student if it were spent in the pursuit of studies.

But the truth of the situation is that many students must work in order to remain in school. Numerous and bountiful loan funds seem to be the only solution to the problem. Those who are interested in the future of the University and of the state could hit upon no better idea than that of establishing loan funds at the University to defray the expenses of worthy students who otherwise would be obliged to work.

SUGGESTIONS CONCERNING FOOTBALL

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

Football at the University doubtless would be more interesting if we played stronger opponents. This year's schedule turns out to contain not more than three first-rate games, and perhaps not more than the two with Georgia and Georgia Tech. It is evident that Carolina is now out of the class of most of the teams which it has played heretofore. For the sake of the game here it would therefore seem wise to substitute teams such as Tennessee, Vanderbilt, and Alabama for Maryland, South Carolina, and possibly V. P. I. The four North Carolina teams that we play should provide, among them, sufficient resting places on the schedule. We won from Georgia Tech, yet look at Georgia Tech's schedule: Carolina, Florida, Tulane, Notre Dame, Vanderbilt, Alabama, Georgia, and a couple of others.

Another thing that would add to the attractiveness of the game here is some improvement in the maneuvers of the band. It seems an exceedingly poor arrangement that requires the music to cease right in the middle just because one of the maneuvers happens to end at that point. The music and the formations which the band goes through should be synchronized, and it should be unnecessary for the band to cease playing after it takes the field until it goes to its seats. It should be unnecessary, also for it to march down to the end of the field, as in Saturday's game, and there quit playing and left to come back to its place in disorder. In addition, it ought to march out playing when the game is over. The Georgia Tech band gave an excellent example on all these points when it was here last fall. Carolina could very well follow that example.

NEWS LETTER TO BECOME SEMI-MONTHLY IN FUTURE

The University News Letter, published weekly by the University for the University extension division, will be published in the future once every two weeks for an indefinite period, according to an announcement in the last issue of the Letter.

The announcement is as follows:

"Due to the anticipated deficit in the general fund of the state at the close of the present fiscal year, all the departments and institutions of the state have been asked to curtail expenses. The University has been asked to reduce its expenses by the amount of $50,000. To do this it is necessary to curtail, among other things, its extension activities. One curtailment which has been agreed upon is a reduction in the number of issues of the University News Letter. This week's issue completes Volume XV, and from now on, for an indefinite period, the News Letter will be issued only once in two weeks. The first number of Volume XVI will appear under date of November 20.—Editor."

Do Professors Ever Flunk Cheerleaders?

The following amusing excerpt from the Greensboro "Daily News" was written several years ago by "Sky" Dobson in his "Dustin' 'Em OFF" column:

ANXIOUS MOMENTS

There's a dashing, slashing fullback who's a bearcat in the game
For he's shown the way so often that he's won a lot of fame;
He can lead the interference as it goes around the end
And, when called upon to do it, 'tis the other line he'll rend—
He is powerful and skillful and can hurl a forward toss
But a university professor sometimes throws him for a loss.

Then the hurdler who is working in the gym most every day
And who's a-comer with ability that makes Coach Fetzer say
That he'll set some collegiate record if he stays upon the team
Which will cause the cheering sections to let off a lot of steam—
He can take the timbers easily and set a dizzy pace
'Till a university professor sets his hurdle in its place.

Take the speedy centerfielder, as example if you will—
He's a dandy on the bases and he sure can crown the pill;
He's a terror to the pitcher as he goes up to the plate,
For he often knocks the pellet far into another state.
His triples with the bases full can make the rooters shout—
But a university professor has been known to strike him out.

So you can see we're worrying and wondering what's what
And whether some scholastic blow will reach a vital spot;
For professors have a cruel way of wrecking teams that're built
When the papers of the athletes with mistakes are sometimes filled.
But what is most alarming us and filling us with fears
Is whether they will flunk the boy who's leader of the cheers.

SAN DIEGO STARTLED BY SHAM FILM BATTLE

The staccato of rapid fire machine guns and the roar of airplanes caused by the Columbia company on location in San Diego during the production of the all-talking aviation film, "Flight," now playing at the Carolina Theatre, gave the San Diegans a good scare until they found out what it was all about. The sounds, indicative of battle in progress, led them to believe that war had again broken out across the border in Mexico.

Upon investigation it was discovered that the bloody battle was being fought for "Flight," and that the mangled, bleeding mass of humanity which carried on the battle was a group of actors, none of whom were actually being shot despite the fact that the blood was streaming down their faces. So complete in every detail was the skirmish that the Marine officers, who had come down from the army base to watch the battle, were startled by the remarkable accuracy of the manoeuvres.

The principals in this aviation attraction are Jack Holt, Lila Lee and Ralph Graves. Frank R. Capra directed.

A score of college professors and students narrowly escaped with their lives the latter part of August when the Ute Pass Fish Club Dam at Colorado Springs, Col., gave way, and a torrent of water swept away the Colorado college settlement below the dam.

Ralph Graves got the idea from the famous run to the wrong goal made on New Year's Day in 1929 in the football game between the University of California and Georgia Tech. This incident suggested the future of the youth who had fumbled. He combined it with the subject uppermost in the public mind—aviation. Since Lindbergh, the youth who had an opportunity and made good, crossed the Atlantic in company with his famous "We," all the world has become aerial enthusiasts.

Graves decided that he would put his fumbling hero in the air and to keep fact rather than fiction he utilized the thrilling adventures in Nicaragua when the U. S. Marines went into the Central American Republic to put down the activities of the famous bandit rebels.

Flashy Offenses Will Meet Saturday

S. I. C. SPORTS

(By K. C. Ramsay)

Only four more Saturdays are left for the winner of the Southern Conference to be determined and there are five teams with clean slates in the conference race. Tulane, Tennessee, Vanderbilt, Kentucky and Louisiana State are the leading five.

Tulane seems to be the surest bet for S. I. C. honors, having beaten Tech and Georgia and having only one real test left in her conference schedule. L. S. U. may upset the Green Wave but it will be a great task. Tennessee has three hard games left in Kentucky, Alabama and Vandy, but McEver and Company will be hard to stop in their race for scoring honors.

Dan McGugin's team is looking good, but to beat Georgia Tech and Tennessee on successive Saturdays is no easy task and that they must do to carry the conference honors to Nashville. Kentucky is going very strong now. The 44-6 win over Clemson indicates that.

Louisiana State has won two games in the conference and journeys up to Durham to meet the N. C. ramblers in their first home game after three weeks of touring above Mason's and Dixon's line. The coming game with Tulane will be the deciding factor in L. S. U.'s fate.

Everyone is wondering what happened to Josh Cody's Palmetto high scoring machine last Saturday. Here is what Bill Cox says about it in the Greensboro News: "One possible solution is that Josh Cody's Tigers got lost when they came out of the jungle and didn't ever get to Kentucky. Instead of playing the Blue Grass Wildcats they wandered around and walked into the Battle of Bull Run. The team that Kentucky licked was a South Carolina high school field class in history that happened to be in the Blue Grass looking for Nancy Hanks' evidence and merely played the game because Clemson never arrived."

The Tar Heels have dropped one game in the conference race but they have certainly been going strong since they dropped that game to the Bulldogs. Many things can happen over a period of four weeks, and it is altogether possible that N. C. will be several notches nearer the top when scores of December seventh are all turned in.

Here is what Wade Ison, in the Charlotte News, thinks about the Tar Heels: "The lads who room and eat at Chapel Hill are coming along, and how! In North Carolina they have outstripped their opponents in points scored almost double-fold and are tearing on to a record number of scores for a new Tar Heel mark. The Georgia victory smarted for just a little while, and then the Heels started on for higher things. Today's standings of the Southern Conference don't make the boys look quite so bad. Each week they get better and better on this standing ladder."

Those who go down to Columbia, S. C., Saturday have a real contest in store for them, because those Gamecocks have been waiting and pointing for the invasion of the Tar Heels. Judging from paragraphs in their student newspaper they are going to beat the North Staters.

Maintaining their 32-point average, the Tar Heels are in the pink of condition after the fray with the Wolfpack, and they are anxious to get with the S. C. University. North Carolina hasn't beaten her neighbors since 1926. The 1927 game was lost 14-6 and the clash last season resulted in a 0-0 tie, so they are particularly anxious to conquer Billy Laval's Sand Lappers.

Great Array Of Backs To Parade At Columbia

South Carolina Team Converted Clemson Passes Into Touchdowns; Expect To Try Same Against Tar Heels.

When the Tar Heels of North Carolina meet the Gamecocks of South Carolina every indication points toward a great offensive exhibition. Both teams possess men of great broken field fame; men who have brought the stands to their feet in the games this fall by their spectacular runs. However, the two backfields will not be composed solely of backs of this type, since each lineup will include men who have gained consistently through the strongest lines in the south.

Rhame, Boineau and Stoddard have earned for themselves the reputation of being one of the greatest backfield combinations in the Conference, and their dashes down the field have been largely responsible for the showing of South Carolina this season. Clemson, rated as one of the best in the South before the Kentucky game last weekend, failed completely to stop these men some two weeks ago, and consequently Rhame and Boineau closed the day with 80 and 75 yard runs respectively to their credit. South Carolina has scored heavily against all of her opponents; Virginia being the only eleven to hold her under the total two touchdowns.

To counterbalance this treat from her more southern neighbor North Carolina will offer not one far famed combination but rather a collection of backs who have been "pressagented" throughout the South as the Hundred Backs. However, by actual count the number of backfield men who will see action against the Gamecocks will from necessity shrink from one hundred to about eight or nine. These men have alternately provided the offensive drive that has carried the Tar Heels so far through their schedule.

Pete Wyrick, due to injuries, must again join the injured list with the probability of staying there until the Virginia game Thanksgiving. The loss of this veteran quarterback has lowered considerably the stock of the Tar Heels. To take his place Coach Chuck Collins will use Johnny Branch, sophomore broken field ace. His running up to date both from the line of scrimmage and from received punts has hailed him throughout the South as one of the most elusive of the Conference backs. His most outstanding feat this season was a 60 yard run through Georgia Tech.

Magner clipped off 30 yards at one stroke against Georgia and earlier in the season sprinted 65 yards through a bewildered Maryland outfit. Spaulding also turned in a 60 yard dash against the Old Liners. Last weekend Chuck Erickson paraded on two occasions through the entire N. C. State team for 67 and 70 yards. Strud Nash followed closely on his heels with a 62 yard punt return.

Meets Homefolks

Bud Eskew is a South Carolinian by birth but a Tar Heel by adoption, and Eskew will be on the Tar Heel side of the line of fire when North Carolina and South Carolina mix in Columbia Saturday. The Greenville boy stands 5 feet 10, weighs 180, and makes a fine running mate for Captain Ray Farris, the Tar Heels' great triple-threat guard. Eskew comes of a football playing family. An older brother, who was also dubbed "Bud," captained the Furman team a couple of seasons back.

INTRAMURAL TEAMS ARE INVITED TO ENTER MEET

The intramural athletic association yesterday addressed letters to all fraternity and dormitory athletic managers inviting the participation of their members in the novice track meet which is to take place Thursday afternoon at Emerson field. The intramural officials stressed the fact that points scored by a fraternity or dormitory member would be counted toward the all-year trophy which is to be given to the organization having the highest total score at the end of the year, as well as to his own individual score.

Much interest is expected to be centered about this meet, as more than forty men have already signified their intentions of entering, and many more are expected to report for workouts before the meet.

COLLINS SEEKS BETTER PUNTERS

Passing and Kicking Occupy Attention Of Coaches; Team Works Late.

Faced with the problem of uncovering a good punter, Coach Chuck Collins Tuesday spent a good portion of the afternoon in a punting session.

While the punters unlimbered their toes, 15 backfield men under the personal supervision of Coach Cerney went through a rigorous passing practice. The linemen spent more than an hour at blocking.

The Gamecocks, with a great team, will be giving everything for a victory Saturday, necessary to a proper celebration of their home-coming day festivities.

A hard-charging Gamecock line gives plenty of worry to opposing punters, and the fast-moving "Crip" Rhame gives still more on the punt returns unless the opposing kicker gets both distance and height and plenty of it.

Poor punting has given the Tar Heels more trouble than anything else all season. Georgia kept them with their backs to the wall largely because the Tar Heel punters couldn't make the proper connections.

Three Tar Heel punters last Saturday averaged only 27 yards and one punt, straight up, would have given N. C. State a score but for the stalwart holding of the Tar Heel line.

Such punting might be disastrous against a club as strong as South Carolina, and Coach Collins knows it.

Punting drills are following every scrimmage this week, and it's just possible the Tar Heels may display new power, and maybe a new face, in the kicking post Saturday.

Captain Ray Farris pulled out of the line to do most of the punting last year, and did a good job too. But Farris' withdrawal weakened the line no little bit, and, besides, the stalwart guard somehow hasn't been able to get his educated toe working just right this year.

The backs have been alternating at the job this season, with Ward, Branch, Jackson and Maus carrying the brunt of the burden. All these boys have been showing improvement this week, with others who may get a trial Saturday.

A peppy period of signal drills and a couple of turns around the field, the moon was well up in the sky and the Tar Heels called it a day.

Pete Wyrick, injured quarterback, took part in the drills, but won't be able to play against the Gamecocks. The rest of the team was in good shape and fine spirits.

HARRIERS WORK FOR MEET WITH DUKE ON FRIDAY

Wrenn Will Be Out Friday But Lowry Is Expected To Return To The Lineup.

Coach Dale Ranson is giving the Carolina harriers strenuous daily workouts in preparation for the dual meet with the Duke cross country teams Friday afternoon in Chapel Hill. Nothing is known about the strength of the Duke varsity except that Simons, outstanding runner, broke the Navy course record in the Navy-Duke meet two weeks ago.

The Tar Heel varsity stock took a decided drop this week with the announcement that Creighton Wrenn, varsity runner for three years, will be out for the rest of the season because of his confinement to the infirmary with mumps. Ranson is now busy finding a man to replace him and by Friday expects to have a capable substitute.

Lowry, varsity harrier, was unable to run in the State meet because of an abscessed tooth. However, he is expected to be in good shape for the meet with Duke.

TEAM MAY SHIFT ATTACK FOR GAMECOCK BATTLE SATURDAY

Rhame, Boineau, and Stoddard To Match Carolina's "Hundred Backs" In Annual Battle.

Since South Carolina so ironically made both of its touchdowns against the strong Clemson team on Clemson passes, North Carolina supporters are wondering no little bit about the kind of attack the Tar Heels will show when they meet the Gamecocks in Columbia Saturday.

Will Head Coach Chuck Collins take heed from the pass-intercepting activities of these Gamecocks and charge the Tar Heels to use a straight driving, line attack? Or will he disregard South Carolina's pass-busting proclivities, and order another aerial attack such as the Tar Heels featured against V. P. I. and again against N. C. State last Saturday?

The question is an open one. It's too early in the week to say. There was only the lightest of workouts Monday, to let sore best pass defenses in the South, according to all reports, and a shifted Tar Heel attack seems entirely probable.

South Carolina has one of the muscles regain their spring and flexibility. The squad drilled hard yesterday, but Coach Collins isn't to begin giving his men their special tricks for Saturday until this afternoon.

Boineau and Rhame converted Clemson passes into 75 and 80-yard touchdown sprints, and Citadel didn't get away with a thing hardly by the overhead route against the Gamecocks.

The Tar Heels, on the other hand, have one of the flashiest aerial attacks in the South. There are six letter halfbacks and a sophomore, all equally good, and three veteran fullbacks.

Halfbacks Magner, Maus, Ward and Jackson are all fine passers. Halfbacks Nash, Slusser and Erickson; Fullbacks Spaulding, House and Harden, and all the ends, are good receivers, and know how to air out after they take the pass.

R. B. VANCE WRITES BOOK FOR PRESS

A book in which is shown "the inevitable effects of the cotton system upon the human material concerned" and "a valuable social study" are among the descriptions that recent reviewers have given for one of the University press books, "Human Factors in Cotton Culture" by Rupert B. Vance, which was recently released.

Judging by the general tone of the numerous criticisms, Mr. Vance has made a considerable success of this book. Relying upon the results of his study with the University institute for research in social science, he seems to have come upon a new point of view from which he is able to present a comprehensive perception of the factors underlying the cultural constitution of the old and new south, dominated by King Cotton.

"That anybody is particularly to blame he does not say . . . but he shows how inevitably the 'cotton culture complex' results in poor diet, and therefore disease, in the enforced labor of women and children, speculative planting, uncertain and fluctuous income, low standards of living, and the increase of an irresponsible and mobile tenant class" is an observation made by Howard M. Jones of the University faculty in a literary column which is syndicated regularly through a group of some thirty periodicals in this section.

And in the New York Times we read: "Admitting the truth . . . of the dominance of cotton over southern life, he describes it as 'a kind of complex that has developed around the cotton plant' and his book is an attempt to discover and set forth just what that complex means in the life of the people, its causes, its strength, how it works and what are its results." Then, in conclusion, the New York writer commends the diligence of the author in seeking out the material for his volume, saying that "The ample documentation and the sixteen-page bibliography . . . show how extensive have been his investigations."

While in the Chicago Post the book is discussed as a valuable economic study rather than a literary accomplishment and is referred to as containing "an extremely interesting and unusual analysis of the southern economic system which centers in cotton growing, treating it from the historic, the technological and the sociological aspect."

Among the most extensive of the reviews is one written by Howard E. Jensen in the Christian Century for October 16. After summarizing and discussing some of the vital facts and contents of the volume, Mr. Jensen highly praises the methodology of Mr. Vance in treating his subject matter. He says in part: "His is no biased, 'one factor' explanation of social life. . . . it is to be hoped that his method may be further developed in other regional studies yet to come."

It is evident that this book is to be one of the most successful of the social study series published by the press.

MECHANICAL ENGINEERS TO PETITION A. S. M. E.

At a meeting of mechanical engineering students held last Thursday evening, a group was organized which will later in the year petition the American Society of Mechanical Engineers for a student chapter of the organization.

After the talks, which were the opening feature of the meeting, C. L. Petree, a senior in mechanical engineering, was elected temporary chairman of the organization.

Committees on Constitution and by-laws, nominations, and programs consisting of four members each, were appointed by the chairman. There is one member from each class on each of the committees.

The next meeting of the group will be called by the chairmen of the committees.

Y Cabinets Hear Professor Meyer

The three Y cabinets met Monday night at the Y at 7:15.

The freshman cabinet, Alex Webb presiding, opened its program with devotional exercises, after which Claude Farrell led in prayer. The roll was called and the minutes read. The president announced that there would be a call meeting of the three Y cabinets Thursday night at 7:15 in Bingham hall to hear Dr. A. Herbert Gray. After the business was taken up Aubrey Perkins introduced Joe Moore of State college who gave a short talk. The chairmen of the committees then made their reports. Claude Farrell, cabinet helper for the freshman council, gave an outline of a book, "What Is the Y. M. C. A.?" Aubrey Perkins then led a discussion on "What Is the Student Y Program?" It was decided to continue this discussion until next meeting. The meeting closed with a word of prayer.

In the sophomore cabinet Professor H. D. Meyer of the sociology department gave a very interesting talk. He took up three questions and discussed them fully. The questions that Professor Meyer discussed were: (1) In this age of socialization and individualization how may we best balance the two—the art of living and the art of living together? (2) Are we judging the purpose of the thing (above question) rather than the genuine value of it. (In the building of ideals are reactions deteriorating the individualness?"

After Professor Meyer's talk the cabinet elected Swift Boatwright as chairman of the Y entertainment committee. Grady Leonard then closed with a word of prayer.

The junior-senior cabinet, Jimmie Williams presiding, opened meeting with devotional exercises led by Beverly Moore. Mr. Comer then announced the call meeting of the cabinets in Bingham hall. After the discussion of business the meeting adjourned to hear Professor Meyer.

Intramural Games

Four of the six scheduled intramural games were forfeited yesterday. Pi Kappa Alpha won from Kappa Psi by a forfeit; Carr won from "G" by a forfeit; Sigma Nu won from Alpha Tau Omega by a forfeit; Delta Kappa Epsilon won from Phi Sigma Kappa by a forfeit; Pi Kappa Phi won over Kappa Psi 19 to 0; and Sigma Alpha Epsilon won over Sigma Phi Sigma 6 to 0.

The passing of Jimmie Williams was largely responsible for the three touchdowns of Pi Kappa Phi. For Kappa Alpha Wells was easily the star. He intercepted several passes and afforded the only threat of his team to score a second touchdown by returning an intercepted pass about 30 yards.

In the Sigma Alpha Epsilon-Sigma Phi Sigma game, the all-around work of Patterson was the feature.

The referees for these games were Whedbee, Jarman and Belton.

The schedule for today is as follows:

3:30—(1) Steele vs. Old East.
(2) Grimes vs. Old West.
(3) Manly vs. Lewis (J).

4:30—(1) Beta Theta Pi vs. Zeta Psi.
(2) Ruffin vs. Aycock (F)
(3) Steele vs. Mangum.

Community Chorus Meets In Gerrard

The regular meeting of the community chorus was held Monday night in Gerrard hall. This chorus is doing a great deal in the way of bringing the people of Chapel Hill in closer contact with the students of the University. The music lovers of Chapel Hill and the University form an organization in themselves. The chorus is exceedingly fortunate in having Dr. Harold S. Dyer, who is a member of the University music department, as director.

At the last meeting held last Monday night the acting officers for the year were elected. George Lawrence was unanimously elected president of the organization; of the executive committee Billy Hunt was elected to represent the University student body. Mrs. Lelita McCorkle was elected to represent the Community club, Professor C. J. McHale to represent the University, and Mrs. A. S. Wheeler as accompanist for the chorus.

Work on the Messiah which is to be put on by the chorus is still going on. If Memorial hall is not repaired in time for the recital some other place will be secured. The orchestra is to begin next week and a score of from 20 to 30 people are to be selected from the University symphony.

There is still much resentment here over Waggoner's act of defrauding our banks out of half a million dollars. It is considered bad form to leave this town with unspent money.—The New Yorker.

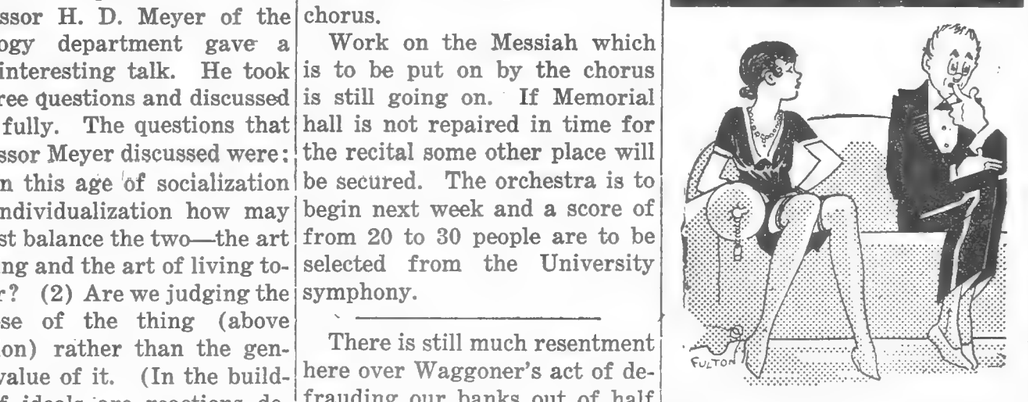
University Student Worries Over Loss

While the police department of Wilson is hurriedly tracing the license plate of a New York Chrysler car in which four highwaymen were apprehended early Sunday morning, at least one fellow on the campus is hoping that they are delayed for a few hours so that the Chapel Hill police department can get in touch with them before things begin to happen.

Some time during Friday night a license plate was stolen from Edward Eisenberg's Chrysler which was parked near the Raleigh road.

The Raleigh police and the proprietor of a Raleigh service station were in Wilson on Sunday afternoon and identified the men incarcerated there as the quartet that held up and robbed the station of $190 on Saturday night. It is conceivable that the robbers traveled through Chapel Hill on their way to Raleigh.



Eisenberg has communicated with the Chapel Hill police department and they are endeavoring to ascertain the number of the license plate of the robbers' car. Meanwhile Eisenberg lives in fear of being accused of something or other.

John R. Bird, of Boston, Mass., a graduate of Harvard last June, will leave soon for the Bay of Wales to join recruits for the Byrd Antartic expedition. He will assist with zoological work of the expedition.

Extra-Curricular Course In Retail Management Is Given

ing dormitory agents has met with great approval not only among the students in general, who are grateful at the elimination of the numerous door-tappings that they were heretofore subject to, but also among those students who are able to gain enough money for their formal college education and at the same time obtain a valuable education that is not in the curriculum.

His regiment saw service first in Belgium and was with the Thirtieth during both phases of the famous Somme offensive. It was in the first phase of the offensive that the Americans broke the Hindenburg line. The exercises this year will run only ten minutes into the eleven o'clock hour. So the classes of that hour will be able to assemble at 11:15 instead of at 11:30 as formerly.

U. D. C. Meeting

Mrs. G. K. G. Henry, president of the local chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, was hostess to the first meeting of the year. The plan of every member entertaining the chapter in her home was inaugurated, and met with great success—every meeting being asked for.

After the reports on the U. D. C. state convention had been read by Mrs. W. S. Bernard and Mrs. Henry Anderson, Mrs. Anderson presented the chapter with a picture of Gen. Robert E. Lee. This picture will later be hung in the University Y. M. C. A. building.

Each member of the local U. D. C. is asked to remember that in the future the meetings will be held the first Tuesday of each month at 3 o'clock.

Third Edition of American Caravan N w at Bulls Head

The Bulls Head book shop now has the third annual publication of the "American Caravan," a yearbook of the American literature containing the latest styles of prose, free verse and drama. England manifested much interest in the first issue and the styles presented by the American writers. The third edition, edited by Alfred Kreymborg, Lewis Mumford and Paul Rosenfeld, displays still better styles.

Among the contributers to this edition are two prominent North Carolinians: Paul Green and Joseph Mitchell.

Mr. Green was born in North Carolina and educated at the University. At present he is a member of the University faculty, but has been studying recently in Germany on the Guggenheim fellowship. He is expected to return to the University soon. One of his plays, "In Abraham's Bosom," was produced by the Provincetown theatre and won the Pulitzer prize in 1927. The Caravan also contains "Tread the Green Grass," a folk fantasy in three acts and two interludes with music and dumb-show. This is the first play in which Mr. Green has used this style and it has met with wonderful success. This play is to be produced by the Provincetown theatre during the coming season.

Joseph Mitchell was also educated in the University, graduating last year. He worked as assistant editor for the Carolina Magazine and his work was published in that magazine and the New Student.

The New American Caravan contains works of many recent authors throughout the United States.

Editor Of Tar Heel Desires Information

A "Readers' Opinions" letter signed "A Girl" has been received by the editor of the Daily Tar Heel. Although he desires to publish the communication, he cannot do so until informed of the correct initials and address of the anonymouse writer.

It is requested that the writer see the editor at the Tar Heel office this afternoon: or, if her maidenly modesty forbid this, that she furnish the necessary information via the telephone or anonymous writer.

"High Hats" and Otherwise

Again a Tar Heel team leaves for a game which has been played up by opposing sports writers in such a manner as to make the North Carolina team overconfident. Certain South Carolina papers have taken news despatches sent out by the University News Bureau and edited them in such a manner as to make the South Carolina players "fighting mad." In a recent despatch recounting past series between the Tar Heels and the Gamecocks, the words Tar Heels were changed to "High Hats." In another column in this paper a quotation is taken from the University of South Carolina's student paper dubbing the Tar Heels as "loquacious." All this is an obvious attempt to work the South Carolinians up for the game. A victory over the North Carolina team would boost South Carolina considerably in the Conference. A win for the Tar Heels is almost necessary as there is no reason for a loss. Too much stock should not be placed in the reports of the weakness of South Carolina. Whatever may be the team's weakness, Coach Laval will have those boys worked up for this game as for no other game this season. South Carolina wants to win. North Carolina should win.

First Issue of Law Review To Be Ready For Press Saturday

Student editors are completing final drafts for the first issue of the North Carolina Law Review which will go to press near the end of this week.

There has been a larger amount of acceptable material for the December Review than has usually been the case for the first issue. The final drafts of notes and comments on recent cases will soon be completed. The new assignments for investigation by the student editors will be issued immediately and the preparation for the second issue will begin as soon as the first goes to press. Arrangements are being made for the distribution of a certain number of copies to the lawyers in several of the neighboring states. In the past the Law Review has gone chiefly to the lawyers of North Carolina, libraries throughout the country, and other law reviews.

Y Cabinet Meeting

There will be a call joint cabinet meeting of the three Y cabinets tonight in Bingham hall 103. Rev. A. Herbert Gray will hold a discussion on the "Christian Adventure." All students other than cabinet members are invited to attend.

Latin Professors Publish Handbook

Press notices are beginning to appear concerning "A Handbook of Classical Mythology" by Professors George Howe and G. A. Harrer of the Latin department. This book was published last summer.

The book is a dictionary of Greek and Roman mythology arranged alphabetically. It contains articles about and identification of characters in the best known myths. The book is unique in that it is arranged alphabetically. There is such a book in German but this is the only one in English.

The Boston Evening Transcript says of it: "This little book fills a long felt want and does it in an almost perfectly satisfactory manner. . . . They have managed the difficult problem of inter-relationships and repitition in a thoroughly satisfactory manner. . . . The inner meaning of many of the grand old stories leaps surprisingly out at once in these condensed summaries. The authors have looked behind the mere legend and more than once have suggested the moral or the humor that was in the mind of the old story-tellers."

New Parisian Magazine Carries Slanguage Of 1929 For Students

(By Frank Manheim)

"Do horse-operas click with you or would you frigidaire them in favor of a flesh and blood angel who had a nice puddle-jumper and wasn't any wowser?"

If you can't read the above, and understand it, it is a confession that you are not keeping up with the slanguage of 1929. The sentence, if translated, would read, "Do western motion pictures agree with you or would you snub them in favor of a beauteous maiden of charm who had a nice automobile and who wasn't any blue-nosed reformer?"

These and many hundreds of other expressions have been published in the magazine Transition, printed in Paris. The purpose of it was to enable foreigners to keep on contact with the slang-of-the-moment. But the great majority of the terms are as strange to our own ears as they are to a Frenchman's or a German's. For instance, would you recognize "heap" to mean an automobile, or a "Spanish guitar" to mean a cigar? A partial listing of the words and expressions which may serve as an addenda to an English course is:

On the up-and-up: in good faith, aboveboard, true.
To lay an egg: collapse, flounder.
kiss-off: dismissal, farewell.
Horse-opera: western movie.
Puddle jumper: automobile.
To take it on the heel and toe: to depart.
To make whoopee: need that be explained?
Ticker and tape worm: Wall street broker.
Flicker: motion picture.
To ankle: walk, amble along.
To get the magoo: receive bad luck.
To tear a herring: to dine.
Gabbies, squawkies: talking motion pictures.
Welded, sealed: married.
Garbo-Gilberting: indulging in amorous pursuits.
Everything is copesetty: o. k.
Ironsides: corseted maiden.
Weeping willow: pillow.
Wind-sucker: braggart, boaster.
Bennie: overcoat.

Woollen Denies Change In 1930 Grid Schedule

Rumors That Gamecocks To Be Dropped; Graduate Manager Says That Shifts Are Being Made, But That Tar Heels May Still Meet South Carolina.

The following announcement has been released from Columbia, S. C.:

"The University of South Carolina will not play the University of North Carolina in football next year.

"Dr. R. K. Foster, director of athletics at the University of South Carolina, has received a telegram from the University of North Carolina authorities, advising that due to a switch of dates, there wiill be no place for the Gamecocks on the 1930 Tar Heel schedule. A two-year contract runs out this year."

Due to shifts in the tentative schedule for next year, the University of North Carolina will not be able to play the University of South Carolina next year on a date corresponding to this year's schedule, but, so far as North Carolina is concerned, the the two institutions may play provided they can agree on other dates, Charles T. Woollen, Graduate Manager at the University of North Carolina, said last night when questioned regarding reports that North and South Carolina would not meet in football next year.

Several shifts are being made in the North Carolina schedule, and each shift so affects the other teams to be played that none of the changes can be announced until the complete schedule is fixed and approved by the Athletic Council, Mr. Woollen stated.

Mr. Woollen would neither confirm nor deny rumors that the University was negotiating for games with Tennessee, Vanderbilt, Alabama, Florida, Notre Dame, Princeton, and a hundred and one other institutions.

"To make public our plans now would be manifestly unfair to other institutions on our schedule," Mr. Woollen said.

PRESIDENT CHASE GOES TO CHICAGO

Dr. Harry Chase, president of the University, left Tuesday afternoon for Chicago to attend several important meetings. The first is the meeting of the National Association of State Universities, of which Dr. Chase is president. The association will meet November 11th and 12th.

He will also attend a two-day meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Rosenwald Fund, of which board he is a member. While in Chicago Dr. Chase will attend the inaugural luncheon to President Hutchins of the University of Chicago. He will also be one of the speakers for the occasion, the other speakers are Secretary Wilbur of the Navy department, and Dean Laing of the University of Chicago.

Tickets for the United States Marine band concert are now on sale at the Y. M. C. A. office. All seats for the evening concert, except student tickets, are reserved seats on the main floor. Tickets should be secured in advance. The new heating system, plus the use of chairs, makes these seats in the Tin Can more comfortable than the benches in Memorial hall. Admission prices are as follows:

Evening—8:30 o'clock, Tin Can—students and school children, $1; others (all seats reserved), $1.50.

To Hold Supervised Study Experiment

An experimental supervised study class for a limited number of freshmen is to be conducted by a committee composed of Dr. M. R. Trabue, chairman, Dr. English Bagby, and Deans Hibbard, Carroll and Bradshaw. A group of 50 freshmen from the four academic schools will be invited by the deans of the schools. This group will hold one meeting a week during the rest of the quarter for supervised study. The purpose of this experiment, which has been authorized by the administrative officers of the University, is to discover the effect of such supervised study on scholastic achievement. Members of the various departments having freshman courses are actively cooperating in this program.

Graduate Students Examination Notice

The fall examination covering a reading knowledge of French for those who expect to become candidates for the doctor's degree will be given at 10:00 o'clock on Saturday morning, November 16, 1929, in Murphey 314; the corresponding examination in German will be held at 9:30 o'clock on Saturday morning, November 23, in Saunders 109. Students who expect to take either or both of these examinations this fall should leave their names in the Graduate Office by November 14.

Zimmerman To Speak At Debate Meeting

Professor Zimmerman will speak at the meeting of the debate squad tonight in 201 Murphey at 7:30. Owing to the fact that Carolina is to be represented on both sides of the disarmament question in coming debates, Professor Zimmerman will not confine his discussion to either side. The full statement of the query is: "Resolved, That the United States should advocate the disarmament of all armed forces, except those which are needed for police purposes."

All members of the squad who intend to compete in the tryout on the night of November 21 are expected to be present tonight.

Pharmacy Exam

The semi-annual examination of the North Carolina Board of Pharmacy will be held in the pharmacy building on November 26 and 27, for candidates applying for pharmacy license.

"Ars Gratia Artis"—And The Collegian

In the latest issue of the Carolina Magazine there appeared a short essay entitled "In Defense of Poetry." Such a piece comes at the right time and certainly at the right place. As the author remarked "poetry should need no defense," but on the campus not only poetry but all literature needs defense, vigorous defense. To the average undergraduate here Chaucer, Milton, Pope are merely names learned in English 3—and forgotten after the examination; Byron, Shelley, Keats are remembered perhaps, but never read; their names are familiar only because of the popular conception of them as libertines. The names of the Victorians are fainter; Browning (and only his name) is known; of the works of Rosseti, Arnold, Morris, Swinburne, the collegian is in utter ignorance. Of the existence of a modern poetry there seems to be no knowledge. The mention of vers libre or The Imagists is greeted with silence; the names of Lindsay, Frost, Sandburg, Amy Lowell, Fletcher, Sarett, of Masters, Robinson, T. S. Eliot, Millay, are unknown. As for actually reading "that sort of stuff" for enjoyment—perish the thought!

The collegian seems to have no understanding of literature whatsoever. The glorious and splendid panoply of life great authors present, the reading of which offers a constant and perrenial joy, is non-existent for him. He is puzzled by literature; he regards literary artistry as something which exists only for the esoteric pleasure it affords,—and he believes firmly that those whom this pleasure reaches only affect to enjoy it. A conception of "art for art's sake" in literature, in the faithful presentation of life, is utterly beyond him. The restraint and beautiful artistry of the French and Russian realists mean nothing to him; give him instead a copy of Liberty. A performance of opera? Instead, a musical comedy, a "leg" show. Faust? No, nothing at all rather than that. Dante's "The Divine Comedy"? Service, Guest, perhaps "The Sweet Singer of Michigan"; they represent his most sublime poetry. Al Jolson preferred to Shakespeare almost invariably.... From his shallow rut of inane complacency the collegian only occasionally even thinks about the matter; he turns to pursue again his infantile routine, such pleasures as he can enjoy mixed in with the pursuit of culture. He revels in the recreation afforded by the weekly football game and the daily picture show where, ironically enough, he gravely reads Ars Gratia Artis at the beginning of the picture. And that truly seems to be the height of his artistic conception; the painfully impossible acting of those glibly-termed "actors of the screen."

The Undergraduate And His Books

Text books are not the most attractive adjuncts to a college education from an undergraduate point of view, by any means. Indeed, many students regard them as necessary evils, things to be endured rather than utilized or enjoyed. Elective courses requiring expensive books and considerable reading are usually ignored at registration time.

A large proportion of the University undergrads sell their text books, not realizing, or disregarding, the actual and associational values that will be attached to these volumes after college days are over. Economic necessity forces some of the students to sell their books, but the vast majority can well afford to keep them.

Very fortunate are those who begin a collection of books during their early years and continue to add to it throughout their lives. Every volume has a distinctive charm of its own, recalls experiences and pleasant episodes which would otherwise be lost in the vagaries of memory. A personal library can become the most valued possession of any man, no matter how small or how large his means, even though it consist of only a dozen or so choice volumes.

In the modern era of mass education and factory-like institutions of higher learning, books have lost something of their charm and meaning. Far more likely are they to be regarded as dull compendiums of dry facts and unpalatable fiction, to be read only when absolutely necessary. A rebirth of undergraduate interest in books, a keener realization of the innate charm that a printed volume may come to possess for those who know and understand it, a renaissance of the personal library among students, would do more to overcome the evils of mass education than all the antidotes of the curricula experts.

Mooney-Billings Up Again

That the wheels of justice grind exceedingly slow and fine is the weight of an old maxim. Dean Inge is of the belief that truth does not always win in the long run, and there have been cases in history which bear him out in this; it is something to think about, at least.

Now, the straight-forward and liberal governor of California, Governor C. C. Young, has re-opened the Mooney-Billings trial. The two men were convicted, if you remember, thirteen years ago in a reactional hysteria directed against the bolsheviki.

To those who have not read of the affair, a suit-case of bombs was exploded as a preparedness-day parade was passing the corner of Stewart and Market streets in San Francisco July 22, 1916. Because of their radical activities, Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings were sentenced to death and life imprisonment respectively upon circumstantial evidence. Governor Stephens later commuted Mooney's sentence to life imprisonment.

For thirteen years the two prisoners have been the center of a storm of protest that has been entered into by practically all the civilized countries of the world. Since the trial, it has been discovered that the chief witness against the condemned men, Frank C. Oxman, was guilty of attempted subornation of witnesses in an attempt to collect a $17,000 reward. This fact alone has led the trial judge, Franklin A. Griffin, to join the movement to free the prisoners. Nine of the ten surviving jurors have allied themselves with the movement. John B. Densmore, director of employment for the United States, in a report to the Secretary of Labor at the time of the trial said that the explosion cases were "tainted with manufactured evidence."

Whether Governor Young will have the courage to release the men, is a matter of conjecture. There are still some bigots to whom circumstantial evidence is convicting, and the question is whether Governor Young, the politician, will be strong enough to obey the dictates of the reason of Governor Young, the man. The Governor has given the state of California a just, liberal, and able administration. He now has the opportunity to erase a very large blot from the escutcheon of the state. Justice demands the release of Mooney and Billings; most people desire it, and we believe Governor Young, as a thinking and reasonable man, can do no less than give to these two the freedom that has been withheld from them for the past thirteen years.

The Campus

By Joe Jones

A little less than 30 years ago there came to Chapel Hill a young professor of botany who had not been here long before he was possessed of a fair vision, a dream. Moreover, he was newly out of Johns Hopkins with a doctor's degree and a great deal of that youthful fire which a man must have to make the dream come right.

Now the beginning of the matter was a five-acre tract of boggy swamp land which lay on the immediate eastern borders of the campus. This noisome area was known as Governor Swain's pasture, and no good thing came out of it. Several attempts had been made to drain the place, only to be given up each time as a hopeless task. The sterile fen seemed invincible.

"Some day I shall transform this incurable blemish into a thing of beauty," was the dream of the young professor of botany. Then he began to work. He won the consent and encouragement of Dr. Battle. He planned and had dug a labyrinth of drainage trenches such as the old swamp had never before experienced, and bit by bit the bog was reclaimed. There was already a sparse growth of yellow willows and swamp gums, and to these were added other species that flourish in sour soil. Finally, after years of drainage and renovation of the soil the young botanist was able to introduce enough shrubbery and trees to make the place appear a park rather than a swamp. A system of paths supplemented the transformation and completed the first stage of the Augean task. Meanwhile the skeptic Hillians were beginning to say, "Well, maybe this fellow can do something with that old swamp, after all."

Then came the patient years of growth and caretaking; pruning mowing, delving, planting, spraying. A steadfastness of purpose and a scientific knowledge of what he was about fitted the professor for the labor. With little encouragement he had been working against great odds, had used money from his own pocket and plants from his own nursery; but backed by the favorable results of his early labors he enlisted the interest of alumni and friends of the University, and so continued toward his goal—a University arboretum, a collection of native and foreign trees, shrubs and plants.

More than 25 years have elapsed since Dr. William C. Coker dreamed this dream and set out single handed to accomplish its fulfillment. Concerning his success let the arboretum bear mute and eloquent witness.

Where once the hellgramite and terrapin dragged their slimy lengths there now creep periwinkle, and grill-o'er-the-ground, and trillium; and a bed of fern clothes the spot where the tadpoles swam. Where mosquitoes swarmed above reeds and sawgrass now sing woodthrush and mockingbird from the dogwood branch, and in spring there is a mingled fragrance of wistaria, and magnolia, and wild plum where of yore was only the swamp's stench. The morass is become a shaven lawn; the despised slough is become a lovers' trysting place. Trees from the earth's far places are here, and plants from the islands of the sea: tansy from the kitchen gardens of France, barberries and flowering quince from Japan, paper-blossomed althea trees from India, roses from Cathay, wormwood from Europe, sage plants from Mexico, a sage palm from Java, parsley plants from the shores of the Mediterranean, and castor-oil plants from Africa and Persia. Of evergreens there are pines, and firs, spruce and hemlock, junipers and arbor vitae, cedars, balsam, and cypress from all over the world. There are flowers and flowering shrubs innumerable, and of vines a great host—both of forms native and forms foreign. In a sheltered corner, upon a trellis especially erected for it, clambers that most native plant, yellow jasmine, symbol of the south. The final proof of Dr. Coker's conquest of the swamp is a healthy bed of prickly pear cactus transplanted from the desert sands.

Emily Rose Knox To Appear In Raleigh

University students and members of the faculty who remember Emily Rose Knox, who in past years has been a great favorite among musicians, will be interested to know that Miss Knox is giving a special concert at Raleigh on November 18.

Professor Frank P. Graham, in recalling today her past performances in Gerrard hall, told of her gracious custom of playing several additional numbers on the front steps of the building after the regular performance was over. People leaving the hall would stop with feet poised on running boards of automobiles to listen. Someone wrote a poem to her entitled "The Angel in the Doorway."

Her home is in Raleigh. Miss Henrietta Smeeds, librarian in the rural economics department, is her aunt.

Former Baseball Star Is Married

Tom C. Coxe, Jr., of the class of 1929 was married to Miss Behan yesterday afternoon at Edenton. A large number of people were present at the ceremony, among them "Mac" Gray and George Shepard of the University.

Tom Coxe will be remembered as star baseball player for three years. He achieved a reputation in his sophomore year for hitting homeruns. He was interested in many campus activities and was a member of the Kappa Sigma fraternity. He is now working and living in Bennettsville, S. C.

Bridge Party

Mrs. Charles T. Woollen entertained at her home Wednesday afternoon and night for the benefit of the Lucy Payne circle of the Episcopal Auxiliary. Fourteen tables of bridge were sold during the afternoon and evening.

Mrs. Woollen was assisted in serving the refreshments by Mesdames Anderson, Connor, Dey, Emory, Foerster, Mangum, Hoeffer, Bernard and Hobbs.

Mortar Exhibit

The pharmacy school recently achieved a large old mortar which was donated by H. L. Hicks of Raleigh.

Formerly, when there were no drug mills, the druggist, with the aid of a large mortar and pestle, ground his own crude drugs. This mortar is a relic of those days. It was used in the Williams and Hayward drug store, one of the best known old drug houses in North Carolina. It is about 18 inches across and 12 inches deep. It is hewn from solid stone and weighs about 90 pounds.

This mortar is on exhibit at the museum of the pharmacy building. The school is seeking to secure exhibits of this type to show early day methods of the drug store.

Walker In New York

Dean N. W. Walker left yesterday afternoon for a business trip to New York. He will probably return sometime Saturday.

Collins Drilling Team Against Cock Offensive

Freshmen Run South Carolina Plays Against Varsity; Injured Men About Ready.

Coach Chuck Collins yesterday began setting the Tar Heel defense lines for the South Carolina game at Columbia Saturday.

The first two clubs showed proficiency at stopping the deceptive Gamecock plays, run by freshman outfits, and every man on the squad got a look-in on the dummy scrimmage.

The freshmen adapted the Gamecock "baits" and "crossbucks" and "fakes" well. They got away several times, but the varsity was intercepting about as many passes as the frosh were completing, and the gains diminished noticeably as the afternoon wore on.

Coach Collins was pleased with the showing, but far from satisfied, and intimated the same procedure would be repeated today.

The Tar Heel squad is to entrain for Columbia tonight, which seems to indicate the Tar Heel mentor is fairly well satisfied with his offense, with its 32-point average a game, and thinks defense is the important thing against the flashy Gamecocks.

Only three men graced the injured, non-working bench yesterday, and of these Jim Magner, ground-gainer halfback ace, and "Puny" Harper, gigantic reserve tackle of 78 inches and 220 pounds, are expected to be all right for Saturday. The third was Pete Wyrick, veteran quarterback, who is definitely out.

Psychology Dope Handed Gamecocks

When the Tar Heels invade the South Carolina football lair Saturday they will have to beard a team that has been doped full of psychology.

Down Columbia way they are telling the South Carolina players that the Tar Heels are "High Hats," that the boys from the Old North State are expected to roll up a big score with ease, and things of that sort. All of of which is calculated, in the view of observers here, to arouse the South Carolina team to such a high fighting pitch that the Palmetto boys will put forth extraordinary effort to win the game Saturday.

This "High Hat" dubbing seems a bit strange to the Tar Heels. It's the first time they have been accused of "high hatting" anybody. They consider the Gamecocks worthy foes, and are expecting the South Carolina game to be one of the toughest assignments of the season.

The Tar Heels, however, are not taking the "high hat" stuff very seriously. They recognize it as a good dose of psychology, and they are planning to offset it with a psychology of their own concoction.

Erickson Hits Stride

Chuck Erickson, original broken-field king of a fine array of Tar Heel backs, came into his own against N. C. State Saturday for the first time since the opening game of the season and should be in fine shape for Saturday's tilt with South Carolina. Erickson made a 67-yard touchdown sprint with one of Maus' passes against State, and snagged a State pass for another 71 yard gain. He holds what is considered a record for the broken-field artists—a record of having reversed his field four times and crossing a goal line without having been touched, performed in the Tar Heels' season opener with Wake Forest.

Novice Track Meet To Be Substituted For Old Cake Race

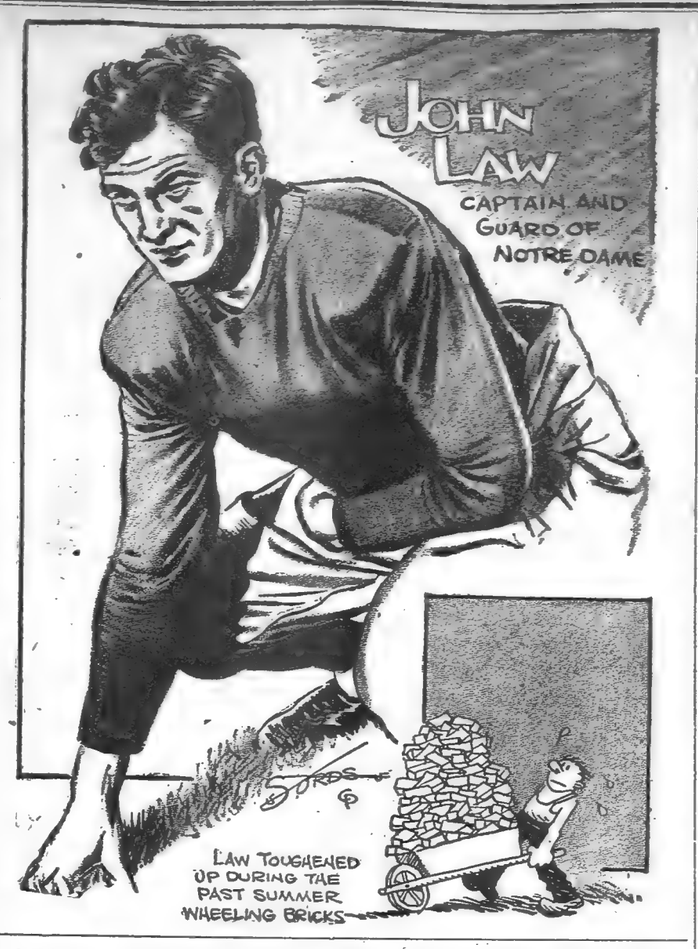
Until last fall the intramural department held a cake race annually. A hundred cakes donated by the people of Chapel Hill were offered as prizes to the first hundred men finishing the run. At the beginning of last year's intramural program this contest was discontinued because it was the general concensus of opinion that many men who were physically unable to stand the long grind competed and as a result injured themselves. The discovery of a few potential track men was about the only benefit derived from the race other than the pleasure it afforded the competitors. In its stead last fall the department conducted a series of track and field tests among the members of the freshman gym classes. These proved a success but this year under the direction of Bo Shepard the department will hold a novice track meet and discontinue the track and field tests among the freshmen.

The meet will be held this afternoon on Emerson field. All dormitory teams and fraternity teams are eligible to enter as well as individuals. The meet will be open only to men who have not seen varsity competition in track. About 40 men have entered already and the intramural department urges those interested to report on the field this afternoon. Points scored in the meet will be credited on the individual's record which is kept during the year to determine the winner of the Grail award which is given to the best all-round intramural athlete. In addition to this the points will be credited on the team scores which will also be recorded on the intramural books and will count towards the winning of the team award for the highest number of points scored by a team in all types of intramural sports during the entire scholastic year. This year is the first that this award has been offered and to date the competition for it is strong, several groups having entered teams in every tag football game.

The meet this afternoon will be something new in the sport line here. Much interest has been evinced and a large number of entrants are expected. Ribbons will be given for first, second and third places in each event.

Intramural Games

For the first time in several days, all of the scheduled intramural games were disposed of yesterday. Beta Theta Pi won from Zeta Psi 25 to 0. Manly won from "J" 1 to 0. "F" won over Ruffin 13 to 0. Steele, with two scheduled games, won from Old East 1 to 0, and from Mangum six first downs to two.



Anderson starred for Beta Theta Pi with two touchdowns to his credit. Waddell and Wall with a touchdown apiece also did good work for the Beta's.

In the Steele-Mangum game the feature was the blocking of the entire Steele team.

The schedule for today is as follows:

3:30—Pi Kappa Phi vs. Sigma Nu.
New Dorms vs. Graham (G).
Alpha Tau Omega vs. Delta Kappa Epsilon.

4:30—Phi Sigma Kappa vs. Sigma Alpha Epsilon.
Sigma Phi Sigma vs. Sigma Chi.
Chi Phi vs. Kappa Psi.

LAVAL EXPECTED TO OPEN BAG OF TRICKS SATURDAY

South Carolina Coach Noted For Tricky Football; Has Shifty And Speedy Offensive.

The Tar Heels are obviously expecting Coach Billy Laval to open up a great bag of tricks when North and South Carolina clash at Columbia Saturday in the annual classic "Battle of the Carolinas."

And if the Tar Heels aren't ready with a well-planned and sustained defense against these tricks, it certainly won't be due to the fault of Dr. Chuck Collins, head of the department of football here.

The Tar Heel mentor started defensive work at the beginning of the week and has kept the Tar Heels hard at it every day.

Part of the squad might be blocking or passing or scrimmaging, but one team could almost always be seen down in a remote corner of the field working at dummy scrimmaging against the tricky Gamecock plays.

Coach Laval would just about as soon win this Tar Heel engagement as the South Carolina title. For one thing, Saturday will be home-coming day down at South Carolina, and alumni demand victories for such occasions. For another, because the Tar Heels have always held such a big edge on the Gamecock series.

And Coach Laval is noted as one of the trickiest coaches in football. Laval never played football—if you except playing on kid teams on the backlots of his native town—but he turned out many fine teams and brilliant players while at Furman. He moved all his trickery and colorful ruses to the Gamecocks last fall, and, opening with an entirely unexpected victory over Chicago, developed a great team, and an even greater one this season.

With a great crew of backs led by Rhame, Boineau, Stoddard and Zobel, he has developed a flashy, shifty and tricky offensive that is hard to stop. The Gamecocks showed plenty when they licked Citadel, but that was ten days ago, and Laval has had plenty of time to concoct all sorts of new tricks. The Tar Heels may well get their defense lines set.

RULES FOR TRACK MEET ANNOUNCED

Intramural Contest to Take Place This Afternoon In Emerson Stadium.

The novice track meet, scheduled for this afternoon, will be held on Emerson field at 3:30, according to the latest announcement from the office of the intramural athletic association, which is sponsoring the meet. All interested students who have not yet reported to the officials of the meet are urged to report this afternoon and take part in the afternoon's events.

A list of rules and regulations governing the meet has been announced also, and follows:

All men entering the meet will report to the clerk of course, who will occupy a table inside the main gate on Emerson field, in order to be enrolled officially as competing in the meet. They must also indicate to the clerk of course the events they expect to enter.

The participants in the field events, which begin at 3:30, may enter these events any time up until 4:15. The performance of each man will be recorded after he has had three trials, and he may then pass on to the next event in which he wishes to participate.

All men taking part in the pole vault and high jump beginning at 4:15 must report at that time to the pits where those events are being held. It is necessary that all entrees in these events begin their trials at the same time.

The track events will be run at the exact time indicated on the schedule.

When registering each man will be expected to indicate the organization to which he desires his points to be credited.

The intramural officials have also announced that attractive stamped ribbons will be presented to the individual winners of first, second and third places immediately after the completion of each event.

The schedule for the meet is as follows:

Field events: 3:30—shot, javelin, discus, broad jump; 4:15—pole vault, high jump.

Track events: 4:00—50 yard dash; 4:15—120 yard low hurdles; 4:30—100 yard dash.

The literature department of the Community club met Tuesday night in the social rooms of the Methodist church. Mrs. George Howe read and discussed the play "Lilion." Mrs. Howe, when in New York several years ago, received favorable comment on her criticism of this play.

(By "Crawf" MacKethan)

Carolina has been often called the abode of the sophisticated; some have even been bold enough to call her student body a mass of conceited ignorance; in fact for the past several years we have been classed under just about every imaginable name—but here is a new one, and coming from a source where we expected only fraternal love and benevolent thoughts. Did you know that finally we have become THE LOQUACIOUS TAR HEELS? As near as I can figure out, loquacious means to rattle, shriek or shout; in fact we are nothing else but garrulous. At least that is what the South Carolina Gamecock had to say about us in one of its most recent issues. Duty compells that we give nothing but the facts: "THE LOQUACIOUS TAR HEELS, who usually do more talking than playing, appear to have at least built up a real formidable football team this year. With decisive victories over Ga. Tech and V.P.I., to their credit, they are being press-agented to the skies by an enterprising news bureau and at least two of their mainstays, Branch and Farris, seem destined for all southern berths this year." Our only answer can be; more power to you, Gamecocks, you will need it Saturday.

"All the world's a gridiron" is a phrase which might easily be used up and down the nation today; however, the scenery for the next acts and the new stages are even now being constructed. Even at this early date the stage hand is looking around for the rope which before so very many weeks will be used to ring down the gridiron curtain. Even now on different portions of the campus, squads of men are practicing, unheralded and seemingly unnoticed; and yet almost before we will realize it the product of their many hours of tedious grind will be presented to us in the form of a Carolina team. How many of you men that are looking forward to the coming basketball games know that daily in the Tin Can a squad of men under Coach Ashmore are being builded and moulded into a team?

Each afternoon if you will walk across Emerson field you will see here and there a weight man or a hurdler or some form of trackman patiently whipping himself into shape for meets which may be months in the distance.

Across the road over on the tennis court, the varsity courts are the scene of daily struggle and preparation for tournaments which may as yet not even be scheduled.

The team that will meet the Gamecocks Saturday is the nearly finished product derived from practices held some six or seven months ago during spring practice.

The Blue Devils of Duke will descend from the skies this coming week-end, and, according to Fred Haney over on the Durham Herald, proceed to take on opposition of their own level. He further predicts that when Carolina and Duke hook up December 7, that he will be watching the state championship played off. Football fans especially throughout North Carolina are going to be watching with intense interest Duke's showing against her Tar Heel and Southern rivals. A good bit of talk has been spread about concerning the ability of Jimmy Dehart as a coach, but, along with Haney, we are strong for holding off such criticism until the Blue Devils have met up with teams which are supposed to be in her class.

COACHES UNCOVER RESERVE PLAYERS

Carolina Plans to Send Full Strength Against Gamecocks.

With Saturday's game with South Carolina looming as tough as any left on the schedule, Tar Heel eyes are turning no little bit to possibilities of reserve strength.

The coaches went a-hunting for just this sort of thing last Saturday and found quite a bit. North Carolina was rated big favorites over N. C. State. Head Coach Chuck Collins took advantage of the fact by running his first string as a unit for only one quarter in a game in which he used a total of 38 men.

The reserve backs accounted for four of five touchdowns. The reserve linemen held the Wolfpack almost like the veterans.

Tar Heel scouts report that the Gamecocks have a great team, and what's more, a fighting team. The concensus of opinion is that the Tar Heels will need all the reserve strength they can muster.

Jimmy Maus and Chuck Erickson, letter halfbacks, run too regularly to be classed as reserves, and both showed so much stuff Saturday that they are being counted on against South Carolina.

Maus, peer of the Tar Heel passers, heaved two touchdown passes, completed several others for substantial gains, and pulled several flashy runs as well.

Erickson, broken field ace, took one of Maus' heaves for a 67-yard sprint and touchdown through the whole Wolfpack, and a few minutes later snagged a Wolfpack pass for a 71-yard broken field run to the shadow of the Wolfpack goal.

The whole second string line, which started the game, played good ball, along with several reserves who broke in later.

Theron Brown, sophomore end; George Thompson and Gavin Dortch, tackles; and Red Gilbreath, smashing sophomore center, had the especial honors. Showing up well also were Nelson, end; Harper and Rose, tackles; and Crew, guard.

Di Initiates Nine

The meeting of the Dialectic Senate Tuesday night was given over to the third regular initiation of the year with the following nine men being granted membership: Conrad, Snider, Parker, Hayes, Adams, Barrett, Ramsay, Kenan, and Dratler. Short and humorous speeches by each of the new senators featured.

A motion was placed on the floor and carried to adjourn in favor of a smoker due to the amount of time consumed in initiations.

The two resolutions on the calendar are carried over until the next meeting for discussion together with two bills introduced at this meeting.

Following adjournment, certificates were presented to all new members taken in this quarter. All new members wishing to enter the tryouts for the Mary D. Wright debate reported.

Gamecocks Celebrate Home - Coming Event

South Carolina celebrated Home-coming Day when the Gamecocks played the Tar Heels in 1927, and the Gamecocks showed off by sending the Tar Heels back on the short end of a 14-6 count. The Gamecocks will be celebrating Home-coming Day again Saturday, but Tar Heel supporters are hoping it will not be the same sort of celebration.

Brown Looks Good

Theron Brown, Tar Heel sophomore, is being counted one of the finest end prospects seen here in years. The big boy has been breaking in the lineup consistently, has played jam-up, all round games, and has scored twice on passes. The big boy stands a little over 6 feet 1, weighs 180, and is said to have the best build of any of the Tar Heel ends. He hails from Greensboro.

PHI ASSEMBLY VOTES FOR RELIGION SCHOOL

In its regular meeting Tuesday night the Phi assembly decided that the University should establish a school of religion and give college credit for its courses. This bill was upheld on the grounds that at present University students are being trained in every side of life except the spiritual side and that this division of education is greatly needed. A philosophical type of religion was proposed, dealing with only the broader aspects of Christian science. It was pointed out that the University recognizes such a division of scholastic training, but at present it exists only in name and is not in a functioning position. The opponents of this bill held that some biasness and sectionalism was certain to enter any attempt to teach the principles of Christianity. They further held that the state would make protests against any attempt on the part of the University to establish such a school.

Representative Wilkinson reported that it had been decided to limit the individual time of each speaker in the Mary D. Wright debate to fifteen minutes with a rebuttal of five minutes. The Phi will hold its tryouts for this debate the last Tuesday before Thanksgiving.

GEORGE HOWE SPEAKS AT GREENSBORO MEETING

George Howe, professor of Latin, delivered the principal address of the evening at the annual meeting of the Greensboro Teachers district in Greensboro yesterday.

Dr. Howe spoke on "Virgil's Choice of a Subject," comemorating the 200th anniversary of the birthday of the great Latin scholar and poet.

Playlikers Please

Greensboro, Nov. 7.—(Special) — Excellent scenic and sound effects and some good acting were evident in the Playlikers' production of "Children of the Moon," Martin Flavin's drama offered for the approval of the public Saturday evening at Aycock auditorium, North Carolina college. The bill was the first regular presentation of the collegiate actors this season.

Important roles in the play were carried by Misses Eloise Banning of Raleigh, Vera Buckingham of Fayetteville and Ruth Abbott of this city. The three are students. Other performers, drawn from the college faculty and from the citizenry of Greensboro, were W. R. Taylor and A. T. West of the faculty, James Hoge, H. G. Mitchell and H. S. Gifford of this city.

Playlikers will next produce the comedy "White Collars" by Edith Ellis, a contribution which they expect to have ready December 14.

Va. Never Won Here

North Carolina's Tar Heels will be defending an undefeated tradition when Virginia comes to Chapel Hill for the annual Thanksgiving classic this year. The Carolina-Virginia games have been played here since 1919. There have been two ties, but the Tar Heels have yet to bow to the Cavaliers on the home field.

3 S. C. Boys On Team

There will probably be three South Carolinians in the Tar Heel lineup that starts against South Carolina in Columbia Saturday. Strud Nash, right halfback; Jimmy Ward, left halfback; and Bud Eskew, right guard, are all native South Carolinians, and all rate ace high with the Tar Heels.

MISS VIRGINIA HARRIS MARRIES WESLEY IDOL

The marriage of Miss Virginia Harris of Los Angeles, Calif., and Wesley A. Idol of High Point was solemnized Saturday morning at 11 o'clock at the Chapel of the Cross. Rev. C. E. Buxton, rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal church of Greensboro, officiated, assisted by the rector of the chapel, Rev. A. S. Lawrence.

Miss Elizabeth Cowan of Statesville, student at North Carolina college, soloist, and Nelson O. Kennedy, of the University music department, organist, furnished wedding music. Miss Cowan sang "O, Perfect Love." Mr. Kennedy used the chorus from Lohengrin as a prowedding march as a recessional.

Dr. Lyons of the University, brother of the bride, gave her in marriage. She was attended by a maid of honor, Miss Margaret Henderson of Monroe. John Idol of High Point, student at the University, served as his brother's best man. Ushers were Lewis J. Fisher, Jr., of High Point, and Percy Idol of High Point, University student.

PHARMACY FRATERNITY PLACES CHAPTER HERE

An announcement has been received by the pharmacy school that the national chapter of the Rho Chi has authorized the establishment of a local chapter at the University.

As Rho Chi has only ten chapters in this country University officials are gratified with the decision of the fraternity to establish a chapter here.

The pharmacy school has been petitioning this society since last March. The charter was granted in October.

The chapter will be installed sometime this month with about ten charter members to be initiated.

University Women To Meet in Durham

On Sunday afternoon, November 10, at 3 o'clock at the Washington Duke hotel Dr. Katherine McHale, acting director and national chairman of the A. A. U. W., will meet the representatives of the local North Carolina branches of the A. A. U. W. Dr. McHale will be in Durham to meet the executive board of the Southern Woman's Educational Alliance and will remain over especially to discuss with members of the A. A. U. W. the unit organization of the million dollar fellowship drive as well as general A. A. U. W. activities. It is planned to have present representatives from the ten North Carolina branches: Asheville, Chapel Hill, Charlotte, Durham, Greensboro, Greenville, High Point, Raleigh, Statesville and Winston-Salem. Luncheon will be served at $1.25 per plate for those who desire it.

QUARTET OF SOLOISTS TO APPEAR WITH BAND

Captain Taylor Branson, the famous leader of the United States Marine Band, which plays here Nov. 14, has made a careful study of program building, and the concerts this year introduce a number of the distinguished batonist's novel and spectacular arrangements. It is understood that a great many selections which, a few years ago, were considered unadaptable for band rendition are included in the program this season. That is because of a more perfect band instrumentation and a better understanding of acoustics. So music lovers will be treated to a real thrill when they recognize many of their favorite overtures and symphonies on the programs of the United States Marine Band. And those who love martial music will also find a pleasing medley of airs to stir and stimulate them. Even modern music—at its best, of course—is not forgotten on these wonderfully varied programs which include almost every type of composition. As Capt. Branson remarks, "Some of the best musicians and organizations fail to please because of the programs they select. . . .I learned early in my career that the finest musicianship is wasted on anything but a program which is built from the public's viewpoint."

An outstanding feature of the United States Marine Band concerts this year will be a quartet of distinguished soloists. Never before have such famous musicians been assembled and presented in the programs of the United States Marine Band. Arthur Witcomb, whose silver cornet has thrilled thousands on two continents, and who is second leader of this premier organization, will appear as a soloist this year. Such familiar artists as Robert Clark, John P. White and Wilbur D. Kieffer will also be heard in the two concerts here.

To obtain the "President's Own" in concert engagement is no small achievement, as their tour is limited and not many cities can be points of call.

"FLIGHT" COMBINES ADVENTURE AND LOVE

"Flight," the Columbia all-talking aviation special which opened at the Carolina Theatre last night is a mighty drama of adventure in the sky featuring the most sensational air feats ever photographed. A capable cast including Jack Holt and Ralph Graves, one of the screen's favorite teams, Lila Lee, Harold Goodwin, Jimmy De La Cruze and Alan Roscoe handle their roles with skill and artistry.

Loops, tail-spins and Immelman turns provide thrills galore for aviation enthusiasts. Fundamentally an aerial production, a beautiful and poignant love story is told against the background of breathtaking manoeuvers among the clouds.

"Lefty" Phelps, enacted by Ralph Graves, driven by shame to leave college because of a bonehead reverse football play, joins the marine aviation service. He wins the sympathy and friendship of "Panama" Williams, the hardboiled Marine sergeant (Jack Holt). Their friendship is disrupted temporarily when they both fall in love with the same girl. This situation leads to an intensely dramatic conclusion.

Battle scenes between the Nicaraguan insurgents and the American marines are tremendously realistic and thrilling. Colorful sequences are laid in the exotic atmosphere of Nicaraguan cabarets where Spanish singers and dancers hold forth.

Here is one of the rare achievements in motion pictures—a good story, excellent acting, fine direction and tense and awe-inspiring situations. Good entertainment.

This great picture will be shown again today.

Engineers Return

The class of civil engineers which attended the ninth annual convention of the North Carolina section of the American Water Works association at High Point returned to Chapel Hill Tuesday night.

At the convention the class heard lectures and speeches from outstanding engineers of North Carolina and visited the various exhibits by the manufacturers on display at the Sheraton hotel.

At one o'clock it was given a barbecue dinner by the city of High Point at the dam of the municipal water supply lake. After the dinner the class inspected the High Point water purification and sewerage plant which is one of the most modern in the state.

Wednesday morning at nine o'clock Mr. Thorndike Saville addressed the convention on "The distribution and variation of annual rainfall in North Carolina."

"Good News" Coming

Laurence Schwab, himself a graduate of Harvard, together with Bud De Sylva, an alumnus of Broadway and Tin Pan Alley, wrote the book for "Good News," the collegiate musical comedy that comes to the Carolina Theatre in Durham on Wednesday, November 13. Lew Brown contributed the lyrics, and that popular composer, Ray Henderson, whose "Black Bottom" created a sensation in George White's "Scandals" several seasons ago, furnished the music. The lively dance steps and gyrations were arranged by Bobby Connolly. One of the big dance hits is "The Varsity Drag." There are many songs of a tuneful nature, including "Lucky in Love," "Good News" and "The Best Things in Life are Free."

The company is a large one approximating 100 people, and includes Jack McDonell, Dorothy Lewellyn, Kathleen Kidd, Audrey Cristie, Phillip Conyers, Geo. Bogues, Edward J. Gunn, Irving S. Carpenter, Joan Page, Helen Carroll and Edwin Michaels, together with a large singing and dancing ensemble and George Olsen's famous "Good News" band, with Tick Wardell directing.

"Eyes" for blind flying!
Three new G-E contributions to the conquest of the air
LINDBERGH, flying blind much of the way, hit Ireland "on the nose" as he winged toward Paris. Now, as an aid to air navigation comes the magneto compass, a product of General Electric research, which gives pilots a navigating instrument of extraordinary accuracy.
Meanwhile, two other General Electric contributions to aviation have been developed—the electric gasoline gauge and the radio echo altimeter. The ordinary altimeter shows only height above sea level. The radio echo altimeter warns the pilot of his actual distance above ground or water by flashing green, yellow, and red lights on the instrument board.
Every year hundreds of college-trained men and women enter the employment of General Electric. Research, similar to that which developed "eyes" for blind flying, is one of the many fields of endeavor in which they play an important part.

ELMER HALL TO GIVE READING

Technical Director of Playmakers Give Reading of "Journey's End."

Elmer Hall, technical director of the Carolina Playmakers, will give a reading of R. C. Sheriff's play, "Journey's End," Sunday night at 8:30 at the Playmaker theatre.

This is the second of a series of readings given annually by the Playmakers. The first was a reading of Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew" by Professor Frederick Koch.

Mr. Hall stated that due to the length of the play he originally meant to cut it, but that he had decided that to secure a proper interpretation it would be necessary to read the entire play.

"Journey's End" has attracted wide attention. It was at first intended for an amateur production, but critics soon hailed it as a great play. Until it was written no one had, according to many critics, capably expressed the late war.

"In contrast to the bawdiness of 'What Price Glory'," Mr. Hall stated, "'Journey's End' presents the war from a gentleman's standpoint."

The public is invited to attend the reading.

TEACHERS ATTEND RALEIGH MEETING

The north central district meeting of the North Carolina Education Association, which will meet at Raleigh today, will be attended by several members of the training school department of the school of education. This gathering of high school and grammar school teachers throughout this district will also be attended by most of the teachers of Chapel Hill High.

The general session of all the representatives in the Raleigh district will be held this morning and tonight, while meetings of the various departments of the association will be held this afternoon at two o'clock.

Among the University's representatives, Professor M. R. Trabue, of the school of education, will deliver a lecture to the grammar grade teachers on the topic, "Characteristics of Successful Instruction in Grammar Schools." Professor Giduz has been asked by the president of the Modern Languages section of the state association to act as chairman for the formation of a local section of this department in the Raleigh district, and will be engaged in the organization of this work during the meeting.

Other members of the training school department of the school of education who will be present at this meeting and assist at the work are Professors Farrar, King, Gwynn, Munch, and Preston.

M. R. TRABUE TO ATTEND EDUCATIONAL MEETING

Professor M. R. Trabue, director of educational research in the school of education, who will speak at the district meeting of the North Carolina Education Association at Raleigh today, will leave immediately after the adjournment of this meeting to attend a meeting of the national committee on visiting teachers. The meeting of this committee, of which Professor Trabue has been a member for some years, will be held at New York, on Saturday.

Dr. Gray Speaks On Men's And Women's Relationships

Modern World Needs Readjustment of Sex Life; Companionship of Ideal Type Should Start When Youth Is in Teens; Petting and Flirting Are Detracting; Great Marriage Is Affinity of Mind, Spirit and Body.

"What the modern world needs above all other things is a readjustment of its sex life," declared Dr. A. Herbert Gray, well known British minister and statesman in an address last night in Gerrard hall.

The subject of the Englishman's talk was "Men's and Women's Relationships," and every phase of that all-important subject was scholarly and scientifically dealt with by Dr. Gray.

"Sex properly managed leads to the growth and enrichment of human life," he declared, "and to the enrichment of personalities."

Dr. Gray is out of patience with the old custom of telling children fictitious tales regarding birth, declaring that there is no logic in the theory that children if told the facts would be embarrassed. He intimated that a child is a most apt pupil who demands accurate facts.

"Truth makes for freedom," he said, "and it is only man's perversion of truth that makes it bad.

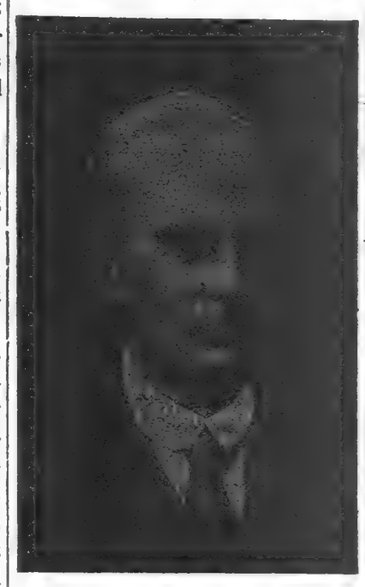
"The first experience of a youth in sex comes in the teens," said the speaker, "when young people are mutually attracted to each other and friendships are formed. These companionships are of great importance to the growing boy and girl. A youth should therefore resolve to go about and get the best out of these companionships and throw his whole self into them.

"If petting and flirting is the only object of these early companionships, then the experience is detracting. But if the young people share social and religious life as well, then it is enriching and helpful.

"I believe if there is a change for the better, that it is up to the young people themselves to establish the new standards. they must be sincere and straight-forward.

"Belief and practice in the importance of these early relationships will only lead to the conditions of great marriage," declared the speaker in introducing his last point.

"Nothing is so important as a great marriage. It cannot be merely physical, any more than it can be merely intellectual. Great marriage is the affinity of mind, spirit and body.



"When genuine love leads to true marriage and passes on into great marriage, the latter will be a beautiful and happy and lasting experience. Each should insist that the natural and normal result of marriage is parentage. If there is no parentage, then the union is not perfect.

"In short, love must be on an unselfish level."

Dr. Gray will speak this morning at chapel exercises, and at noon will attend a faculty luncheon. The Britisher will close his series of talks here this evening when he addresses the monthly meeting of the religious workers' council at 8:30 o'clock.

Local High School Makes High Scores In Statewide Test

Scores for the Chapel Hill high school in all subjects are far above the average for the state, results of a state wide test made public Thursday reveal. In all of the eight subjects tested by the educational authorities of the state, the local high school was far above the average for the state. The greatest increment is shown in Latin. The state average is only 9.1 while the average for the Chapel Hill high school is 20.5.

With the publication of the results of the survey the system of teaching employed in the high school here was disclosed. Six seniors in the school of education give part time instruction service in the local school. In return for this privilege, instructors in the school of education give free service to the faculty of the school.

Speaking of the practice, E. R. Mosher, of the school of education in the university said: "Patrons of the local school may rest assured that the interests of their children are properly safeguarded. The results of the 1929 high school senior examination indicate that the general trend of instruction in the Chapel Hill high school instead of being lower is higher than the state standard in every department."

Subjects tested are as follows: English forms, reading and literature, reading, historical, American history, Latin, French, mathematics, and general science.

History Department Meets In Saunders

At the regular departmental meeting of the history department yesterday evening, S. B. Barnes read a paper on the subject, "Franco-Italian Relations." Dr. H. M. Wagstaff led the discussion after the reading. The meeting was held at 7:30 o'clock in 304 Saunders hall.

A Typical Habit Of American Youth Is Courtesy Says Dr. A. Herbert Gray In Interview

Dr. A. Herbert Gray of London, eminent clergyman, statesman and author, in an interview with a Daily Tar Heel reporter yesterday stated that he was very much impressed with the University of North Carolina, even though he had been here hardly 12 hours at the time of the interview.

Dr. Gray declared that of all the colleges and universities in America that he has visited, the University has the most beautiful college library that he has ever seen. The American universities have the most modern and adequate equipment to be found anywhere in the world, said Dr. Gray, but the greatest problem they have to contend with is an efficient standard—a standard of advanced scholarship. Dr. Gray described this standard as something which cannot be attained in a few years. It takes several centuries to develop a standard able to sustain all tests. American higher institutions of learning are comparatively young in contrast with European colleges. When this obstacle is removed, American universities will surpass those of any other country.

Dr. Gray said that the number of activities engaged in by American college students is amazing to a visitor from a foreign country. One of the most typical habits of the American college youth is courtesy. If courtesy is capable of promoting higher ideals, the younger generation is headed to an altitude of social relations such as has never been attained before.

Although Dr. Gray is a minister by profession, he finds time to act as statesman. In the last great British campaign which elected Ramsay MacDonald as premier, Dr. Gray figured prominently.

Dr. Gray is very deeply interested in sex and devotes a good deal of time to that subject. "A new attitude should be and must be taken toward sex if humanity is to progress and happiness is to be promoted," he asserted. "If sex was understood and properly handled, most of the degrading ideals of the masses would be obliterated." Dr. Gray is the author of several noted books on social relationship. His books have received a wide circulation in both the United States and in England.

SOME REASONS WHY MARINE BAND HAS BECOME SO FAMOUS

Sousa Conducted Organization for Twelve Years.

Many people seem to wonder why the United States Marine Band, which is coming here Nov. 14, is so famous. Take a glance at some of these statistics and you'll say, "No wonder the Marine Band is so famous and so good!" The United States Marine Band carries on all its tours over 2,000 pounds of instruments and music.

There are 50 members in the band on all trips; each of these men average 18 years of service with the band.

Since all its members are enlisted, the Marine Band has to practice two hours every day in the year except Sundays.

Captain Branson has been a member of the band since he was 17 years old.

In the 129 years of its existence the band has had only nine leaders.

The drummer, Wilbur Kieffer, has been drumming for over 25 years.

The baggage of the band in travel consists of 42 trunks; a special baggage car accompanies the band on all trips.

Mrs. Coolidge, in an article on "Social Life at the White House," in a recent issue of the American Magazine, pays high tribute to the Marine Band as the chief item in the success of any program at the White House.

The Marine Band has played at the inauguration of every United States president from Thomas Jefferson to Herbert Hoover.

The Marine Band was lead by Sousa for 12 years.

36,000 people attended the Marine Band concert recently in Kansas City.

In each city where the band has played on this tour, the Mayor has declared an official Marine Band Day, and the city's main street was draped in United States flags.

In its present tour the Band is covering 18 cities in 13 different states. The tour will require nine weeks.

The cities that the Marine Band has on its present tour, in order, are as follows:

Philadelphia, Cleveland, Grand Rapids, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Fort Worth, Texas, San Antonio, Texas, Houson, Texas, New Orleans, Savannah, Ga., Columbia, S. C., Charlotte, Greensboro, Chapel Hill, Norfolk, Va., and Richmond, Va.

Three Act Version of Loretto Carroll Bailey's Play To Be Given Again Tonight and Saturday.

Last night the Carolina Playmakers presented Loretto Carroll Bailey's three-act play, "Job's Kinfolks," at the Playmaker theatre. The performance will be repeated tonight and Saturday night.

"Job's Kinfolks" is a story of the struggle in the lives of a family of mill-workers living in the piedmont section of North Carolina. The play brings in the reaction of three generations of these mountain people who seek vainly to adjust themselves to a closely organized society, in which there are the "poor people" and "the rich that's got say-so over the poor." Then there is the conflict of the older generation who seek to solve the problem, and the younger generation who give up trying to find an answer, and seek to escape.

Of the author, Loretto Carroll Bailey, Professor Koch says, "Her first play, 'The Deserter,' written in her senior year at the Richard Reynolds high school (Winston-Salem) was a play about the mill people dealing with the problem of heredity. It won first prize in the state dramatic tournament at Chapel Hill in 1925, and received honorable mention in the National Little Theatre tournament in New York in the same year. In Winston-Salem are some of the model mills of the state. There are no separate schools for the mill children, and from her childhood Loretto Bailey has known intimately the lives of the workers at the spindles.

"'Job's Kinfolks' was first written in the University playwriting course in 1927. The first draft was a failure, but all who heard it at the author's reading were impressed with the vividness of the characterization. Encouraged to go on with it, the author worked all the next night, and appeared the following morning with an entirely new play which retained only one character from her original

Engineering Students Inspect Planes at Raleigh Air Field

Five students in the engineering school and N. P. Bailey, instructor in aeronautics and machine design, visited the Raleigh field of the Curtis flying field Wednesday for the purpose of inspecting the construction details of planes there.

The group inspected seven types of planes at the field: a Curtis Robin, a Challenger Robin, two Cessna cabin monoplanes, a Gypsy Moth (an English plane), a Curtis Fledgling (a dual control training ship), a Commandaire and a Doyle Oriole.

While at the field, they also inspected steel and wooden propellers and several types of engines. The re-doping and covering of wings was observed as well as the methods of training flying students.

While there are no trips planned for the immediate future Mr. Bailey stated that the group of aeronautical students would probably visit the field again when it was discussing engines in the aeronautical courses.

Tar Heel Topics

We suggest that while they are repairing Memorial hall they install an automatic bell which will ring when the speakers finish their spiels, so that we'll know when to wake up.

If these senators continue to denounce the prohibition enforcement policies of the government they'll have us believing that somebody actually wants the 18th amendment enforced.

Reports from Columbia indicate that the Gamecocks are depending upon psychology to beat the Tar Heels. We're glad to hear that they have something to depend upon besides the ability of their football team.

Teachers, Scholars And Mere Professors

Many of the University's most renowned—and conceited—faculty members would be quite disagreeably surprised to hear themselves discussed by a group of their students. For the average undergraduate, despite his multitudinous deficiencies, is a rather capable judge of the true worth of his professors as teachers.

Numbered among the members of the University faculty are quite a few illustrious scholars, men who have attained national reputations by writing books and participating in various forms of activity that are not in the least concerned with their abilities as teachers. Yet every person who has had classes under these men know that comparatively few of them are really capable of teaching a college course. On the contrary, far too many of these noted scholars are so occupied with their outside activities that they have lost all interest in their classes, all regard for their students as seekers after knowledge. They impart the impression that they regard their teaching duties as distasteful, necessary but none the less to be disposed of with as little trouble and attention as possible.

On the other hand, it is evident to the thoughtful undergraduate that there are many men in the faculty who have no widespread reputations outside of their state or even beyond the ranks of those who have taken their courses, but who are among the few real teachers that the University has to offer. They have genuine enthusiasm for their classes, real interest in their students as human beings. Probably they never write anything, never conduct exhaustive research or complicated experiments. Many of these men have not attained the rank of professor, or even of associate professor. Yet they are far more valuable to the University and to the students than their highly touted faculty brothers.

There are a few faculty men here who combine a widespread reputation as a scholar with real teaching ability and interest in their classes. But these scholar-teachers may be enumerated upon the fingers of one hand. Under the modern faculty system at institutions of higher learning, those who gain national recognition because of extra-curricula activities are far more likely to receive the advancements and rewards bestowed by the institutions than the real teachers, who do not find time, or perhaps do not have the ability, to compete for widespread scholastic fame and honors. Of the two groups of professors, the teachers who are not real scholars and the scholars who are not real teachers, the former are far more valuable from an undergraduate point of view.

Of course, the ideal faculty type is the teacher-scholar. But unfortunately such men are rare indeed. Many professors who would perhaps make good teachers if they were not so immersed in the writing of their books or the conducting of their research, are utterly incompetent as instructors.

More recognition should be given to the teacher, a greater share of the rewards of professorial labor should be his. Pedants there are in plenty here, and some of them even achieve renown, but small salaries and obscurity fall to the lot of the man who aspires to be a teacher first, and then a scholar.

Undergraduates are sometimes swayed by narrow personal prejudices and are deceived by popularity-seeking instructors, but their estimates of the true worth of the facultymen are likely to be more accurate than those of the powers that be in the academic world. It's too bad that student opinion is not taken into consideration when faculty promotions are made and honors bestowed.

The Curriculum Question

There is always room for difference of opinion regarding the curricular problems of any school, college, or university. Consequently, the content of the curriculum is an unstable matter dependent upon prevailing opinion. The deans and teachers of the various departments of this University are constantly attempting to meet the needs of the greatest possible number of students through the medium of an up-to-date curriculum.

Since the system of mass education is in the experimental stage as yet, new suggestions regarding the content and nature of the curriculum should be given careful consideration. There are at least a few members of the faculty here who join the writer of this editorial in the belief that the first two years of work should be the same in all departments of the University. At any rate such a suggestion is worthy of consideration.

Very few of the large number of freshmen who enter Carolina each fall have fully decided upon what line of study to pursue. True it is that most of them have given the matter some thought and have a passing idea about their life's work. The majority of them, however, are not certain enough about the matter to resist persuasion from friends who are preparing themselves for different professions. Furthermore, a student often discovers during his first two years that his ideas about the profession that he intended to pursue when he entered college were wrong. This statement is substantiated by the large number of transfers which take place between the various departments of the University before the junior year.

A uniform curriculum for the first two years of work in every department would almost entirely eliminate this transfer grievance. After having been here two years, a student knows what he is going to do (if, indeed, he ever does know). Furthermore, the same fundamentals are needed for any and all professions.

We firmly advocate a uniform curriculum covering the freshman and sophomore years.

Vilbrandt Speaks To Frosh Chemical Engineering Class

Dr. F. C. Vilbrandt, head of the chemical engineering department of the school of engineering, spoke before the engineering freshman class Wednesday as the fourth of a series of speakers who are giving a course of orientation and motivation lectures.

Dr. Vilbrandt presented the subject of chemical engineering to the group, telling what it is and its relation to the other branches of engineering. The different fields of specialization in this branch of engineering were discussed, and an outline of the course in chemical work given at the University was presented.

Dr. Vilbrandt stated that the chemical engineering department gives a four-year course in general chemical engineering and that the faculty of the department advises a student to take four years of work here, and then to go to some other school for his special work. The University of North Carolina has neither the faculty nor the equipment to teach specialized forms of chemical work, and students are urged to go elsewhere for work of this nature.

'Rio Rita' Is Coming To Carolina Theatre

The famous "Kinkajou" stomps into town Wednesday when "Rio Rita," the all-talking all-musical film extravaganza Radio Pictures has made from the Ziegfeld show opens at the Carolina theatre.

The "Kinkajou" is but one of the numerous dances that feature the brilliant show, which played for 62 weeks on Broadway and for extended runs elsewhere throughout the country.

Bebe Daniels and John Boles head the large cast of stage and screen favorites who transferred the songs and comedy of the stage hit to the screen. Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey play their original comedy roles. Dorothy Lee, the "Syncopation" girl; Helen Kaiser, former "glorified" girl of the "Follies"; Georges Renevant, French stage star; Don Alvarado; Eva Rosita, Mexican dancer, and Nick de Ruiz, former tenor of the Metropolitan Grand Opera Company, are among the featured players.

Much of the great feature was photographed in technicolor and the sets and costumes of the million-dollar show are said to outdo in color and richness anything yet viewed on the sound screen.

Others of the features of "Rio Rita" are the dancing chorus of 100 Hollywood beauties, the Cimini Grand Opera chorus of 80 voices and the RKO symphonic orchestra conducted by Victor Baravalle.

Forks were first used in 1220.

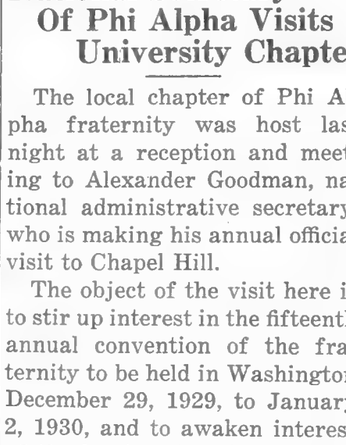
DR. GRAY SPEAKS ON CHRISTIANITY

Says Most People Misunderstand Religion by Overlooking New Testament.

Dr. A. Herbert Gray, addressing part of the freshman class in chapel Thursday morning, presented a graphic conception of the highest type of life as one having grown out of Christianity. Dr. Gray, whose visit here has been looked forward to for some time, was introduced by H. F. Comer of the Y.M.C.A. as the "parson from London." Dr. Gray combined interestingly in his talk in chapel references to religious principles and to more material affairs of political and social life.

Introducing his theme, the English minister said that he considered Christianity the most important of all subjects. In spite of its importance, however, many people misunderstand the Christian religion because they fail to seek their information regarding it in the New Testament. Dr. Gray stated that, though the belief was incorporated in no church creeds, he saw the central theme of Christianity embodied in the expression "the kingdom of God" which occurs numerous times in the Gospels.

Then Dr. Gray stated that Christianity should find an application in world politics. He prescribed its principles of universal brotherhood as the best remedy for such evils as war and as a basis for a new world civilization.



In personal life, Dr. Gray urged Christian unselfishness as the finest thing. "Any kind of life of which you are the center is a poor kind of life," he cautioned his hearers, "to find the most satisfactory kind of life, one should follow the example of Christ in living unselfishly."

National Secretary Of Phi Alpha Visits University Chapter

The local chapter of Phi Alpha fraternity was host last night at a reception and meeting to Alexander Goodman, national administrative secretary, who is making his annual official visit to Chapel Hill.

The object of the visit here is to stir up interest in the fifteenth annual convention of the fraternity to be held in Washington December 29, 1929, to January 2, 1930, and to awaken interest of the local fraters in the campaign to dispose of $50,000 of bonds in the order's endowment fund campaign.

Mr. Goodman was guest at a reception Wednesday night by the Mu chapter at the University of Virginia, Charlottesville. After leaving Chapel Hill, he will visit the Psi chapter at the University of Tennessee and complete his tour with a visit to the chapter at the University of West Virginia.

ADVANCE BAND AGENT PLEASED WITH PLANS

Mr. Chas. A. Horr, advance agent of the United States Marine Band, is very satisfied with the arrangements for the band. He stated, after seeing Kenan stadium where the afternoon performance will be held: "I have never seen a place in which nature and the work of man have combined with such marvelous results." He was very enthusiastic about the idea of having the afternoon concert in the stadium.

Mr. Horr also stated that the Tin Can, where the evening performance will be given, is a much more desirable place for the concert than Memorial hall. It is better not only because Memorial hall is condemned, but also because the spaciousness of the "can" is better suited for band music.

For the past several days reports have been circulating among the newspapers about the 1930 football schedule for Carolina, and incidentally just what part the Gamecocks of South Carolina will play in the aforementioned schedule. Some of these reports have contained more or less of the truth, while others appear to be the product of the imagination of the writer.

Anybody that thinks they can gain a vast amount of information from Charles T. Woollen, graduate manager of athletics here at the University, concerning next year's schedule, even in its most tentative form, will certainly have more potency in their thoughts than I had in my actions. After some forty-five minutes of tooth-pulling yesterday morning, I gave it up as a bad job, and forced myself to be content with a few facts which bear pretty directly upon the South Carolina game next year; that is if there is going to be a game.

According to Mr. Woollen an engagement with South Carolina for next year has not been cancelled. The main point of interest, however, is that the Tar Heels will not be able to meet the Gamecocks in 1930 on the date November 8, since other arrangements have been made which make it impossible for the two schools to meet on that date. It is unlikely that a game between the two neighboring universities will be scheduled for next fall. So that's about all there is to it, and we might just as well settle back and patiently await something definite which will probably be given out in about ten days.

It seems a bit unfortunate that the above mentioned talk and a lot more has been going on just on the eve of the game between the two parties concerned, and the less that can be said along that line until about five-thirty Saturday afternoon, the more bouquets of love are going to be thrown at us as we arrive in Columbia this week-end for the game. Psychology may help the Gamecocks, but on top of that they are fully capable of making it a bitterly fought game, and unless we are a bit off in our prediction that is just what it is going to be.

Our conception of industrious laziness is sitting around a fire talking, in the company of some of the old timers, about the great men and teams that have in the past placed Carolina in the forefront among gridiron competition. There is something consolingly peaceful in it all; in fact there was never a better bull question. In one of those arguments have you ever tried to figure out a mythical all-time Carolina football team. Think it over, and remember that men coming along about the time of Monk McDonald were not the first grid heroes to wear the Blue and White. Through the assistance of some of the greatest football players ever to go out from Carolina, the Tar Heel is going to attempt to pick just such a team. If you are up on this sort of dope, send in your nominations to the Tar Heel Sports Department. Who knows, the weight of your nomination may place a man on this famous collection of Carolina football stars. Nominations and teams will be published in about a week or ten days.

Tar Heels Leave For Battle With Gamecocks

To Take Light Workout In Charlotte This Afternoon On Their Way To Columbia

Thirty-five Men Not Counting Coaches Left Durham Last Night.

Thirty-five Tar Heels, not including managers and coaches, left last night for Columbia, where they will engage the Gamecocks Saturday afternoon in the annual "battle of the Carolinas."

The men taking the trip are as follows: Adkins, Alexander, Allen, Branch, Brown, Crew, Dortch, Erickson, Eskew, Farris, Fenner, Fysal, Gilbreath, Harden, Harper, House, Hudson, Jackson, Koenig, Lipscomb, McIver, Magner, Maus, Moore, Nash, Nelson, Parsley, Rose, Slusser, Spaulding, Tabb, Thompson, Ward, and Wyrick. Managers Gray and Craig will accompany the team; also Coaches Collins, Fetzer and Quinlan.

The squad left Durham about 12:57 a.m. last night; the first stop will be in Charlotte, where a light workout will be held tomorrow afternoon. From there the squad will go straight to Columbia.

Coach Chuck Collins had little to say concerning his charges as he prepared to put the Tar Heels through a light practice yesterday afternoon. The main import of his remarks were that the game had every indication of being bitterly fought from the first whistle to the last. The comparative score advantage that the North Carolinians hold over their South Carolina rivals seems to hold little water with Coach Collins.

Last year the Gamecocks came to Chapel Hill and, either helped or hindered by an exceedingly muddy field, held a supposedly much stronger North Carolina eleven in check and the final whistle found both goal lines uncrossed.

A great array of backs will take the field Saturday and unless both teams present a much stronger defense than is expected, long offensive drives and flashing aerial attacks will feature the performance of the day.

Tennis Team Works For Coming Match

With three vacancies in the varsity tennis team and a meet with the University of Virginia just three weeks hence, aspirants to racket honors were working out on the University courts yesterday. The three present members of the team are: Ed Yeomans, Bill Merritt and Sonny Graham.

Coach Kenfield issued an announcement yesterday to the effect that all those wishing to try out must see him today. When the team has been selected, he will begin grooming them for the Virginia meet.

N. C.-S. C. READY FOR ANNUAL GAME

Tar Heels Conceded Slight Edge Over Gamecocks.

With all indications for fair weather and a great horde of spectators, the football teams of the Universities of North and South Carolina were all set today for tomorrow afternoon's annual classic "Battle of the Carolinas," featuring home-coming day at the Gamecock institution.

The Tar Heels ruled slight favorites, but the concensus of opinion was for a battle royal.

The Tar Heel forwards will outweigh the Gamecock linemen several pounds to the man. The backfields stack up just about even—the Gamecocks with their Rhame, Boineau, Zobel and Stoddard; and the Tar Heels with their Magner, Branch, Nash, Ward, Erickson, Maus, and others.

The Tar Heels will be missing their veteran quarterback, Wyrick, but otherwise both teams will show just about full strength.

The North Carolina squad spent last night in Charlotte, and was to take a light workout there this afternoon. The squad is to arrive in Columbia early tonight.

The coaches today announced the probable starting lineups as follows:

N. C.	Pos.	S. C.
Holt	l. e.	Powell
Koenig	l. t.	Watson
Farris (C)	l. g.	Hughey
Lipscomb	c.	Beall (C)

Harriers Show Form

North Carolina's fleet harriers, rulers of Southern Conference cross-country circles for three years, beat the N. C. State hill and dale men last Saturday, 15-45, the largest possible margin of defeat in cross-country. Five Tar Heels finished, hands-clasped, in a tie for the first five places. The Tar Heels dropped a close opening meet to V.P.I., but this overwhelming victory has sent their stock rushing up again, on the eve of the Conference meet to be held here November 23.

GOOD MATERIAL FEATURES 1929 FRESHMAN SQUAD

Includes An All-Southern Guard, Three Captains, and Several Who Were Prominent in Northern Circles.

At the end of last year's football season the freshman team had completed their five game schedule (Southern Conference ruling) without having suffered a single defeat. One of their most outstanding victories was with the Princeton Frosh who bowed to the Tar Babies by a score of 6 to 0.

This year the Tar Babies do not play Princeton, but on November 16 they journey to College Park where they play the Maryland freshmen in their third game. On November 23 the freshmen go to Charlottesville to play Virginia, and on the following Saturday they play the State freshmen at Raleigh.

For the past several years the coaches have used the freshmen to scrimmage the varsity squad, running an attack with plays of the opposing team. This year Coaches Enright and Sapp have been using their proteges more for work against the varsity than ever before. The freshman squad has been divided into five teams, each taking the name of some Carolina opponent and running plays against the varsity several times each week. This system, while greatly handicapping the development of a freshman team, has been of invaluable aid to the varsity.

The following statistics have been collected concerning a partial number of the 1929 Tar Babies. This year's yearling squad includes one all Southern high school guard, three captains and several who have been prominent in northern prep and high school football circles.

Fullbacks

Seymour Abrams, East Orange high school, N. J., fullback four years.

J. D. McNeill, Rayford high school, N. C., fullback three years.

Platt W. Landis, Oak Ridge institute, fullback one year; Charlotte high school four years, captain 1927.

William Sickler, Swathmore Prep, Pa., one year, fullback; George school, Newtown, Pa., two years fullback; Salem high school, N. J., two years fullback.

Fred M. Laxton, Charlotte high school, two years fullback.

Shearod Crumpler, Roanoke Rapids high, four years fullback.

Quarterbacks

Stuart Chandler, Durham high, three years quarterback; Bingham Military Academy, one one year quarterback.

Jonathan Jackson, Hendersonville high school, three years quarterback.

Right Halfbacks

Jack Morisey, East Clinton high, four years halfback.

D. B. WAUGH WINS SCORING HONORS IN NOVICE MEET

Establishes Record By Winning Four Out of Nine Events; Follin Second; and Sickler Third.

With 23 points to his credit, D. B. Waugh of Beta Theta Phi was easily the outstanding individual scorer in the novice track meet held yesterday afternoon at Emerson field. Follin, also of Beta Theta Phi, was next high scorer with 15 points, while Sickler of "G" dorm was third high with 10 points to his credit.

Waugh scored an individual record by winning four first places out of a possible nine. He took first place in the 100 yard low hurdles, broad jump, high jump and pole vault. Follin came in first in both the 100 yard dash and the 50 yard dash, and also took second place in the broad jump, third in the shot put, and third in the javelin. Sickler's ten points were gained by winning first places in the shot put and discus throw.

The following represents the first three winners with the record set by the first man:

Pole vault: 10 feet—Waugh, Ruble, Crumpler.

Javelin: 136 feet—Morrison, Olivers, Follin.

Discus: 100.1 feet—Sickler, Stultz, Roberts.

Shot: 32 feet 1 inch—Sickler, Stultz, Follin.

HARRIERS MEET BLUE DEVILS IN STADIUM TODAY

Tar Heels Out to Avenge Defeat Of Last Season; To Defend Southern Title.

A strong Duke varsity cross-country team will meet the Tar Heel harriers this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Kenan stadium in a meet which is expected to assume almost equal proportions to the gridiron clash between the two schools. The Duke frosh team will also meet the Tar Babies at the same time.

Duke is reputed to have an even better team this year than the one which beat the Carolina harriers last year. Simons, outstanding in the Navy and Washington and Lee meets, is expected to be Duke's big threat, while Heiser, Flinton, and others are also expected to be among the foremost runners.

Coach Dale Ranson is silent as to prospects but is known to be shaking up the team which beat State last Saturday quite a bit. He has not announced the starting team but will pick the starters from the following: Barkley, Baucom, Pierce, Phoenix, Farris, J. J. Cohen, G. M. Cohen, R. Brown, Simpson, and Lowry. Lowry did not get into last week's meet because of an abscessed tooth, but may run this afternoon. Wrenn, who was among the first five to enter in the State meet, will be out on account of mumps.

Ranson is also not quite sure of his starters in the freshman meet, but it is most probable that the team will be chosen from Jensen, Cox, Cordle, Lumpkin, Zelley, Stikeleather, Lewis, Walker, and Hawley.

A large number of students is expected to witness these two meets because of the intense rivalry existent between Duke and Carolina.

MISSISSIPPI COLLEGE TO PLAY MEXICAN TEAM

Mississippi college, of Clinton, Miss., will oppose the University of Mexico in Mexico City Nov. 20 in the second game of intercollegiate football to be played in Mexico. The game will be the feature event of the opening of the million dollar Valbuens athletic field, just outside the capital.

Arrangements with Mississippi college were completed by telephone recently after efforts had failed to bring the University of the South, of Sewanee, Tenn., to Mexico for that date.

Two University Press Books Praised Highly By Puckett

Critic Is More Sympathetic About "Black Roadways" and "John Henry" Than Other Reviewers.

(By E. C. Daniel, Jr.)

In many respects a review of two University Press books, appearing in the Saturday Review of Literature for this week and written by Newbell Niles Puckett, is the most sympathetic of the criticisms that have come to the attention of the local literati. It is a treatment of two folk-lore volumes, Black Roadways by Martha Warren Beckwith and John Henry by Guy B. Johnson.

Both of these volumes have received uncounted compliments in the past, but none of them seemed to have reached the peak of appreciation achieved in Mr. Puckett's appraisal. In the first place it treats the works not with a consideration of their literary value, but from the viewpoint of an accomplished worker in the same field—a contemporary in the study of negro folklore writes of the success of two fellow folklorists in negro custom, superstition and tradition. The writer of the review himself was the author of Folk Beliefs of the Southern Negro, a work which was published by the University Press also, and which, incidentally, has had an influence on the work of Miss Beckwith, according to her own declaration. At present Mr. Puckett is connected with the Western Reserve University.

Of Black Roadways, which is an extensive study of Jamaican negro folklore, the reviewer says in part: "Not only is half the book frankly devoted to that ever-absorbing potpourri of ghosts, obeah, graveyard etiquette, freakish religious sects, and folk art, but even the mundane round of fishing, cutting trees, or building houses is richly spiced with signs, omens, and superstitions. Close acquaintances of the rural American negro (or the rural Englishman, for that matter) will recognize many old friends in this miscellany of folk custom."

From these observations the critic goes on to explain the similarities of these beliefs, saying finally about religious customs that the Jamaicans are "to an extent dignified and sobered by the more orderly pattern set by the Anglican church . . . as compared to their southern negro relatives who . . . are still enraptured by that heritage of shout-to-glory emotionalism from pioneer Methodist and Baptist days."

Monroe and Forest City will play at Monroe for the title of district 4 in the west.

Eastern series: Oxford and Apex will meet at Oxford to determine the title of the first eastern district. Dunn and Bladenboro will meet at Dunn to settle the title of district 3 in the east. Raeford and Smithfield were scheduled to play today at Raeford in a game to decide the title of the fourth eastern district. The Ayden-Hertford game will be played at Hertford on November 11 to decide the title holder of the second eastern district.

Conferences of faculty managers of high schools winning district championships will be held early next week to arrange the schedules for remaining games. It is expected that the final game for the state title in this contest will be played at Chapel Hill on Friday, November 29.

Magner Will Be Ready

Jim Magner, high scoring Tar Heel ace, is slated to be back in togs against South Carolina Saturday, and striving to fatten his yardage record for the season. Magner to date has carried the ball 40 times for the Tar Heels for an average of 8 yards a clip. He has scored five touchdowns, and has flipped passes for several others. He was out of the N. C. State game last Saturday with injuries, but his mates won 32-0.

Kansas Firm Secures Contract To Place Organ In Music Hall

To Be Largest Instrument of Its Kind in South; Building Will Be Ready in May.

At the request of the donor of the organ, a committee composed of Professors H. S. Dyer and Nelson O. Kennedy of the department of music, and a number of outside organists and musicians who have acted in an advisory capacity, have been for the past sixty days making a detailed study of the qualities and characteristics of all the leading organs in America. The findings of this committee were very carefully tabulated for record, and only last week was it possible to bring the matter to a state of final analysis and deduction.

On Monday the final meeting of the committee, which included R. B. House, who represented Dr. Chase, Chas. T. Woollen, budget officer of the University, H. S. Dyer of the department of music, and the donor, surveyed the findings of the committee, and unanimously awarded the contract to the Reuter Organ company of Lawrence, Kansas. The universities of California, Oregon, College of Vancouver, and many other recital halls and churches of the Middle West and Pacific Coast regions are equipped with Reuter organs. The nearest large installation by this company is in the Moody Temple at Chicago. The organ on this campus will thus be the only instrument of its kind in this entire section of the United States. Approximately 5,000 speaking pipes controlled from approximately 85 speaking stops will be available at the console when the organ is complete. The Echo organ situated at rear of the new auditorium will contain an entire organ of separate and individual construction.

The structural engineer of the Reuter company, who recently visited Chapel Hill to consult with Messrs. Atwood and Nash on the construction of the building, pointed out that the building when complete would offer an almost ideal acoustical situation. With this in mind, the Reuter people will set about building a representative instrument which will become known for its beauty of tone and flexibility of mechanical operation throughout the entire Southern Atlantic territory.

A late development in the plans for the new recital hall which will house the organ calls for an enlargement of the room to 1,000 seats. In view of the remarkable growth in interest in music in the south, it was felt this addition to the room was necessary. The department of music will occupy the reconstructed library building early in January, where new equipment is to be installed, and the auditorium and organ are to be ready for use by Music Week, which is in May.

EDUCATION PROFESSORS PRESENT AT MEETING

Peabody hall had a deserted appearance during the greater part of yesterday. There were no classes after the chapel period, and only a few stenographers and secretaries were engaged later than that hour.

The reason for this suspension of activity in the building was the departure yesterday morning of practically all the professors in the school of education for Raleigh, to attend the North Carolina district meeting of the North Carolina Education Association.

John B. Sale to Give Talk on Negro Folk-Lore.

If the schedule of his reading tour is carried out as planned, John B. Sale, author of The Tree Named John, a University Press book, will come to Chapel Hill December 2. It is the intention of members of the Chapel Hill community club, sponsors of the event, to have him lecture in the Episcopal parish house, giving readings from his book, a volume on negro folklore. It has also been planned to give the students an opportunity to hear Mr. Sale under the sponsorship of the Bull's Head book shop.

While in the state the author, whose collection of stories has been reviewed in this paper, will give readings in Charlotte and Durham. The Book Lovers shop and the Durham public library will be jointly responsible for his appearances in the latter city.

Miss Marks Attends Luncheon at Duke

Miss Sallie B. Marks, assistant professor of elementary education in the school of education, was present yesterday afternoon, by special invitation, at a luncheon given by Duke university for the executive board of the Southern Woman's Educational Alliance. The luncheon took place at 1:15 p. m. at the Duke University Union, and Miss Marks returned immediately afterwards to Chapel Hill.

DR. GRAY GIVES TALK IN CHAPEL

British Lecturer Continues Discussion on Economic Questions.

Continuing the subject begun Thursday morning, Dr. A. Herbert Gray spoke again in chapel yesterday on Christianity. Dr. Gray first explained and refuted certain arguments against Christianity and then pointed out what he considered the chief contributions of Christian teachings to religious and philosophical thought.

Dr. Gray said that it is often argued that Christianity tears down personality by giving one a narrow viewpoint toward life. He pointed out that this mistaken opinion arises from a lack of knowledge of the New Testament, for by its teaching the purpose of Christianity is to make life complete. Dr. Gray maintained that Christ himself desired for everyone a broad vision and a well-rounded life. Such a life is not one concerned solely with intellectuality as college men may sometimes think, the speaker added.

Dr. Gray said that a more exclusively Christian teaching was that of unselfishness. He then discussed this principle in very much the same manner as on Thursday morning when he spoke to the other half of the freshman class. He declared that the happiest men are those who have led lives filled, not with consideration for self, but with a passionate desire for the good of others. In his opinion, lives of this sort, however, are generally filled with difficulties, and divine inspiration is necessary for their complete success.

1517 lives were lost in the Titanic disaster of 1912.

Only Third Of Students Get Degrees, Alumni File Reveals

Holders of bachelor's degrees from the University comprise about 27 per cent of the total living alumni body of the institution, according to figures recently compiled in the Alumni office.

This statement means that the University has had nearly three students to drop out of college without getting a degree to each student who completed his course and was graduated.

There are on the alumni mailing list approximately 14,500 names, and of these nearly 4,000 are bachelor-degree holders. Not included in the 4,000, of course, are the recipients of master's degrees, doctorates, earned or honorary. All students—graduates, non-graduates, and graduate students—are included in the total alumni list.

A comparison of the last two graduating classes shows that more students are now remaining at the University to complete their full courses, however. The class of 1928 entered Carolina 699 strong and graduated, four years later, 267 bachelors. The class of 1929 entered in the fall of 1925 with 710 members, and graduated last June, 266 bachelors. The percentage for the last two years then has been 37, or well over a third. Of course this would be reduced a bit if an individual count was made, because many of the graduates of '28 and '29 entered the class after the freshman year. But the figures certainly indicate an increase in the number of students who go through full courses at the University.

One of the interesting facts about the alumni group is that it has been increased nearly 25 per cent in the college generation just past. In other words the University alumni who were in school between 1925 and 1929 comprise nearly one fourth of the entire alumni body.

The alumni office, located on the second floor of South building, maintains accurate mailing addresses of all the University's alumni, both graduates and non-graduates.

Memorial Hall To Be Closed Until Further Observations

Old Historic Structure Is In No Imminent Danger Yet; Most Of Building Is In Substantial Shape.

Memorial Hall will be closed indefinitely pending the completion of tests by state engineers to determine the true condition of the wooden support arches. Plaster paris casts have been placed around the bases of the arches in order to ascertain the amount of the slipping of the supports of the roof. The experiment will last about two weeks, and during that time the building will be closed. When the final report is made on the condition of the structure, definite action in respect to repairs will be taken.

The construction of Memorial Hall is unusual. There are few auditoriums in the world, it is said, in which such a wide span is obtained by the use of wood alone.

"The roof is supported by two great wooden arches 127 feet in diameter, lengthwise of the building," says Kemp Plummer Battle's History of the University. "They were built on the ground, and the raising them was a perilous task. The first attempt resulted in failure, most mortifying to the foreman because there was a large company of witnesses, including the Visiting Committee of the Trustees and Bishop Graan of Mississippi. One of the arches was raised a few feet, the tackle gave way, and the ceremony was postponed. The next attempt was by an experienced house-mover, Mr. O. R. Smith, to whom we paid $500, and was successful. As the long complicated ropes strained and the pulleys creaked, and the network of heavy timbers slowly and steadily rose in presence of interested onlookers, the scene was very exciting."

Dr. Manning Goes To Mayo Hospital

Dr. Isaac Manning, dean of the school of medicine, who is taking his leave this year, has gone to Rochester, Minnesota to do research in the famous Mayo hospital.

On his arrival there, before he went to work, he passed through a clinical examination and the doctors gave him a clean bill of health. He has seen many of his former students, among them John Pemberton, Donald Cobb and Bobby Jones.

Members of the Mayo staff entertained him and escorted him about to all the departments of the hospital. Before he returns home after Christmas he will spend a while in studies in Chicago.

NEWSPAPERS LAUD ODUM'S NEW BOOK

"Wings on My Feet" Attracting Attention of Leading Publications All Over Country.

Dr. Howard W. Odum's new book, "Wings on My Feet," a sequel to his "Rainbow Round My Shoulder," which was recently released by the Bobbs-Merrill company, is receiving much favorable criticism by leading reviewers the country over.

The book is attracting wide attention. Newspapers in New York, Cleveland, Boston, Toledo, Philadelphia, and in other large cities have carried reviews in praise of it.

The Cleveland Press writes: "This year may conceivably yet produce another book as moving the 'Wings on My Feet,' but it is impossible to believe that it will produce another so uniquely American."

The New York Times says: " 'Wings on My Feet,' is a book of dignity, written for the sake of both documentation and beauty, and not at all calculated to give jaded nerves another twitch. Its narrative is cast in a facile form of an elemental figure in a rhythmic and running style."

The Boston Evening Transcript writes of the book: "It is beautiful as the Rhapsody in Blue is beautiful. It has tune, form and rhythm.

It is rugged with virility of warriors. It is in prose form, but it scans. . . . It has tragedy, pathos, and humor."

Reviewing the book for the Nation, Mark Van Doren commends Dr. Odum's use of the Negro dialect which, he says, is "without any of the favorite devices of the dialect writer. No misspelling, no labored grotesqueries." And the result, says Mr. Van Doren, is an authoritative work on the Negro, his talk and temperament, and incidentally "a social study of the first importance."

The New York Herald-Tribune says: " 'Wings on My Feet' adds very definitely to the epic proportions of 'Rainbow Round My Shoulder.' It is delightful reading; it is valuable documentation, history of a novel sort. And its seeming artlessness is all the more tribute to the complete self-subordination of its creator to the final material he has made into genuine art."

The first American newspaper made its initial appearance in 1690 in Boston, Mass.

COMMERCE FRATERNITY HOLDS FOUNDER'S DAY SMOKER IN NEW HOUSE

The local chapter of the international fraternity of Delta Sigma Pi, commerce fraternity, held a smoker at its new house on Rosemary street Thursday evening. The occasion was the celebration of the founding of the fraternity. The fraternity was organized November 7, 1907, at New York University. The local chapter was installed May 9, 1925.

The chapter had as its guests about thirty commerce students and several members of the faculty of the school of commerce. The principal speaker of the evening was Dr. G. T. Schwenning. He gave a most interesting talk on his observations of "The Industrialization of China." Dr. Schwenning spent over a year in China a short time ago, and his remarks were very instructive. It is the custom of the fraternity to hold smokers each quarter.

Medical Society

The medical society of the University held its annual banquet in Caldwell hall Thursday night. There were 71 members of the two classes present. The speakers were members of the two classes.

Alpha Kappa Psi, commerce fraternity, held its first smoker of the year at the Carolina Inn last night. M. G. Follin, Jr., president of the fraternity, had charge of the affair.

Tar Heel Topics

Engineers are attempting to determine what can be done for Memorial hall, if anything. We suggest that a few sticks of dynamite would do the job better than anything else.

It has been announced from Columbia that the Gamecocks will play Georgia Tech and Duke next year. Maybe this publicity about South Carolina being dropped from the Tar Heel schedule next year was a little premature, after all.

One of the most typical habits of the American college youth is courtesy, according to Dr. Herbert Gray, who concluded a two-day series of lectures here last night. Some few motorists who have picked up "bumming" collegians and most theatre-goers in college towns will be surprised to learn that.

Three Grand Old Men Of the University

Marcus Cicero Stevens Noble, Horace Williams, Collier Cobb—these three names have been entered upon the University's role of immortals for more than a score of years. Each of this trio is well past his allotted three score and ten years, but all of them continue to render faithful service, day by day, to the institution to which they have devoted their lives.

Almost inuumerable are the contributions which this trio has made to the advancement of the University. Their courses have attracted hundreds of students who would never have enrolled in the University, were it not for them. They specialize in widely divergent fields of knowledge: education, philosophy, geology; and they have made important contributions to these fields. But their greatest service has been to their students. Although these three men are diametrically opposed in personality and characteristics, they possess in common the indefinable qualities that make the real teacher.

Three generations are represented among the multitude who have been instructed by "Billy," "Collier" and "Horace." Many of the first generation, the original students of the trio, are among North Carolina's most prominent men. Some of them are grandfathers; they have sent their sons and their grandsons here with the explicit command that they take courses under Williams, Cobb or Noble—or probably all three.

Very few are the years of actual teaching left for these men. They will be replaced by younger men in a short time. But they will leave an ineradicable impression upon the University and upon all those who have taken their courses.

Further Observations Of the Curriculum Question

An editorial appearing yesterday in the columns of this journal set forth the virtues of a uniform curriculum for the first two years as contrasted with what might be called the evils of non-uniformity. The writer of that article expressed his opinion with a sincerity which cannot be denied, and he substantiated his assertions with certain facts which must be considered in any intelligent discussion of the problem. However, the virtues of a non-uniform curriculum, it seems to the present writer, for any part of the academic course, bear enough weight to counsel consideration.

Although many students go to college with indecision as to what to prepare themselves for, others, at the same time, go with the idea of preparing themselves for law, medicine, commerce, or for work in the fields of history, fine arts, science, and so forth. It is difficult, if not impossible, to calculate just how many are decided and how many are not. Nevertheless, it is certain that both types of students do exist and that both types must be considered as factors in the determination of a curriculum which is to embrace them both.

A two year's uniform curriculum is highly desirable for those who are uncertain as to their objectives in college, because it gives them at once a general idea of different phases of learning and credit for work already done. It would be nonsensical to keep students out of college merely because they have not fully decided on what course to pursue. A uniform schedule of subjects is therefore recommended for the accommodation of this type of student.

But what of those who have definite goals in view? Are they to be forced to take courses which have no part in the study of their various special fields? Of course, there are benefits to be derived from any study, and wide knowledge is no doubt an integral part of the thing we call culture. But the requirement upon a student forcing him to take certain courses for the sake of maintaining a uniform curriculum has no place among progressive education methods. For this type of student, why not let him take those courses which best equip him for further study in his field, eliminating his subscribing to a set, uniform curriculum?

If a dual curriculum were innovated in colleges, we believe that much time would be saved by those who are shooting for a straight goal, that credit for work done would be given where credit is due, and that a greater satisfaction in feeling that they were being dealt with more justly.—B. M.

Improvement Always Welcomed

How strange it will feel to witness athletic contests in the tin can this winter without shivering! They tell us that the change is to be accomplished by the installation of a giant heating system. Well, every improvement helps, and maybe some day even the Chapel Hill weather will be improved.

Debaters to Meet South Carolinians—Thus spake the Tar Heel. The article further stated that the debate would be held in Columbia and that the South Carolinians would uphold the affirmative side of the disarmament question. We suggest that the Tar Heel hot air artists had better "keep an eye open." 'Tis rather strange that the battling Gamecocks should advocate disarmament—especially on their own territory.

Friendly Manifestations

'Tis really remarkable how well the four publications get along with each other here on the campus. Out comes the Buccaneer, and the Tar Heel says: "It's indecent." We're not going to prophesy what will be said and written when the Yackety Yack comes out.

Whither Student Energy

Coach Fetzer and his assistants have of late bewailed the lack of student interest in athletics. Most certainly this is something new in University complaints! It has long been the habit of serious professors to claim that student interest in athletics is so overwhelming that academic efficiency is almost non-existent. What, then, goes with the student's time? What is the meaning of these conflicting claims? Can it possibly be true that students are losing interest in all forms of activity? We ask you.

Political Kinship

The other day Doctor "Ab" showed us a letter from a woman who said that her baby ate dirt whenever he could find it. It is rumored that several campus politicians (whom we dare not name) are related to the family.

Youth — Again

Various college newspapers refer every now and then to the fact that international relations clubs located in nearly all American colleges and universities are continually making a study of the "youth movement" in foreign countries. An exhaustive study of the youth movement in the United States covering the last five years would be confined largely to the "Charleston" and the "Black Bottom," we calculate.

Our Philosophy

Our girl is always telling us how much she likes the simple things in life. Perhaps that's the reason she has so much self-respect.

Senators Will Dance—So says the favorite campus publication. Everyone is wondering whether the dignity of the senate will be upheld as on all other occasions.

The Old Order Changeth

True it is that the new library represents a great improvement over the old one. All of the fixtures are up-to-date, to say nothing of the structure itself. Every time we get into the automatic elevator, however, we wonder if the thing will run out through the roof. A few more such inventions on the old campus will make it necessary for students to go out for track in order to get some leg exercise.

JOB'S KINFOLKS

By Loretto Carroll Bailey

The twenty-fifth bill of original plays presented by the Carolina Playmakers at the Playmaker Theatre on Thursday, November 7, at eight-thirty o'clock.

CAST

KIZZIE ..... Loretto Carroll Bailey
KATE ..... Nettina Strobach
KATHERINE ..... Phoebe Harding
ESTELLE ..... Muriel Wolff
DANNY ..... Howard Bailey
CARL ROGERS ..... Hubert Heffner

Loretto Carroll Bailey, hailed last year by critics as "a promising young playwright," gives more than a promise of future brilliancy in her play Job's Kinfolks. The piece, created upon the skeletons of her one-act Job's Kinfolks and Black Water produced last year by the Playmakers, is remarkable both as to production and technical construction. It is an excellent bit of realism, well-developed and sparkling with a great amount of poignant dialogue. The play deals with three generations of a mill family in the Piedmont section of North Carolina; and the authoress presents her characters in their tragic moments with a great deal of skill. The main emphasis is on character as it relates to the situation.

Mrs. Bailey as Kizzie, the old grandmother, captivated her audience and threatened, at times, to carry the whole play by herself. She acted her part with a finish and sincerity that will prove difficult to surpass. The part was written for her, her lines were perfect, and time and again the audience was unable to refrain from applauding her speeches. It was difficult to imagine Mrs. Bailey as other than a querulous but meek old grandmother, accepting her small world with a despairing resignation to its evils and faults.

As Carl Rogers, the mill worker and husband of Katherine, Hubert Heffner was consistently good. One forgot that he was acting. He played the part with a finish that would be difficult to distinguish from that of the professional. Muriel Wolff, as Estelle McGraw, carried her part exceedingly well, giving a much better performance than she did in Magnolia's Man. Nettina Strobach, taking the part of Kate, the mother, tended to over-act her part at times; and, although she gave the effect of the mother perpetually troubled and worried, there was not enough variation of expression and tone to show change as the play progressed. Howard Bailey played well the part of Danny, the careless, youthful sweetheart of Katherine; and Phoebe Harding, taking the part of the latter, while perhaps the least polished player in the cast and, now and then, rather inconsistent and over-dramatic, was in spots exceedingly good.

Job's Kinfolks has a homely flavor and is intensely realistic and human. In the presentation of the struggle of a family to achieve something better than they have, Mrs. Bailey touches a chord that will find its kin in all of us.

(By Peggy Lintner)

One quitted the Playmaker's Theatre last night, after witnessing their commendable performance of Loretto Carroll Bailey's equally commendable play, Job's Kinfolks, with the conviction that the prestige of the Playmakers organization is founded on merit and result as well as tradition. The play itself is a striking revelation and an extremely interesting study in personality. Decidedly, it is not a problem play but a sidelight into the life of a specific people, mirroring their aspirations, their contentions and their reactions through the medium of three generations of women. Mrs. Bailey's treatment of her subject is clever and interesting and is conducive to good theatre.

To the casual theatre goer, the acting was sufficiently satisfactory and convincing to pass without question, but one prone to be slightly analytical could define, in the work of some of the actors, a tendency to misinterpretation, and in others a lack of sympathy for their roles.

Nettina Strobach, as the harried mother and breadwinner, gave evidence of the fact that she felt her part too keenly and let herself be carried away by the emotion of it. The role is a difficult one and demands the restraint which Miss Strobach did not quite achieve. She played the part throughout, with such concentrated intensity that her big scenes showed little rise and made no impression. There is no doubt, however, but that she understood the role and is capable of executing a finished performance of it.

Mr. Hubert Heffner in the role of Carl Rogers, was excellent as the callous nonentity especially when he portrayed affected nonchalance. One felt at times, however, that although there were adequate stimuli in the situations in which he found himself, he did not give an impression of normal reactions. His big moments were thoroughly convincing.

Loretto Carroll Bailey merits applause for her remarkable creation of so interesting a character as Kizzy and for her boldness and success in depicting it on the stage and giving it to the audience in such fine form. Occasionally her voice had a youthful ring but it could not be detected often enough to mar her performance.

Galsworthy says of the "mental yawns" and social positives of today, "They say it pretty well, but they've nothing to say." Phoebe Harding, as Katherine, on the other hand, had something to say but she failed to convince a certain percentage of her audience of that fact. Katherine, despite her apparent youth, did feel—revulsion, defiance, rebellion, hurt! Miss Harding was predominantly the actress. She was charming and appealing throughout her performance but save for the delightful bit of genuine work displayed in her first scene in the role of teasing, carefree youth, her performance was mild.

Howard Bailey in the role of Danny was—Danny. Aside from being a bit tepid and somewhat poised, he was comfortable. Muriel Wolff, as Estelle, gave us a good picture.

The setting was excellently contrived and helped greatly in giving the production an air of reality. One cannot help mentioning that Playmaker performances have a charmingly professional tone. The director should be commended.

On the whole, notwithstanding the several inadequacies in acting, the performance was impressionable and the play is well worth seeing.

SCHOOL CHILDREN TO ATTEND PERFORMANCE

All the county schools will turn out a little earlier on November 14, so that the school children may get a chance to hear the United States Marine Band.

The county superintendent thinks that the band is of so much value to the children that he is allowing the school busses to be used to bring all the children who desire to hear the concert to enjoy the afternoon and probably the night performances. He has also sent personal letters to all the school principals requesting them to stress the importance and the privilege of hearing this famous band.

The Durham high school, which was the first school to consent to turn out for the band, will also close a little earlier so as to allow all its students desiring to attend the concerts to be able to do so.

Tickets are to be sent to all the neighboring county and city schools Monday. These tickets are to be sold by the school authorities.

The local management is also cooperating with all the band leaders of these schools, and it is going to give a free ticket to each member of the separate school bands who sells as many as five tickets.

The tickets for the event are now on sale at the Student Supply Store and the Y.M.C.A. at the following prices: Matinee, Kenan stadium—school children 50c; students 75c, all others $1. Evening, Tin Can—school children and students $1, others $1.50 (all seats reserved).

Tar Heels Conquer Duke In Cross-Country Meet

Captain Barkley Leads Team To Win Over Blue Devil Harriers.

TAR BABIES WIN

Coach Dale Ranson's revamped Carolina cross country team administered a bitter defeat to the Blue Devil harriers in their dual meet at Kenan stadium yesterday afternoon, scoring only 21 points to the latter's 39. Captain Minor Barkley led the field for the Tar Heels and was first to break the tape. Barkley was followed by Simons of Duke, while Baucom and Phoenix of Carolina were not far behind. Barkley's time for four mile course, considerably lower than last week's, was 21:09.

In the freshman meet, in which the Tar Babies also defeated the Duke yearlings, 23 to 33, Jensen of Carolina led the field, being closely pushed by Bray of Duke. Jensen also bettered his time, covering the three mile course in 17:48.

The following represents the order in which each man in the varsity run finished:

Barkley (C), Simons (D), Baucom (C), Phoenix (C), Heizer (D), Pierce (C), J. J. Cohen (C), R. Brown (C), Gordon (D), Farris (C), Flinton (D), Robbins (D), Grimes (C), and Lawrence (D).

The freshmen finished in the following order:

Jensen (C), Bray (D), Cordle (C), Lovell (D), Cox (C), Lumpkin (C), Wood (D), Zelley (C), Lundgren (D), Lewis (C), Cordray (D), Johnston (D), Stikeleather (C), and Rorbaugh (D).

Comparative Scores!

If you don't believe figures lie, take a look at a few football scores: Virginia beat South Carolina 6-0, and South Carolina beat Maryland 26-6, but the best Virginia could do with Maryland was to take a 13-13 tie. The Tar Heels licked Maryland 43-0. What does that mean with regard to the North Carolina-South Carolina battle at Columbia Saturday? Apparently nothing.

DUKE AND TECH LISTED ON GAMECOCK'S '30 SCHEDULE

The University of South Carolina announced last Wednesday that football games had been arranged between the Gamecocks and Georgia Tech, and the Duke Blue Devils for next year. The Duke game will be played in Columbia and the Tech game in Atlanta.

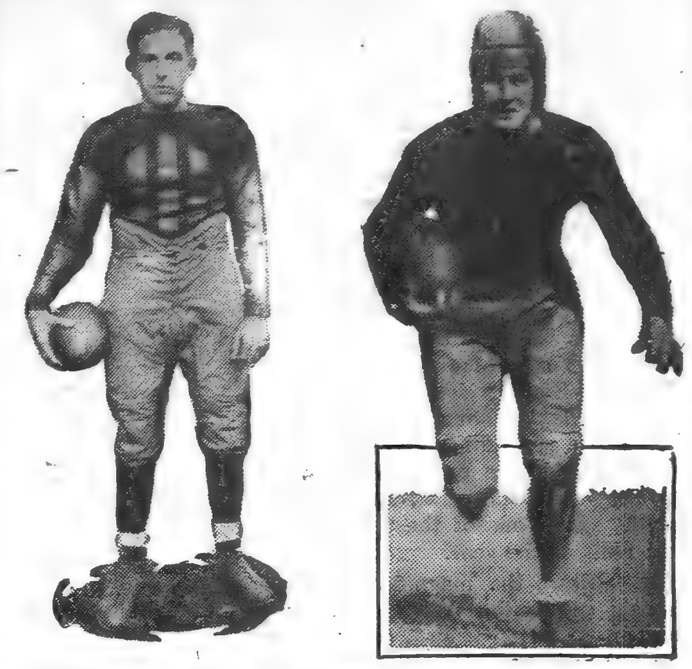
S. I. C. Predictions

(By Joe Eagles)

Football in the south today offers quite a few interesting battles. On some of these hinge the hopes of prospective southern conference champions. On others hinge the hopes of teams to make the 1929 season a success as far as they are concerned. The nature of the games makes predicting the outcomes very difficult for in several cases the teams seem so evenly matched as to make their chances for victory almost a toss-up. However we venture the following predictions.

Of course the game at Columbia this afternoon assumes greatest interest to fans in this section. The Tar Heels will enter this fray with the ability to present their full strength for the first time in many weeks. Also they will be backed by strong reserve material which received experience last Saturday. The Gamecocks are all wrought up over the game according to reports emanating from their stronghold. They are determined to put a crimp in the winning activities of North Carolina. This spirit along with an undoubted ability to play good football will make the South Carolina eleven mighty hard to stop. However we believe that Magner, Nash, Branch, et al can more than match the ball carrying ability of Boineau, Rhame and Zobel and for this reason we feel safe in predicting that the Tar Heels will return to the Hill Sunday with another victory tucked away.

Duke plays her second game in her new stadium and her first football game in the southern conference today when she tackles Louisiana State. Again things look dark for the Blue Devils. So far this fall the Durhamites have won only one game and lost four. Some consolation can be gathered from the fact that all the teams she has lost to have been exceptionally strong. In our opinion Duke has a strong team and one which will give any eleven in this state a lot of trouble. But this afternoon we think that she is again stepping a little out of her class in battling Louisiana State, a team which already has six wins to its credit and has preserved a perfect record to date. Therefore we venture to say that the Blue Devils will lose but not by a large score, indeed if at all by a very small margin.



The Kentucky-Alabama game holds much interest in that both teams are strong and that Kentucky is a potential conference champion. Alabama bowed to Dan McGugin's Vanderbilt eleven last Saturday while the Colonels decisively whipped Clemson in the biggest upset of the week-end. On a basis of their season's records we believe that Kentucky will continue its perfect record by winning over the Tide.

Tulane, another prospective claimant for conference honors will meet Auburn. It is a well known fact that the Plainsmen have been the footmat for other southern elevens for the past few seasons and to date they have shown little tendency to disprove this. On the other hand, Tulane under the leadership of Banker has piled up a very impressive record which includes victories over both Georgia and Georgia Tech. We see no reason why Tulane should not score almost at will against Auburn and they should experience no trouble in keeping their slate clean.

Vanderbilt will meet Georgia Tech this afternoon and on this game hang her hopes for honors. Winner last week over Alabama, Vandy stepped into the limelight as a potential threat for the southern crown. Tech undefeated last fall, has had an up and down season. In some games they have shown great power and in others have seemed but a shadow of their old selves. This afternoon we believe that McGugin's eleven will come out ahead of Alexander's fighting Tech eleven.

Other games predicted are: V. P. I. over Virginia; Clemson over V. M. I.; Yale over Maryland; Tennessee over Carson-Newman.

South Carolinians

Jimmy Ward (left) and Strudwick Nash, Tar Heel backfield stars and natives of South Carolina, who will play in behalf of North Carolina against their home folks this afternoon when the two teams clash in Columbia.

Probable Lineup For South Carolina Game

N. C.	Pos.	S. C.
Holt	Left End	Powell
Farris	Left Guard	Hughey
Lipscomb	Center	Beall
Fysal	Right Guard	Moore
Adkins	Right Tackle	Shand
Fenner	Right End	Greshette
Branch	Quarterback	Rhame
Ward	Left Half	Boineau
Nash	Right Half	Zobel
Spaulding	Fullback	Stoddard

TRACK SQUAD GUESTS OF CAROLINA THEATRE

The entire track squad and the managers were the guests of Manager E. C. Smith of the Carolina theatre at the show last night. The picture was "Lucky Star" with Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell.

The members of the team were entertained as a special reward for their victory in the Carolina-Duke meet. Manager Smith was the host on a similar occasion last year.

FOUR REGULARS RETURN TO GAME

Magner, Koenig, Fenner, and Eskew Expected to Face South Carolina.

Four injured Tar Heel regulars may be back in the line-up when the University of North Carolina eleven faces the South Carolina Gamecocks at Columbia Saturday afternoon.

Magner, Koenig, Fenner and Eskew were all nursing injuries while their mates subdued N. C. State last week, and the possibility of their return lends a brighter tint to North Carolina hopes.

Magner, Tar Heel offensive ace, didn't get into the State game at all. Koenig, tackle; Fenner, end, and Eskew, guard, all played approximately a quarter apiece, but none of the trio of stalwart linemen has been really in tip-top shape since the Georgia battle.

Magner is the boy who has been averaging eight yards a clip for every time he has carried the ball this season.

Koenig, weighing 190, and Fenner and Eskew, 180-pounders each, will bring both weight and experience to the lineup again.

All are recuperating this week from their hurts, and they are working light each day to limber up and get back in shape to stand the gaff of a stiff scrap with the Gamecocks.

If these boys are right Saturday, Coaches Collins, Cerney and Fetzer will have but one worry on the score of gaps in the line-up—Pete Wyrick, veteran quarterback, who sustained a new injury to his back last Saturday that has lost him to the team until the Thanksgiving game with Virginia.

Wrenn Out

Creighton Wrenn, varsity cross country man for three years, will probably be out of all the remaining cross country meets because of his confinement to the infirmary with the mumps. Wrenn was among the first five Carolina men who came in together in the meet last Saturday, and his loss will handicap the team.

The world has few great leaders now because there are so few individuals dumb enough to be followers.—Durham Herald.

Tar Heels And Gamecocks To Engage In Annual Contest This Afternoon In Columbia

"Heinie" Anderson

FROM COLUMBIA, South Carolina, come the reports that the Tar Heels will face a fighting Gamecock eleven which will be defending a tradition as well as seeking to avenge a 0-0 tie. Boineau is reported as being "hot" while Rhame, Zobel and Stoddard are all being warmed up.

WHILE SOUTH CAROLINA is being handed the small end of the predicted score there is no doubt in the majority of the U. N. C. backers that this will be one of the hardest games on the Tar Heel schedule for the rest of the season.

THE SCORES of the past three or four years are in favor of U. N. C. In 1925 the Blue and White stopped the Gamecocks by a 7 to 0 score. In this game Garrett Morehead, playing his first year on the varsity, broke through the Gamecock line and blocked a punt on the latter's own ten yard line. Bill Dodderer grabbed the ball and stepped over the line for the touchdown. Emmett Underwood kicked the goal. In 1926 another 7 to 0 victory was won over the Columbia eleven. In this game Tom Young, fleetfooted Tar Heel back, picked up a fumble on his own 30 yard line and ran 70 yards for the only tally of the game. On the mudsoaked field last year neither S. C. or N. C. was able to score.

SOUTH CAROLINA talent will meet South Carolina talent this afternoon when Strud Nash, Jimmy Ward and Bud Eskew show their stuff on Melton field. Both Nash and Ward will probably be in the backfield this afternoon, while Eskew will undoubtedly serve in the line. No doubt the South Carolinians will say after the game, "Well, it took South Carolinians to do it." Possible true, win or lose.

THE GAME TODAY will probably be the last hard battle that the Tar Heels will have on their schedule. Nearly all of the others are, according to scores, doped to succumb by several touchdowns, but a victory is probable in any case.

DUKE hasn't played any games in the state yet or any games that a sideliner can judge by, but their showing against the larger teams doesn't seem to show a championship eleven.

VIRGINIA also seems out of the running after the tie with Maryland. Virginia and Carolina, no matter what the strength of the teams is reported, always seem to give a good game. Season's scores count as naught when these two teams meet, and the Thanksgiving game this year will probably be no exception.

DAVIDSON should be taken in tow fairly easily next week. Wake Forest, victims of the Tar Heels, stomped on the Wildcats recently to ride up a step in the big five standing.

CAROLINA FAVORED

Teams to Meet as Feature of Home-Coming Day in South Carolina.

ZOBEL WILL LEAD BIRDS

The South Carolina Gamecocks will attempt to stem the winning tide of the Tar Heels when they meet this afternoon on Melton field in Columbia, S. C. Both teams are attempting to wipe out the 0-0 tie of last year, but the Tar Heels are being given a margin in the prophesied outcome.

The Gamecocks of 1929 are counting on Zobel to lead their attack against the University this year as he did in 1928. This time, however, Zobel is backed up by such outstanding stars as Boineau and Rhame.

Boineau and Rhame have both shown up well in the games so far this season. In several of South Carolina's games they have shown their pass snatching ability by frequently intercepting passes and making touchdowns or long runs.

Before the South Carolina game last year the Gamecocks were being given three to two odds by many of the sports writers. This year the odds are reversed and the Tar Heels carry to Columbia one of the best teams seen at Carolina in recent years.

In 1926 the Tar Heels took the South Carolinians in tow by a 7 to 0 score, when Tom Young, fleetfooted Tar Heel back, picked up a fumble and ran 70 yards for the only tally of the game. This game was played when the Notre Dame system was in its infancy at U. N. C., but now that it has passed that age and is nearing maturity the upset, if any, will come from South Carolina and not North Carolina.

When the two teams meet this afternoon there will be a South Carolina tradition at stake. So far the Gamecocks have not lost a game on home-coming day. Although the number of games played on such days have been few it does not in any way alter the vim and vigor with which the South Carolinians will defend it.

One way on figuring a Tar Heel victory is to consider the scores of both teams so far this season. U. N. C. took the Maryland Old Liners down by a smashing 45 to 0 victory. Maryland played the Cavaliers from the University of Virginia to a 13-13 tie, while Virginia defeated South Carolina on South Carolina's home grounds. These scores may not be very valuable in counting up the size of the victory but they will help in prophesying the winner.

Various and Sundry Notices Ask for Return of Articles

(By B. H. Whitton)

Varied and sundry are the notices hanging from the hooks in the cloak room of the new library asking for the return of articles taken from there. The requests range from very polite questions to almost positive abuse of the person who "borrowed" the article in question.

One notice begins: "Will the low-lifer who took my new Finchley slicker . . ." Another starts: "Will the grand devil who deliberately stold . . ." (Yes, it's spelled that way). It seems that some people are very frank in their opinions of those who removed their articles from the hooks.

The notice which starts with "Will the grand devil who deliberately stold my hat" has a note of humor in it, when the writer goes on to say, "a new Stetson, bring it back to the place where he found it. I know your head isn't large enough to fill it."

Another appears to have been posted by an optimist. He asks for the return of his property in this manner: "Some one has taken my hat off this hook 'by mistake'."

Those seeing these notices have evidently wanted to have some fun out of it too, and one note, written on a library call slip, asking whether the person who removed a blue overcoat will return it has written after it in another hand, "Yes!" and still further along is "No" in large letters.

To call attention to the fact that he really wants his slicker returned, someone has printed out this notice and hung it on a hook: "Will the person who took a new grey slicker please return same here. I will certainly appreciate it."

The sign which calls the thief or borrower a low-lifer is written on a call slip too, and it requests the return of the new Finchley "slicker (trench coat) or whatever you wish to term it."

It really seems that those who have been taking things from the cloak room and caused this posting of notices have been quite judicious in their choice, for three of the five notices there were for articles described as "new," and the make of the article mentioned in three cases is considered quite good by members of the student body.

"Sweetie" Features Program Next Week

In keeping with his usual policy, Manager Smith of the Carolina theatre announces another unusual run of pictures for the coming week. At the head of the bill is "Sweetie," with Helen Kane, Nancy Carroll, and Jack Oakie, which will be shown Monday and Tuesday. In it Helen Kane, the world's foremost exponent of the "baby-talk" school of coquetry, sings three of her latest songs, "He's So Unusual," "I Think You'll Like It" and "The Prep Step." Most of the scenes are laid in North Carolina, with a sprinkling of show life to provide the proper setting for Jack Oakie and Nancy Carroll. It is one of the peppiest films of the year.

"Rio Rita," the magnificent Ziegfeld production which enjoyed an extended run on Broadway, has been transferred to the screen and will be shown in Chapel Hill Wednesday and Thursday. Bebe Daniels is the star of this lavishly presented picture, and sings the songs which were among the outstanding hits of the show on the stage.

Walter Huston and Claudette Colbert co-star in "The Lady Lies," Friday's presentation. The picture is, according to the Greensboro papers, one of the greatest which has ever been seen in that city.

On Saturday Louis Wolheim will be seen in "Frozen Justice," which was built up around the personality of the famous star of "What Price Glory"

Two Girls Severely Injured By Car On Franklin Street

Car Driven By Edward Fann Of Chapel Hill; No Charges Made Against Driver.

A co-ed and her visitor were severely injured at 8:30 o'clock Saturday night when they were struck by an automobile driven by Edward Fann, as they were crossing the main street in front of the Carolina theatre. A second co-ed narrowly escaped injury when she jumped ahead of her companions as the automobile bore down on them.

The injured girls, Miss Elizabeth Grant, junior, Wilmington, and Miss Thyra Black, Greensboro, were crossing from the north to the south side of the street when they were struck by the automobile traveling west on the main street. Miss Rosy Lazarus, freshman, Sanford, barely managed to move from the path of the car.

Witnesses rushed the two girls to the infirmary in a passing automobile. Examination by Dr. Eric A. Abernathy, University physician, disclosed that they were suffering from painful body lacerations and injuries. Miss Grant sustained a sprained left ankle while her visitor suffered a sprained right ankle. X-ray examinations will be made today to determine the extent of the injuries.

Fann, who is an employee of the building department was arrested immediately after the accident. He told police that the three girls stepped from behind a parked automobile and that because they separated he was unable to swerve to either side. No charge has been preferred against him. He was a student in the University two years ago.

Y Cabinets To Meet Tomorrow Night 7:15

The three Y cabinets will hold their usual weekly meetings tomorrow night at the Y at 7:15.

The program of the sophomore cabinet will consist of a general discussion of the subjects brought up by speakers during the past month. These speakers were Prof. E. R. Mosher, Prof. H. D. Meyer and Dr. A. Herbert Gray. There will also be a short business discussion. Since the sophomore group has charge of the vespers for this year, it intends to create more interest in them than has been shown in the past.

In the freshman council there will be a discussion, left over from last meeting, on the subject of "What is the Student Y Program." It has been planned to get a special speaker to speak to the council on the subject of the "Bible."

There will also be an important meeting of the junior-senior cabinet. All members are especially requested to be present.

Phi Initiations

The Phi assembly will hold its second annual initiation of new members next Tuesday night, November 12, at 7:15 o'clock. All men to whom have been extended the rights of the floor and who have not been formally initiated are requested to be present to receive their formal initiation. All men who desire admission to the Phi assembly and have not as yet attended a regular meeting are also requested to apply for admission at this time. After the new men have been admitted, the assembly will discuss bills on its calendar.

Regular Staff Meet

The regular meeting of the Tar Heel editorial staff and reporters will be held at 7:00 o'clock tonight at the office in the Alumni building. All members are expected to be present unless previously excused.

STUDENTS PREFER CAVALIER SPIRIT

Writer Says Change Is Taking Place In Attitude Of College Men Towards Life.

"In my six months' tour of colleges and universities," writes Vachel Lindsay in the November College Humor, "I noted among the students and young professors a tide that is rising, the Cavalier spirit in a 1929-1939 form.

"Our younglings believe in the divine right of splendor, neither the splendor of kings nor of Babbitts, but the splendor of their own sense of design, the divine right to choose and put on their own pageants, to give Maypole dances and elect their own queen of the May.

"They believe in freedom in choice of religion more than any other one group of citizens of the United States, and a typical committee for a Washington's birthday celebration of distinction and even grandure may be a Catholic, a Christian Scientist, a Jew, a Unitarian and a kid from Chicago still ballyhooing about Ingersoll watches and Robert G. Ingersoll. But they work in harmony and friendship to the end of achieving this new splendor, which challenges and destroys the Babbitts, who are their own blood fathers.

"And they hate above all the caste system, temporarily created by Babbitt, which puts the business man above the artist in every field of life. Their form of Americanism would put the born artist above the whole business system of America and keep him there, with his heel on the neck of Babbitt, whatever the blood or stock or race or family history of the artist. If that is a caste system, they have indeed a caste system.

"They are not Cavaliers in sense in which Cavaliers of old England fought Cromwell and Milton. Quite the contrary. If a Cromwell or Milton should appear, they would follow him and sing with him to the death. They hate the little cowards and will follow the bold and gallant spirits wherever they find them.

"And they are brilliant, dashing, decorative, always on horseback in imagination, and in that sense they are Cavaliers."

COLONEL PRATT TO SPEAK HERE ARMISTICE DAY

Two Performances of "The Soul of France" To Be Given At Carolina Theatre Today; Benefit War Veterans.

Col. Joseph Hyde Pratt, who was colonel of the 105th Engineers in the 30th Division, will deliver the Armistice Day address here tomorrow.

He will speak in Gerrard hall at 10:30 o'clock. The ceremonies have been arranged by a joint committee of the University faculty and the American Legion post. Dr. John M. Booker is chairman of this committee.

Chaplain Lawrence will deliver the invocation. Before Colonel Pratt's address, Addison Hibbard will read the roll of the University's war dead, and Paul Robertson, commander of the post, will read the roll of the war dead of the village of Chapel Hill. The University band will play "America" and "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Immediately before 11 o'clock taps will be sounded on the bugle, and exactly at 11 the assemblage will maintain silence for one minute.

The celebration in Chapel Hill will begin Sunday with a presentation of a movie, "The Soul of France," at the Carolina theatre for the benefit of disabled World War veterans in the hospital at Oteen—one performance at 3:30 in the afternoon and another at 8:30 in the evening.

The play is being put on by the American Legion post with the cooperation of E. Carrington Smith, manager of the Carolina theatre. Mr. Smith obtained the rights to the film and is donating the use of the house. No admission fee will be charged; the contribution to the disabled veterans will be in the form of a free-will offering.

Before the afternoon performance Rev. A. S. Lawrence, state chaplain of the Legion as well as chaplain of the post here, will conduct a brief memorial service and will make a few minutes talk about the activities and purposes of the Legion. He will lay particular stress upon the work the Legion is doing for the relief of disabled veterans and their families.

LIBRARY HAS TWO FAMOUS VISITORS

Dugald Niven and John Fedeler Come Here To Study Library Organization.

The University library had two distinguished visitors last Friday — Dugald Niven, librarian of the public library of Bulawayo, Southern Rhodesia, Africa, and John H. Fedeler, superintendent of the New York public library building.

Mr. Dugald came to the United States for the purpose of studying the organization and administration of libraries, his visit being made possible through a grant from the Carnegie Corporation of New York. He spent the day with Dr. Wilson, University librarian, discussing the present status of libraries in the southern states.

Mr. Niven stated that the main problem of the libraries in Southern Africa is the same as the problem of the libraries in the southern states, in that service has to be provided for the two races. This problem is very expensive if it is met as it should be. A double system of service costs twice the amount of money that just one library service costs.

Mr. Niven is particularly interested in the establishment of library workers. The University library is a pioneer in teaching library work in that it started its extension department years ago.

Mr. Fedeler only spent about three hours at the library. Mr. Fedeler's main interest lies in the book conveyor, a unique feature of the library. He inspected the conveyor with the view of the installation of a similar one at the New York library.

There is not another book conveyor in the United States like the one at the University library, although several are under construction at various libraries. This conveyor has attracted librarians from many distant points, and has given the University library much publicity. Mr. Fedeler was very much surprised with the appearance of the building, but when he arrived at the head of the main stairway on the second floor he was heard to gasp in amazement at the sight of the circulation desk in the circulation room, and the spacious reading room opposite the circulation room.

Stallings Is Very Enthusiastic Over Playmakers Performance

Author Of "What Price Glory" Expresses His Opinion On Production Of Loretto Carroll Bailey's Mill Village Tragedy.

(By Milt Wood)

"Damn it. This is what I call the real American theatre. You get a fine dinner, by God, then you are taken to a good play, and served coffee and sandwiches afterward. And it doesn't cost you a damn cent."

The author of "What Price Glory," "The Big Parade" and "The Cock Eyed World" was speaking. And in typical "What Price Glory" terms, Laurence Stallings commented on his evening at Chapel Hill Friday night he attended a dinner party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Nash, a performance of "Job's Kinfolks" at the Playmaker theatre, and afterward joined in a reception in the Green Room.

In this characteristic manner, Mr. Stallings echoed the sentiments of his illustrious house guest, Walter Lippmann, well known author and a member of the editorial staff of the New York World.

It must not have been just another evening of theatre for these dyed in the wool New Yorkers, saturated with the best and worst that Broadway drama dishes up. In spite of critical eyes on everything, as is their wont, they enjoyed the evening immensely.

This proves it. Mr. Stallings is noted for his record of having sat through only two entire plays in the past several years. He usually gets up and walks out at the end of the first act or in the middle of the second. But not so Friday night. He remained through the entire per-

Gamecocks' Costly Fumbles Turned Into Three Touchdowns.

North Carolina Troubled By Laval's Tricks In First Period, But Gamecock's never Threaten Rest Of Game.

Columbia, S. C., Nov. 9.—Brushing aside a deceptive Gamecock offensive, the University of North Carolina rolled up 40 points in straight sweeps through Palmetto territory to smother the University of South Carolina here today before 20,000 homecomers, practically clinching the Carolina and South Atlantic titles.

Their backs stopped dead in their tracks and their passes knocked down, the Tar Heels almost succumbed to the tricky Gamecock attack in the first quarter. A surprised Carolina line allowed Gamecock backs, loosed by deceiving fake plays, to sift through for long gains. The North Carolina score in this quarter resulted from a South Carolina fumble.

Returning with renewed vigor in the second quarter, the Gamecocks staved off a second touchdown three times. The fourth march through their territory found a weakening defense unable to stand off the determined

FRATERNITY TO GIVE SERIES OF MUSIC PROGRAMS

Local Alpha Rho Chapter To Sponsor Performances; First Program In December.

The local Alpha Rho chapter of the national music fraternity, Phi Mu Alpha, announces a series of Sunday evening music programs, to begin in December and continue through the remainder of the school year. One program will be given each month. R. A. Hovis, is president of the local chapter and made this announcement Saturday at the conclusion of the first meeting of the year, held last Monday night at the music building.

These Sunday evening programs will be offered in a variety of ways. Students who are members of the fraternity will give programs. Other music students on the campus will be invited to appear. Faculty members of the music department have agreed to give lecture recitals from time to time. Guest musicians from other towns in the state will be invited to give programs. Some of the evenings will be devoted to music appreciation study.

These Sunday night programs are to be open meetings to which the public will be invited. It is the method that the Alpha Rho chapter chooses for its efforts this year to promote particularly American music and American musicians—the idea that is one of the main purposes of the national organization.

Detailed announcement of the first program and date will be made in about two weeks.

University Band

The University band will go to Durham Monday afternoon to participate in the Armistice day parade, sponsored by the American Legion post of Durham. The band goes at the invitation of the Durham post, and will remain for supper at seven o'clock as guests of the Legion. Sixty-two men will make the trip, in two busses that will be sent over by the manager for the parade.

The band will also take part in the campus Armistice day program to be held in Gerrard hall Monday morning at 10:30.

SLADE IS SPEAKER AT SPANISH CLUB MEETING

Friday night the November meeting of the Spanish club was held in the parish house of the Episcopal church at 7:30 p. m., with an unusually large number of members present.

Mr. J. J. Slade, Jr., was the principal speaker of the evening, giving a very interesting talk on Los Tarascon de Michoacan.

Mr. Slade discussed the influence of this aboriginal tribe upon Mexican civilization, and its present status, illustrating his talk with a number of pictures.

ESPERANTO CLUB TO BE ORGANIZED

Group To Study International Language; Grammar Can Be Learned In Hour.

A club for the study of Esperanto, the international language, will be organized, and will meet next Tuesday at 5:00 o'clock in the Y for the first time. It will be under the direction of Dr. E. C. Metzinthin of the Department of Germanic Languages, a recognized authority on Esperanto.

The idea of the formation of the club grew out of a discussion of Esperanto at a meeting last week of Amphoterothen, at which Dr. Metzinthin explained the need and purpose of the new language. The current widespread movement toward world peace demands a language which can be understood by all nations, which is simple and easy to learn, and which will do away with the unnecessary elements which are present in all modern languages.

Esperanto, Dr. Metzinthin declared, fills such a need. The entire grammar can be learned within an hour, and conversational ease follows with a few lessons. The language is built on common-sense methods, and is the result of prolonged study by a group of international experts.

An international Esperanto Congress meets every year, and there is a strong organization in the United States, with headquarters in New York and Chicago. A successful movement is on foot to introduce Esperanto into American schools and colleges. If sufficient interest is aroused on the campus here, an effort will be made to have Esperanto included in the curriculum next year as a regular course carrying credit.

This New Painless Language

(H. G.)

An announcement of considerable intesest is carried in today's Tar Heel, to the effect that a movement has been started to introduce the study of Esperanto. In order to test the actual interest of the campus, a club is being formed which, if successful, may lead to the introduction of regular courses in the new language.

Much has been heard of Esperanto in the last few years, but little definite information has been forthcoming. It has been described as the panacea for international ills, which in itself it undoubtedly cannot be. As a means toward that end, however, Esperanto is valuable.

International peace meetings and congresses lose much of their effect when carried on in languages unknown or not understood by one or more of the participants. Translations are never entirely satisfactory. The bond of a common language, placing all peoples on equal lingual footing, would do much to promote mutual understanding among nations.

Esperanto, it seems, is an active movement. There are organizations in all the important nations of the world which are aiding its development. In Paris there is an Esperanto Bureau, which puts visitors who cannot speak French but who do understand Esperanto in touch with people who can help them.

The new language, according to those who know it, is not like Spanish, or French, or any other language. It is entirely new, and it is especially designed to do away with the multitudinous superfluous elements of German, French, English, and other modern languages. The grammar is condensed to an absolute minimum, and those who know claim that it can be mastered in the short space of sixty minutes.

If this is true, then its popularity in the university would seem to be assured. Finally adopted as the international language, it would do away with many burnings of midnight oil, endless study of verbs and genders, and perhaps, those staring black E's and F's. It all seems too good to be true, yet the expounders of the Esperanto doctrine claim no miracles and are undoubtedly sincere.

With such a picture of a practically painless language for the future, the college days of the coming generation should be perceptibly brightened, and the development of the study of Esperanto here should be more than ordinarily interesting.

Mr. Hoover Turns Pollyanna

Herbert Hoover, as president of the United States, and in keeping with his prosperity outlook toward the country, has issued a Thanksgiving proclamation. This fact is insignificant in itself since the presidents of the United States from time immemorial have issued such proclamations. But the language of Hoover's proclamation is interesting.

The chief executive of the country says, "God has greatly blessed us as a nation in the year now drawing to a close. . . . The fruits of industry have been of unexampled quantity and value. Both capital and labor have enjoyed an exceptional prosperity."

"Both capital and labor have enjoyed exceptional prosperity." It is high treason today to utter a single word against this invincible prosperity which sweeps all before it. Despite the word of sane economists and the lessons of history, these disciples of the prosperity cult have determined to proclaim and legislate prosperity. It is needless to say that it can't be done.

Any one in close touch with the economic situation of the country knows that the year coming to a close has been one of the most severe in the decade. Due to the gambling of prosperity crazed bankers, who sought to garner a share of the money being made on Wall Street by sending all available funds to the chief money market, it became more impossible as the year progressed to carry on normal building and expansion in practically every city of the United States.

Mr. Hoover has overlooked the numerous bank failures in the South. The president closes his eyes to the true condition of and unrest among the working men of the country. The Gastonia disturbances might just as well not have ever taken place so far as the president takes any heed of it.

Small businesses unable to secure legitimate loans to tide them over the "hard times" have long been going bankrupt.

The amount of advertising carried by nationally circulated magazines is a true indication of the prosperity of the country. The size of practically all these journals has been cut to a minimum in 1929. Newspapers, themselves, have been conducting desperate advertising campaigns to keep their heads above water.

No, Mr. Hoover, these United States are not "enjoying an exceptional prosperity."—J. E. D.

The University Extension Division

One of the greatest departmental growths of this institution in the past several years has taken place in the Extension Division, which serves the purpose of carrying the University to the people of the state. Those who are responsible for its present usefulness should be accorded no small measure of credit and acknowledgement.

Fortunately the question of whether it is better to educate the several hundred students of the state who come to Chapel Hill than to carry the work of the University to the people of the state is no longer debated by a backward and unprogressive minority. Generally speaking, the masses of North Carolinia's citizenry have been educated beyond such a point of controversy. The Extension Division has proven conclusively that both are simultaneously possible. It has extended its service to the state in the very years when development within the body was nearing its present zenith. These facts have completely discredited the idea that the University should confine itself to Chapel Hill.

The term University of North Carolina no longer signifies merely an institution located at Chapel Hill in the county of Orange. It rather signifies a progressive spirit of educational circles throughout the state. large numbers of correspondence students have been enrolled as non-resident students. Yet these individuals are full fledged members of the student body. The role of leadership which the University has filled has been greatly extended, therefore, by the Extension Division.

It is now possible for a person to take the equivalent of a year's work on the Hill, and at the same time hold a job off the Hill. This offers a great opportunity to teachers throughout the state, for they can secure degrees from the University that they would not otherwise have time to work for. This is rapidly raising the qualifications of teachers and producing in turn more adequate instruction. Through this medium the Extension Division is doing the state a great service.

Oftentimes, students are compelled to drop out of the University before graduation. Provisions are now made whereby such students may take correspondence during their absence from the Hill and re-enter later with enough credits to enable them to graduate at the regular time.

We take this opportunity to say a word of praise for the extension division, for we feel that its part in the making of a "Greater Carolina" is far from negligible.—J. C. W.

Pen Points

By H. J. Galland

A slight idea of the need for the Carnegie Foundation's recent report on the over-stimulation of football in the colleges is supplied by our own Tar Heel. In a special box on the front page is a notice in bold-face type about the attempts in South Carolina to work the Gamecocks up to fighting pitch by misquoting University News Bureau despatches, and by other means.

"All this," says the notice, "is an obvious attempt to work the South Carolinians up for the game. A victory over the North Carolina team would boost South Carolina considerably in the Conference. A win for the Tar Heels is almost necessary as there is no reason for a loss." All this, too, is typical of the way football is thought of nowadays in most colleges, and, we think, all this is rather childish.

Isn't it possible to play football for the sake of the game, and isn't it enough for the Tar Heels to win in order to make it a good game, rather than because "there is no reason for a loss." Ours may be a voice in the wilderness, and undoubtedly is, but (we whisper) shouldn't a little of the modern hysteria be removed from the game, and isn't (don't say it aloud) the Carnegie Foundation making a step in that direction?

Another box in the Tar Heel proclaims the need for signatures on letters intended to be published in the Reader's Opinions Column. In this case it seems that a girl failed to sign, and so her letter could not be published until the editor was informed of "the correct initials and address of the anonymous writer." And don't ever again say a compositor hasn't a sense of humor.

Business at Spencer hall on Saturday night is, we hear, rushing.

And we should worry what you think—its original with us.

The latest campus racket is revealed by the notice board at the Y. There a neat card informs the world that a rumble seat in a Ford coupe is for rent for a trip to Greensboro. And what's more, the offer was accepted. Obviously, the gentleman with the Ford coupe is a racketeer, and we confidently expect him to line up everybody going to Durham with an empty seat, charge for it, and split with the owner of the car.

The Playmakers should be blossoming under a veritable sun of attention and praise. Instead of one reviewer, as in the past, there are now two, and instead of slams and brickbats, also a. i. t. p., there are now nice fragrant bouquets. Shades of Joe Mitchell!

And now its Esperanto in one hour—John, chuck that German grammar out the window, please.

North Carolina Beats Gamecocks 40 to 0

Ward, Nash and Spaulding Share In Carolina's Victory

Tar Heels Increase 32 Point Per Game Average.

Tar Heels. Slusser, substitute North Carolina halfback, carried the ball over for the marker.

The third South Carolina fumble at a critical point of the game broke the home team's morale. Branch's kickoff was recovered by Carolina after a South Carolina fumble. Here the defense stiffened and Ward was forced to throw a pass over the South Carolina goal line. The Gamecock offense was breaking down. Another costly fumble and the large score which followed was almost inevitable. With little or no chance of victory, again and again the South Carolinians fumbled.

It was another case of a hidden ball offensive going to pieces when the gridmen lost their ability to hold on to the leather.

The basis of this attack does not allow for a possibility of a fumble. An error at almost any point is suicide. Almost certainly a touchdown.

The third touchdown followed from a pass behind the line of scrimmage, Rhame to Zobel. Zobel missed the elusive gridskin and Nelson fell on it as it scooted over the Gamecock goal line. North Carolina failed to make the extra point. Score 20-0.

At this point Coach Collins began to substitute his second and third string players. Even this boon was too little to stir up the defeated Gamecocks. The half ended with the ball in midfield.

The remainder of the contest was played wholly in South Carolina territory. After each of the last three touchdowns, South Carolina received the ball only to stop dead against the now wary Tar Heel defense. A punt and the long march to the Gamecock goal line inevitably followed. North Carolina displayed her best football. Regulars and substitutes alike responded to the charge with fight. The Gamecocks were swept off their feet. Once ahead, the Tar Heels are hard to beat as their season's record shows. They play better on the long end of the score.

Branch returned Boineau's punt to the South Carolina 37-yard line. Nash made 10 yards and the first down. Spaulding made four yards through the line. Spaulding got three more yards in the same spot. Ward made it a first down through center. Ward pushed two more yards through center. Changing to an off tackle play, South Carolina was found napping, and Ward side-stepped through right tackle for 13 yards and a touchdown. Spaulding kicked the extra point.

Lipscomb kicked off 45 yards to Boineau who returned to his 34-yard line. Boineau failed to gain through the line. On the first play Brigham stepped back and hurled a long pass which was intercepted by Fenner and returned to the Birds' 38-yard line. Nash, in two off tackle plays, made seven yards. On the next play, Spaulding fumbled. Ward recovered. The Tar Heels were penalized five yards for off-sides. Spaulding jumped high in the air to pull down Ward's pass and race for a touchdown. On the try for extra point South Carolina was off-sides.

Intercepting another pass by Zobel, Spaulding returned the ball to the 44-yard line. Branch took the ball in a right tackle spurt for a 16-yard gain. The third period ended. House made five yards and Branch made six more for a first down.

Ball on the South Carolina 30-yard line. Branch clipped off six yards through left tackle. Spaulding accounted for four yards in two tries and House made four yards for a first down. Branch made one yard through the line. House lost a yard on the next play. Ward raced around right tackle for a touchdown. Branch failed to kick the extra point and the score was 40-0. The game ended a few minutes later with N. C. threatening again.

DAVIDSON NEXT TEAM ON SLATE

Wildcats, Cavaliers, and Blue Devils Only Games Left To Be Played.

With the Tar Heel invasion of South Carolina in the history column, Tar Heel supporters were thinking tonight principally in terms of Davidson, Virginia and Duke—the last three games on the North Carolina card.

All three teams are ancient rivals. Victories against Davidson and Duke are necessary for another state championship. And any good Carolina alumnus can tell you why Carolina must beat Virginia.

Season records don't mean much when it comes to playing those three teams. The Tar Heels can blaze away like flashing comets, and Davidson, Virginia and Duke slump away all season, but when the Tar Heels meet one of these three teams it's a different thing—a hard, close battle that may turn either way.

The Tar Heels have been fighting the Davidson Wildcats almost annually since 1898, yet there have been but five games won by as much as four touchdowns. The Tar Heels' 14-13 and 24-20 Virginia victories of the last two years illustrate plenty of heat in that sector of competition. The intense rivalry with Duke needs no comment.

It seems these three outfits play the "inspired" game against the Tar Heels—like Davidson played against Army and Citadel.

Davidson will without doubt flash to brilliance against Carolina, and fans will probably agree there's to be a fight that season records would never intimate. Virginia has the great Johnny Sloan back in uniform and is getting better every game. And the Duke Blue Devils have already passed out word that they expect to lick the Tar Heels.

The Virginia game, annual Southern Thanksgiving Day classic, will be the only home game. Tickets have already gone on sale, through the Athletic association office here, at $2.50, plus 20 cents for registration and postage. And from the way they're going it looks like another stadium-jammer, like the 28,000 sell-out when Carolina and Virginia dedicated Kenan stadium in 1927. Davidson is to be met on Richardson field next Saturday, and Duke will be met in the Blue Devils' stadium.

DeHart Says Report Of 1930 Game With S. C. Is Premature

Coach James DeHart of Duke University last night declared that reports from Columbia, S. C., to the effect that the University of South Carolina would meet Duke on the gridiron next fall were premature, since arrangements for the game had not been completed.

"I have been dickering with South Carolina, offering a two-year contract with the understanding that the Gamecocks play here in 1930 and Duke at Columbia in 1931," Coach DeHart declared.

The Duke mentor stated that South Carolina may have agreed to his terms, thereby authorizing the announcement from Columbia, but said that he could not make an official statement until he had heard from the South Carolina authorities.

In discussing the Duke schedule for 1930, Coach DeHart announced that Washington and Lee had been signed for a two year contract and that the Generals would play in the Duke stadium next Thanksgiving with the Blue Devils going to Lexington for the Turkey day clash in 1931.

DUKE BEATS L. S. U. IN FIRST SOUTHERN CONFERENCE CLASH

Duke Stadium, Durham, Nov. 9.—(Special)—Making her debut in southern conference football here today, Duke University defeated Louisiana State University by the score of 32-6.

It was the first home game that the Devils had played since the Pittsburgh clash, and judging from the way in which they went into the affray today they were glad to get back from their "rambles." The score at the half was Duke 20, L. S. U. 0.

Conference Race Here November 23

The University athletic officials are at present busily engaged in making preparations for the Southern Conference cross-country meet, which will be held in Chapel Hill, November 23. Invitations have already been sent out to all of the conference schools and replies are coming in daily.

Coach Ranson's proteges will have no more meets before the conference meet and the remaining two weeks will be spent in intensive training. Victories over N. C. State and Duke have spurred the harriers on, and their eyes are now set on retaining the Southern Conference title which they won at Atlanta last year.

An Explanation

Because a statement appearing in Friday's Tar Heel to the effect that chemical engineering students are urged to go elsewhere for specialized work has been interpreted to mean that chemical engineering students should not come to Carolina, the following explanation is offered: the University of North Carolina urges all chemical engineering students to take four years of general work here, and then to go to some other institution during the fifth year for special work in the field selected.

DAVIDSON BEATS N. C. STATE 13-0

McCall Runs 60 Yards For a Touchdown; Wolfpack Unable To Gain In Pinches.

Riddick Field, Raleigh, Nov. 9.—Special)—Fighting on even terms throughout the entire first half here today, the Davidson Wildcats, aided by intercepted passes, stepped into the lead and defeated the State College Wolfpack by the score of 13-0.

Late in the third period Black of Davidson intercepted a State pass on the Pack's 40 yard line and ran to the one yard line where he was finally downed. After two attempts Parrish got the necessary yard and a touchdown. Captain Brock failed to get the extra point.

During the first few minutes of the fourth period Joe McCall, Davidson's junior broken field ace, took a State college pass on his 40 yard line and stepped down the sidelines for 60 yards and a touchdown. Captain Brock succeeded in getting the extra point and the score was 13-0.

State threatened during the second and third periods, getting well within the 20 yard line, but they did not have the punch to take the ball over.

Dellinger was the most consistent man in the Wolfpack backfield today, and Jakie Jordan and Captain Lepo looked good in the line. The entire Wildcat team was working together and aside from the spectacular runs, no favorites could be picked.

Revue Anglo-Americaine Contains Review Of Books Published By University

Pierre Legouis Says Allen Writes For The Cultivated Amateur In Whom He Sees A Better Judge Of The Poetic Spirit.

REFLECTS GOOD TASTE

The fame of the University of North Carolina Press books is spreading—even to the European continent and to France. The "Revue Anglo-Americaine," a publication of the University Presses of France, for October, contains a review of Philip Schuyler Allen's "The Romanesque Lyric."

The book under criticism was written by the Chicago University professor and published in 1928. At that time is was described as a "volume . . . in which . . . a critic and a translator (Howard Mumford Jones of the University faculty, who collaborated with Mr. Allen) have united to write the story of poetry between the ending of the classical age in Latin literature and the MS of Cambridge songs . . . and in which . . . Mr. Allen's prose and Mr. Jones' verse combine to introduce to English readers a field of poetry hitherto almost unexplored."

The "Revue Anglo-Americaiae," which reviews numerous English and American books, has frequently printed discussions of other Press publications, among them criticisms of works by Norman Foerster of the University faculty. The present critique, written by Pierre Legouis, says that although the general idea prevails that the lyric poetry of modern Europe was entirely formee and almost without precursory indications up until the time of Guillaume de Poitiers . . . "Mr. Allen supports with great force the contrary thesis, that of continuity of a certain inspiration, which one might call romantic (or, more specifically romanesque) in opposition to the classic inspiration come from Greece, since the beginnings of the Latin literature up until the time when the vulgar languages received the heritage."

As Mr. Legouis says, "Mr. Allen does not wish to make a work of criticism but of appreciation. . . . He writes, not for the specialist, but for the cultivated amateur in whom he sees a better judge of the poetic spirit. . . . Furthermore, one should not be surprised that his collaborator takes the greatest liberties in his translations in verse which occupy a large part of the volume." Although he appreciates the discoveries of various relationships between the Latin and English meter which Mr. Jones has made in his translations, the critic cannot reconcile himself to some of the forms which have been adopted, of which he gives numerous examples. He also deplores the presence of numerous typographical errors which appear in the volume; but on the whole Mr. Legouis believes that "the material presentation of the volume proves once again the worth and good taste of American university presses."

In conclusion the French critic says: "We critics of detail run the risk of making ourselves appear ungrateful towards Messrs. Allen and Jones who have led us through little frequented gardens where bloom some strange and often beautiful flowers. Let us say then that we shall read with pleasure the volume which will follow this one. . . ."

RULES ANNOUNCED IN CAKE CONTEST

Annual Intramural Race Will Be Resumed This Year; Open Only To Noncollegiate Competition.

The fifth annual intramural cake race will be held at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon, November 22, according to an announcement sent out by the intramural department. This event was first held in 1924, but for various reasons was not held last year.

The event is open to anyone who has not participated in intercollegiate competition in varsity or freshman cross-country, or varsity or freshman track at the University.

Because of the strenuous nature of the race, and the fact that many participate who are not physically capable of the run, the rules regarding the preparation of the participants in the race will be strictly enforced. The preparation for the event will be under the supervision of the varsity cross-country coach, and each one desiring to compete will report to Emerson field on the days he practices at some time between 3 and 5:30 o'clock. There will be groups leaving the field for practice runs every half hour between these hours.

The absolute minimum number of practices that can be taken by those intending to compete is five. No practices not held under official supervision—that is, in which one desiring to compete does not report to the manager at the desk inside the main gate—will be recognized.

In order that the work for each individual may be arranged so that he increases the amount done each day, it will be necessary for every one wishing to enter to make known his intention of doing so sometime Monday afternoon at Emerson field.

The exact distance and course of the race have not been determined, but the distance will be between 1¾ and 2½ miles.

Both prizes and intramural credit will be given to the first hundred to finish. Entries may be made either individually or by teams. It is necessary to place at least five men in the first hundred in order to win a team prize.

More definite announcement as to the exact distance, course, and method of distributing prizes will be made within the next few days.

There were 275 participants in the last cake race, the largest number ever to compete in an athletic event at the University.

BULLS HEAD SHOP TO HOLD AUCTION

Store Has More Books Than It Can Handle; Latest Productions By Modern Authors.

On the bargain shelves of the Bull's Head book shop are about a hundred books at greatly reduced prices. They are novels, biographies, essays, and poetry ranging in price from ten cents to ten dollars. These books will be put up at auction on December the fourth. This will be probably the first book auction in the history of Chapel Hill except for a dealer in Bibles and dictionaries who was here several years ago.

The reason for the auction is that the book shop has more than they can handle and they wish to get rid of them at what ever they will bring at auction.

These books are the latest productions and contain such as: "Coming Age in Samoa"; "Theodore Roosevelt and His Times"; "Aequanimitas with Other Addresses" by Osler; "Road to Buenos Ayres".

Among the authors are: Booth Tarkington, Kethleen Norris, Hugh Walpole, Anne Douglas Sedgwick, Ford Madox Ford, Arther Train, Algernon Blackwood, S. S. Van Dine, Tristram Tupper, Will James, Edna Ferba and Elma Davis.

University Gets New Piece Of Equipment

The University has just recently improved two pieces of equipment. The old wooden grille, brought over from the library desk of the old Carnegie building, has been replaced at the east end of the circulation desk on the second floor by a new bronze grille.

The new grille is much better suited to the scheme of decoration of the library. The grille is provided with an opening through which all books should be returned to the circulation department. This opening is designed to promote the rapid and accurate discharge of books from the borrower's record.

By returning books through this opening the borrowers are insured of the proper cancellation of their records. If the books are simply left on the desk, there is danger of the books being lost or mislaid.

The old circulation file cases have been replaced by new and larger ones. The special advantage of the new cases is that they are raised at an angle of 30 degrees, which greatly facilitates the filing and discharge of records.

Graduate Club Reception

The Graduate Club will give its third annual reception at its building (the Mary Ann Smith building) from 8:30 to 10:30 next Friday evening, November 15. Members of the University faculty and other residents of the village are invited.

STALLINGS IS VERY ENTHUSIASTIC OVER PLLAYMAKERS' WORK

formance! What greater tribute is there for Mrs. Bailey's play and Professor Koch's theatre?

You should know this man, or these men, rather, better. Take Mr. Lippmann first. The New York World man is visiting his old friend Mr. Stallings who lives over Yanceyville way. Mrs. Lippmann is also along. He is considered one of America's foremost editorial writers, his brilliant handling of foreign events especially brightening up the columns of the World.

Mr. Lippmann's latest and widely read book, "A Preface to Morals," is hailed as his competent pen include "Public Opinion," "A Preface to Politics," "Men of Destiny" and "The Phantom Public." He will be remembered by Chapel Hill people as having delivered the commencement address here in 1927.

In the international world, Mr. Lippmann is well known as having been secretary of the organization directed by E. M. House which prepared data for the Peace Conference.

Now for Mr. Stallings. He was born in Macon, Ga. He married an illustrious daughter of North Carolina, Miss Helen Poteat whose father, W. L. Poteat, is a former president of Wake Forest college. In years past, Mr. Stallings was primarily a newspaperman, "by God."

He served in the world war as captain of the 47th Company, 3rd battallion, 5th Marines, 2nd Division. Disproving the theory that Captains do not get in the first line, Mr. Stallings lost a leg in the front line trenches. He saw the worst of the "cursed" war. He now has an artificial limb and vivid memories of that holocaust about which he writes so graphically because he writes truthfully.

Mr. Stallings now lives down near Yanceyville trying to forget some things and recalling others about which he writes. He has published one novel, "Plumes." Among his nationally popular plays are "What Price Glory," "The Buccaneers," "First Flight" and "Deep River." Collaborating with Anderson, he has written the motion picture scrip for "The Big Parade," "Old Ironsides," "The Cock Eyed World," and others. The world is waiting anxiously for more and in the meantime is seeing the first ones time and again.

Those at the dinner party at Mrs. Nash's home Friday evening prior to the theatre visit included Mr. and Mrs. Lippmann, Mr. and Mrs. Stallings, Mr. and Mrs. Barkeley of Baltimore, Professor and Mrs. Frederick Koch, and Mr. and Mrs. Nash.

The play Friday night was enjoyed so much by the Lippmanns and Stallings that yesterday Mrs. Stallings telephoned for three more seats for Saturday night.

Mr. Stallings promised Professor Koch during the dinner party, that he would come to Chapel Hill next Wednesday morning to talk to Koch's playwriting class. Professor Koch promised Mr. Stallings that he could say what and how he wished, in answer to Stallings' inquiry for permission.

HALL'S READING IMPRESSES CROWDS

Technical Director Playmakers Gives Interpretation Of "Journey's End."

Elmer Hall's brilliant reading of "Journey's End" Sunday evening in the Playmaker theatre dramatically impressed the fair sized crowd present with the reason why this "war play," after the deluge of them in the past few years, is breaking all records for attendance and approval.

Mr. Hall, the new technical director for the University's theatre this year, read a host of characterization into the lines. The setting was one that permitted the imagination to run free. Mr. Hall had hung the stage with black drapes. He read from a table on which the only light in the theatre was trained, a simple desk light. Accordingly, as the play proceeded, the audience used the black drapes of the stage on which to visualize the dug-out setting in France.

The play is largely one of action with the noise of bursting shells and rifle bullets. Even these noises were pictured in the imaginative minds of the audience. When Mr. Hall turned leaves of the book from which he was reading, the reflected light on the black drapes, flashing up momentarily, seemed to many like the glare from bursting shells.

The audience saw from the commendable reading why this play has been termed great and not just another war play. The Englishman, Browne, the author, has put many clever touches in the plot, probably because he wrote from actual happenings. For instance, when the young hero dies from shrapnel wounds, he does not pass away in the arms of his friend as so many war plays show. He died alone and when his friend found him, he felt, rather than said, his emotions.

The reading was the second of the term series.

Students To Hear New Football Song At Thanksgiving Classic

Wex Malone and Moore Bryson Compose Melody Which Will Be Featured At Virginia Game.

A new Carolina football song, really the first football song of an original nature that has ever been written for the local university, has been completed by two students and will be introduced for the first time to the public at the big game with Virginia on Turkey Day.

The words will be found elsewhere on this page. But without the music, the person reading them cannot visualize the lively proportions which the piece assumes under orchestration and vocal chords. When played and sung yesterday afternoon by the co-authors, the walls of Person hall resounded with an air that rivalled but did not mimic the strains of the famous "On Wisconsin."

The two authors, both law students, roommates, and both from Asheville, are Moore Bryson who contributed the words, and Wex Malone who wrote the music.

The song having already been accepted by the University band, Mr. Malone is proceeding to complete the orchestration of the melody so that the band can practice it next week. The piece will be introduced to students during the week when chapel periods are to be given over to the learning of it. It will be sung in chapel periods regularly until the big Thanksgiving game so that on that day the vicinity of Kenan Memorial stadium may ring with its stirring melody and significant words.

It has been pointed out that whereas other universities and schools have individual and original football songs, that so far Carolina university does not

Book Is Praised

JOHN B. SALE'S BOOK IS PRAISED

John Sharp Williams Says "Tree Named John" Real Contribution To Mississippi Literature.

As the time draws near for the appearance of John B. Sale, author and interpreter of "The Tree Named John," in a reading before the Chapel Hill Community club on December 2, interest grows in this man who has produced a book of negro folk literature which is in the opinion of many a masterpiece. Almost daily numerous comments and press reports come to people who are interested in Mr. Sale and his work. Among the most complimentary and interesting of these are the following:

Senator John Sharp Williams has said of the volume, "I read 'The Tree Named John' with keen appreciation. I was a plantation-raised boy myself, and the book brought back early associations. It is astonishing that I recalled, when I read the book, so many of the old negro superstitions, a number of which I had seemingly forgotten. You may quote me as saying that 'The Tree Named John' is a real contribution to Mississippi literature."

And from the far-famed "Saturday Revew of Literature" comes this statement: "A fascinating human-interest story, a recreation of the folklore and folk life of a Mississippi plantation."

While from the "Commercial Dispatch" of Columbus, Miss., the home town of the author, we learn that "The first purchaser of 'The Tree Named John' was C. Bascom Slemp, former secretary to President Coolidge. Mr. Slemp heard of Mr. Sale's reading at the University of Virginia and at once wired the publishers for an advance copy."

Esperanto Club To Hold Meeting Today

The first meeting of the new Esperanto club will be held this afternoon at 5 o'clock on the second floor of the Y. The meeting will be in charge of Dr. Metzenthin.

Students who are interested in the new simplified language are invited to drop in. It will not be necessary to take any formal courses, or to go further to gain a knowledge of what Esperanto aims for and how its aims are achieved. It is intended at this first meeting of the group to ascertain the interest of the campus in Esperanto, and to explain about its background and the method of learning it.

Armistice Celebration Recalls Unselfishness Of Past Says J. H. Pratt

University and Town Commemorate Signing of Pact Ending World War.

"The Armistice celebrations not only commemorate the signing of the paper that ended the World War," said Colonel Joseph Hyde Pratt at the Armistice day services yesterday in Gerrard hall, "but they recall the spirit of unselfishness, self-sacrifice and patriotism of all those connected with the events of 1914-1918. Today is a day of reverence for the accomplishments and the patriotic services achieved during the war. It recalls the thrills of joy and thanksgiving that burst forth when the Armistice was signed 11 years ago today," he went on, "and the tumultuous expression of joy that replaced the pent up emotions, the agony of suspense, which were the lot of all engaged in the conflict."

Colonel Pratt, former professor of geology in the University, one-time state geologist and secretary of the state highway commission, served in France as colonel of the 105th Engineers in the 30th Division. His regiment saw service in Belgium early during the war and took part in both phases of the famous Somme offensive.

After a brief summary of the spirit and activities of the people of the United States, North Carolinians in particular, during the World War, he closed his talk with an appeal to the people of this state to renew their allegiance and to cooperate with the government in its present activities and problems, just as

THOUSAND SCHOOL CHILDREN TO HEAR U. S. MARINE BAND

County superintendents and school officials are cooperating with Harry F. Comer, secretary of the Y.MC..A., in providing transportation for more than 1,000 school children who are expected to attend the matinee performance of the United States Marine Band in Kenan Stadium next Thursday, November 14.

The problem of transportation is much simplified by the fact that 500 of these children will come from Durham. The others will come from Hillsboro, Mebane, Bynum, Pittsboro, Sanford, Efland, and other nearby towns.

While at the University the Marine Band will give two concerts. The matinee program will take place in Kenan stadium, the University's beautiful outdoor forum, at 3:30 Thursday afternoon.

Owing to repairs that are being made to the roof of Memorial hall, the evening performance that was to have been held there will be given at 8:30 in the tin can. Formerly known as "the world's largest frigidaire," the tin can is now having a heating system installed that will make it comfortable.

Band Now on Nine-Week Tour

The itinerary of the band for this year includes Philadelphia, Cleveland, Grand Rapids, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Fort Worth, San Antonio, Houston, New Orleans, Savannah, Columbia, Charlotte, Greensboro, Chapel Hill, Norfolk, Richmond, and back to Washington—in all, 18 cities in 13 states.

Chapel Hill, having only about 6,000 population, is by far the smallest town that the band will visit. It is only by rare good luck that Mr. Comer was able to bring the band to the University.

Plane Arrives

The school of engineering received from the U. S. government last Tuesday a Vought V9 army pursuit airplane. This plane is virtually the property of the University because all planes loaned to educational institutions are never recalled by the government.

This plane is to be used by the mechanical engineering students. The only cost to the University for this plane is the freight and packing charges.

FIRE BREAKS OUT IN RUBBISH DUMP

Fire broke out last night at about 9:15 o'clock in the rubbish dump at the southeast corner of the Intramural Athletic field. The rubbish apparently caught fire or was fired first, and within a few minutes had blazed sufficiently to catch on the edge of the pine forest at the back of the field.

Chief Foister and his men responded to the alarm, and after an examination of the fire, stood by to see that it did not spread too far or get beyond control.

Most of the occupants of the dormitories in the quadrangle and triangle turned out to see the blaze, but quickly lost interest as a misty rain increased and the fire died down. Except for the pine trees at the back of the rubbish dump, little damage was done.

Co-Ed's Purse Disillusions Male Students As To Contents

(By Frank J. Manheim)

Co-ed graduate students have always commanded a great deal of admiration and respect from students. They have been admitted to be different from the usual run of girls. Serious, disdaining the many unimportant details that consume so much valuable time, they have been considered to be far above the girl whose thoughts never went beyond clothes, paint and powder, men et cetera. The use of "have beens" is wise. For Saturday evening, in Sutton's, the illusions of many students went the way of all flesh when Miss ——— ———, a graduate student in the realms of philosophy, dropped her leather purse.

Certainly themes were not expected to fall out of the pocketbook. But what the twenty or thirty boys did pick up in their wild scramble to aid the fair maiden in distress, caused many expressions of surprise. The first article was a gayly bedecked comb, reminding one of old age, for there were more teeth missing. And from under the confines of a "pool" table, one helpful lad came rushing up with a much-creased newspaper clipping, whose caption was seen for only an instant. But that was enough. It was called "Dr. Paxton's Daily Beauty Hint." While blushing profusely, and most probably on the verge of tears, the graduate philosophy student accepted the five pennies that had been recouped from the floor.

The number and range of missing articles seemed as if they would continue forever. In a few minutes, a vanity case, lipstick, a season football coupon book, a small lace handkerchief, letters, pictures of what appeared to be men, stamps, keys and a lonely, dirty dollar bill were picked up.

The poor girl seemed terribly abashed and as soon as she could possibly thrust, in the most untidy manner, everything into her bag, she left most hurriedly, calling out her thanks to the men who had helped her. In her haste, she failed to pay for the "dope" that she was drinking at the time of the disaster but naught was said of it. Who would wish to add to the miseries of the lass?

Weil Committee Announces Dr. W. W. Alexander's Lecture Series

The Weil Lecture committee announces a series of 1929 lectures for Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings, December 6, 7 and 8, by Dr. Will W. Alexander. The subject for the whole series is "What Is the South."

The first lecture on Friday evening will be "Truth and Fiction About the Old South." The second lecture on Saturday evening will be "The New Rulers." The third lecture on Sunday evening will be "The Older Values in the New Life."

Dr. Alexander has attained considerable distinction of late in his regional and national work, in his intelligent and courageous efforts since the Great War, and for his active participation in international conferences. He is a native of Tennessee and a graduate of Vanderbilt University, and is an attractive speaker who will appeal to North Carolina students interested in the rapid development of the south in its larger participation in international affairs.

The Weil Lectureship committee is composed of R. D. W. Connor, C. T. Murchison, L. R. Wilson and Howard W. Odum, chairman.

Tar Heel Topics

This movement to introduce Esperanto, "the world language," into the University doesn't interest us very much. We've passed our required foreign language courses, thank you.

"Twenty Thousand Watch Tar Heels Win Battle of the Carolinas"—headline in the S. L. C. D. Except for the fact that the capacity of the South Carolina stands is about 7,000 and they were not completely filled Saturday, it's a darn good headline.

War In The Making.

Chapel Hill's Armistice Day celebration was impressive enough, perhaps too impressive. For the collegiate mind, if a term so vague may be applied to the mental reaction mechanism of the "undergraduate norm," is highly impressionable, and such celebrations as that in which Chapel Hill and the University participated yesterday tend to cast a veil of glamour about the horrible realities of modern warfare.

Colonel Pratt's speech, the feature number of the celebration program, emphasized the "unselfishness, self-sacrifice and patriotism of all those connected with the events of 1914-1918." He asserted that the real purpose of Armistice Day celebrations is to commemorate the accomplishments and patriotic services rendered during the World War. As an Armistice Day address it was above the average, but such speeches contribute much toward the fallacious conception of war which has existed since civilization began. Reunions of war veterans, Fourth of July celebrations, observances of military events do more to make war possible than all the causes of international friction and efforts at self-aggrandizement of Napoleons and Kaiser Wilhelms.

For a few years after every major military conflict the world goes through a decided reaction against war as a means of settling international differences. Maimed survivors, poverty stricken nations and millions of war graves help to create a world-wide revulsion against militarism and its consequences. But gradually this world hatred of war is displaced by admiration for the heroic deeds of military men, for the pomp and splendor that is associated with their feats. National pride in military prowess is aroused; patriotism is strengthened by Armistice Day celebrations; international animosities are aroused; the inevitable result is another world holocaust of war.

Perhaps Remarque's All Quiet on the Western Front is to blame for this ebullient editorial outburst. We have just finished reading the book; it is capable of transforming the most rabid militarist into an ardent advocate of pacifism. If all members of Armistice Day audiences had read the translation of Remarque's book, the "war-making" propensities of the addresses delivered on these occasions would be nullified.

Co-Education At Carolina

Although the University of North Carolina is not a co-educational institution strictly speaking, it can be considered such for all practical purposes. Even after making concessions occasioned by the fact that the admission of women to the University is a comparatively recent thing, the writer is inclined to think that co-education here lacks a lot of being a howling success.

To even the casual observer it is obvious that the Carolina co-eds constitute an isolated element; that is, they are included in the student body as a separate division rather than as a component part. The purpose of this editorial, however, is to discuss the co-educational problem at Carolina from a constructive standpoint without attempting to allocate any faults or deficiencies to any particular sect of the student body.

To begin with, co-eds should be admitted to all classes on an equal footing with men if they are admitted at all. The institution cannot be entirely co-educational until this is done. Compromises seldom work in the field of education. An institution should be either strictly co-educational, or it should not open its doors to women at all. Unless women are welcomed to all phases of the University's activities in which they are competent to perform, they cannot possibly feel that they are a regular component part of the student body. The "All or None Rule" applies to this situation equally as well as it does in psychology.

In the second place, there is no valid reason why women should not be allowed to enroll here regularly as members of the freshman and sophomore classes. The first two years of academic work in any college or university are designed to constitute a preliminary to the final two years. The present system of admitting women only after they have attended some other college for two years involves numerous transfer difficulties which are a grievance to the various deans as well as to the co-eds. Furthermore, any student who has not had the two years of preliminary training which the freshman and sophomore years at Carolina comprise is not fully equipped for the latter two.

Furthermore, women who have attended some institution such as N. C. C. W. for two years are only slightly better fitted to cope with conditions on this campus than they would be if they entered from high school. Conditions here and at a typical woman's college are almost without similarity.

Finally, the tendency of the most progressive and most influential universities of the country is toward complete co-education. Is there any reason why the University of North Carolina should not follow suit?

Readers' Opinions

ATHLETIC OVERCONFIDENCE

Editor Daily Tar Heel,

I once read a book in which the author tried to establish the fact that man is the only animal which learns from the mistakes of his ancestors. To a person who lives in a college community that fact is not very obvious. A new group comes on each year and goes through exactly the same steps as its predecessors. No facts gained by experience seem capable of carrying over to the rising generation.

The particular thing I have in mind is the fact that it does not help anyone to get up on his hind legs and tell the yorld how good he is. Our football team beat Georgia Tech, a feat which seems not to have any great distinction this year so far, and immediately there goes out from this campus one of the most terrific barrages of self praise and blatant boasting that I have ever seen. So great has been this bombast that the coaches are kept busy giving out interviews to try to counteract it. They know that when there in anything like parity of ability in two opposing teams overconfidence is the worst possible handicap. A team having entered a game feeling that in a couple of hours it will be marching off the field in glory, if it meets a little surprising resistance in the first few plays, or in any part of the game for that matter, drops into a mental state from which escape is a miracle and defeat is almost certain.

I do not know who is responsible for the extravagant sports news which found its way into the public press under the Chapel Hill date line following the Georgia Tech game but I know that whoever it is he is doing the University community a serious disservice both as to the success of the athletic teams and to the respect of the general public. Crowing over a victory is no part of the game and is certainly not a part of sportsmanship, nor is it news. Sports news is all right, it is what builds up public interest in the game, which in turn furnishes the money to carry on an athletic program, but sheer self glorification is the hall mark of an ass.

It is extremely irritating to have to live through these waves of boastfulness which follow a little success in athletics and realize that nothing can be done about it in the way of getting a new generation of college students to profit by the mistakes of the past.

ARE STUDENTS LITERARY?

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

Your editorial in Thursday's Tar Heel deploring the general disregard of literature by the "collegian" seemed just a little sweeping in its statement of the conditions that actually prevail. Doubtless there is no great renaissance of interest in literature among the average run of undergraduates, but we cannot agree that "The glorious and splendid panoplay of life great authors present" is "non-existent" for even the average.

First of all, students do not go abroad to read. They can be seen at the "Pick" and at the football games, but they are not quite so noticable in the library or in their rooms. At those places they are, for the most part, screened from public view. Secondly, the average undergraduate has not yet learned to talk glibly about Literature (with a capital L). And sometimes we become slightly irritated with the 'current" on last month's best seller—it smells of of the dust-cover blurb. Even the beauties of Shakespeare and Browning begin to fade with being recalled too often. Thirdly, the writer of the editorial might be surprised at the results to be gained from questioning individual undergraduates. Even in our horribly mechanistic Engineering School there is some poetry read, possibly more than he thinks, not required reading either. Several students in that school asked to be allowed to write themes on literary topics not two days ago, even in the face of a perfectly good list of engineering topics to choose from. Occasionally an instructor is pleasantly surprised by a reading report somewhat in excess of that required, and not infrequently he finds that the student even knows something about what he has read.

But this is not reading for the pleasure of it, for the "inspiration" of it? Maybe not. In spite of this, however, we do not like wholesale condemnation. Great literature, great art of any kind is not easily appreciated. It must first be understood, and we welcome any effort made to understand it. We believe that a great number of students are making a conscious effort toward this end, notwithstanding the fact that they are not shouting vive la Belle Lettre and writing defenses of poetry.

Many are the campus literary lights of former days whom we, in our egocentric predicament, forget. Those lights didn't fail; they merely sputtered in the grease af accumulated knowledge. Brilliant things were done by them. And with a prayer that they won't read this issue of the Tar Heel, we are going to attempt to imitate them.

No bird was seen and none were heard;
What wretched weather for a bird!

By Jove, how was this pome begun?

Alas, alas, what can I do?

Team To Take Light Workouts For Davidson Game Saturday

Wildcats, Virginia and Duke Left for Tar Heels; Injured Men Expected To Be Ready.

Turning into the last lap of a ten game schedule, the Tar Heels yesterday worked lightly in preparation for the remaining three games of the 1929 season with Davidson, Virginia and Duke.

Light work was the plan of the Carolina mentors for the next few days. The problem of keeping the squad on the top of condition for the next three weeks is giving the coaches and trainers no little worry.

Worked to a peak for the Georgia Tech and Georgia games the entire squad was allowed to rest for the State and South Carolina games. The same plans of easy workouts will be followed for the remainder of the season, if present indications mean anything.

Out of the victory over South Carolina Saturday, reports of a Tar Heel line which turned back every assault by the Gamecock backs reached here. Farris, Lipscomb and Fysal were opening great gaps at center, while Holt, Fenner and Parsley managed their ends well.

Every member of the squad reported for work Monday in good condition, except Jim Magner and Red Gilbreath. Both of these men were expected to return to the lineup by the Davidson game.

Victories by Davidson and Duke Saturday over formidable rivals places the State championship title in greater doubt. Davidson showed unexpected defensive power to defeat State 13-0. The Duke Blue Devils, on the other hand, trounced Louisiana State soundly, 32-6.

Rankin Announces Schedule Meeting For Class B Teams

The faculty managers of the high school football teams which remain in the race for this season will meet early during the week to arrange the schedules for remaining play in this statewide contest, it was announced today by E. R. Rankin, secretary of the N. C. High School Athletic Association.

The western faculty managers held their schedule meeting in Salisbury last night and the eastern faculty managers will hold their meeting in Raleigh tonight.

The Reidsville, Mt. Airy, Concord, and Forest City schools have won the championships respectively of the first, second, third, and fourth western districts.

The Oxford, Dunn, and Smithfield high schools have won the championships respectively of the first, third, and fourth eastern districts. The Hertford and Ayden high school teams played at Hertford yesterday to settle the title of the second eastern district.

The final game between the eastern and the western champions to determine the state title in this contest will be played at Chapel Hill on Friday, November 29.

Bagby To Coach

Coach Dale Ranson requests all varsity and freshman high jumpers to report for practice at 3 o'clock Monday, Wednesday and Friday afternoons at Emerson field. These men will be under the tutelage of George Bagby, varsity track man.

The latest news from James F. Royster, dean of the graduate school, on leave of absence in England, is that he underwent an appendicitis operation successfully and is improving steadily.

CLASS A TEAMS STAGE HOT RACE

Charlotte And High Point Lead West; Wilmington Pushes Goldsboro Hard In High School Grid Title Chase.

Charlotte and High Point high schools in the west and Goldsboro high in the east were still setting the pace in the high school class A football race as the official standings yesterday, came from E. R. Rankin, secretary of the state high school athletic association.

All three teams are as yet undefeated, with three victories apiece. Charlotte and High Point have a big leg on the western race, but Wilmington high, with two victories and one loss, is pushing Goldsboro hard for the lead in the east. The western and eastern champions are to meet here November 30 for the North Carolina class A title.

Intramural Games

Four of the six scheduled intramural games were played yesterday. Steele won over Old West 7 to 0. A pass from the 20 yard line, Dunn to Dudley, netted the touchdown. Dunn for Steele was easily the star. He made the most yardage and was probably the most effective passer. Huffman for Old West was good for several long gains.

Kappa Sigma won from Chi Phi 1 to 0. Pi Kappa Alpha won from Theta Chi 1 to 0. Manly won from Old East 1 to 0.

The schedule for intramural games follows:

Tuesday, Nov. 12:

3:30 1. Steele vs. Graham (G)
2. Beta Theta Pi vs. Phi Delta Theta.
3. Chi Psi vs. Zeta Psi.

4:30 1. New Dorms vs. Everett (I)
2. Sigma Phi Sigma vs. Kappa Psi.
3. Kappa Phi vs. Delta Kappa Epsilon.

Wednesday, Nov. 13:

3:30 1. Alpha Tau Omega vs. Sigma Alpha Epsilon.
2. Kappa Alpha vs. Sigma Nu.
3. Beta Theta Pi vs. Chi Phi.

4:30 1. Old East vs. Lewis.
2. Kappa Sigma vs. Sigma Phi Sigma.
3. Zeta Psi vs. Phi Delta Theta.

THREE TEAMS LEAD TAG FOOTBALL RACE

Only three teams in the fraternity league and one in the dormitory league are undefeated so far. With two of the fraternity leaders, Delta Kappa Epsilon and Pi Kappa Phi scheduled to hook up this afternoon there should be only two undefeated after today.

New Dorms, with five victories and no defeats, leads the dormitory league, but a loss for them and a win for Mangum would place Mangum about 66 points ahead of them in the percentage.

Semi-Finals Today

Bryan Grant, southern tennis champion, will play Ed Yeomans in the semi-finals of the university tennis tournament this afternoon at three-thirty o'clock. The winner will play Wilmer Hines, southern junior champion.

(By J. C. Eagles)

Southern football saw many upsets Saturday and as a result the conference winner is more a matter for conjecture than ever. Two of the undefeated teams dropped out of the select class and one newcomer to the conference ranks moved into the undefeated circle. Kentucky and Louisiana State were defeated for the first time this season and Duke's Blue Devils, by winning their first conference battle, forged to the front ranks.

A powerful Alabama eleven, which has been threatening all fall, finally got going against Kentucky and defeated them 24 to 13. Led by Tony Holm, at present the most outstanding man in the south for all-southern fullback, and Hicks, another aspirant for an all-southern berth at quarterback, the Tide rolled to a decisive victory which saw them exhibit great offensive and defensive strength. Their win is made all the more impressive by the fact that they conquered the team which smothered the strong Clemson eleven the previous week-end in one of the biggest upsets in southern ranks.

Vanderbilt continued in the undefeated class by handing Georgia Tech a drubbing. The Tech team, national champions last fall, has played in and out football all season, but Saturday's loss was by the largest score in many years. By virtue of this win McGugin's team ranks as one of the three leading contenders for the conference championship. Led by Red Leonard, sophomore backfield flash, the Commodores turned back the Golden Tornado 23 to 7.

Tulane, victor over both Georgia and Georgia Tech, continued its march toward the title. Experiencing little trouble in scoring at will over the luckless Auburn Plainsmen, the Big Green eleven ran up a total of 52 points while holding Auburn scoreless. Banker, an outstanding candidate for all-southern honors at halfback, scored four touchdowns and now ranks second to Gene McEver, Tennessee's high scoring ace.

Duke, after dropping four successive games to northern and eastern teams, came back to eliminate Louisiana State from the undefeated class and to take its place there. Shifting from the passing attack which has featured its offensive in every game the Duke eleven opened up a running offense which played havoc with the title hopes of L. S. U. However, a scarcity of conference games precludes any chance of the Blue Devils' winning the conference crown this fall, even if they succeed in maintaining their perfect record which so far consists of only one win and no losses.

Tennessee continued its perfect record by its overwhelming defeat of Carson - Newman. Using sophomores for the most part, the big Tennessee eleven ran up 73 points. At present the Vols rank with Vandy and Tulane as chief contenders for the conference championship.

Carolina continued its impressive play and ran its record to five wins and only one loss in conference play. No other conference team has played more than five games with conference foes. The Tar Heels rank next to the undefeated teams in the standings and seem strong contenders if none of these continue to keep a clean slate. Conference standings follow:

Teams	W	L	T	Pct.
Tennessee	4	0	0	1.000
Tulane	4	0	0	1.000

PLAYER CONTROL NOT A NEW IDEA

Plan Advocated By Jones Would Put Responsibility On Team Captain.

(This is the second of a series of articles by John R. Tunis of the New York Evening Post in which he will discuss the arguments for and against player control of football.)

By JOHN R. TUNIS

Player control. This may best be defined as the process of returning scholastic and collegiate sports to the players, to whom they really belong, of making captains rather than coaches responsible for putting in substitutes and solving problems of strategy in between halves and during the course of play.

As football is today, of course the coaches are the responsible parties. Some time ago a national humorous weekly correctly satirized football by publishing a cartoon of a football coach exhorting his players before the game to—

"Remember that football develops individuality, initiative and leadership. Now get in there and do exactly as I tell you."

Player control is not a new idea. It originated several years ago with Coach T. A. D. Jones of Yale, who offered to go into the stands at game time if coaches of other teams would do the same. It is regrettable that no other coach was big enough to accept the idea; in fact the Harvard coach at that period responded by insisting on the complete wiring of the bowl in order that his scouts, assistants and super-numeraries might the better observe the game and communicate with him upon the bench, where he sat like Napoleon marshaling and directing his forces!

Tried Several Years

But with the introduction of general regulation No. 1 in 1927 by the Eastern New York State Athletic League, comprising the high schools of Albany, Amsterdam, Troy, Schenectady, Hudson, Glens Falls, Saratoga, Mechanicsville, Rensselaer, Scotia, Gloversville, Johnstown, Cohoes, Lansingburg and some dozen others, player control is no longer an aspiration of forward-looking directors of athletics like former Coach Jones. It is today a practical and workable ruling that has been adopted and tried out for several years in Eastern scholastic sport, and has been copied in many parts of the country. As such it has naturally met bitter and determined opposition, opposition that has come mostly from those ignorant of the idea and what the regulation attempts to accomplish. Before describing in detail the actual progress it has made and the manner in which it has worked out in practice, therefore, it may be well to deal with some of the most valid objections that have been raised against it.

The chief one, of course, is the perfectly logical one of the physical welfare of the boys. "Putting one schoolboy under the control of a teammate is impossible," we are told. And it will be pointed out, not without justice, that no one of high school age is capable of determining when a player has reached the limits of physical endurance. But Section 4 of the regulation specifically states that:

"This rule does not prohibit a coach or his representative from ordering the withdrawal of any contestant at any time," and, further, "coaches may attend the physical injuries of their charges at any time during games or between periods of play." Is it not, moreover, likely that, with the necessity for turning out winning teams which was imposed upon every coach under the old ruling, under the new regulation the coach will think less about whether or not his team is victorious and devote more thought and attention to the physical welfare of his charges?

Coach Still Has Authority

Under this regulation the player removed by the coach cannot return to the game. This means that the captain has the power to put in a substitute; but that the coach in the stand can instantly remove a boy over the captain's authority should he feel the boy's physique in danger. In other words, the coach is still the court of last resort—first resort, too, if he thinks proper—in the question of the protection of the health of the players. The captain, on the other hand, has the opportunity to exercise his judgment and make such substitutions as he considers the condition of the team and the situation of the game demand. Is this not education in its truest and best sense?

Objections have been made that captain control gives a boy of sixteen or seventeen far too much power; power that may be abused. It is often feared that captains will refrain from making substitutions as they should do. But it does not always work out this way in practice, thus during a football game between Elmira and Binghamton last year two well-matched teams were in action in a game where changes are seldom made by coaches, yet one captain made seven and the other nine shifts in the lineup. The captains of these two teams had to do some thinking for themselves instead of standing like dummies upon the field while changes were made over their heads and without their knowledge or desire by an adult coach.

It is, of course, true that one will meet occasionally a selfish captain who abuses the ruling. On the other hand it also frequently happens that under general regulation No. 1 captains take themselves out of the game. This has happened even in New York State championship contests, where players have been taught to think of the team first, rather than of themselves as individuals.

Lessons in Self-government

Will captains always act for the best? Will not the ruling put fraternity politics to the fore; will not old friendships serve to nullify the advantages received? Undoubtedly, in some cases. No change as sweeping as that conceived by this requisition can be obtained without disadvantages; this is one. No fraternity politics or favoritism of any sort is possible under the guidance of a competent coach who knows his business; such a contingency is always possible under the leadership of a boyish captain. But directly this happens the squad and the team and the school suffer. The best players may be overlooked, but the squad and eventually the school realize it very soon; therein is provided a lesson in self-govern-

Katherine McHale Addresses State Delegation Of A.A.U.W.

Dr. Katherine McHale, acting director and educational chairman of the American Association of University Women, addressed representatives of the North Carolina branches on the objectives of the national organization with special emphasis upon its new program and the million dollar fellowship fund, Sunday afternoon in the Washington Duke hotel, Durham. Mrs. E. R. Mosher, president of the state organization, presided. More than fifty women present were representatives from Durham, Greenville, Greensboro, High Point, Raleigh, Chapel Hill and Winston-Salem.

Dr. McHale began her remarks by explaining the purpose of the acting director of the A. A. U. W., a position which was created by executive action at the biennial convention of the organization last April in New Orleans. She reviewed hastily the past educational achievements of the association, referring especially to the report on history textbooks and the program for parental education carried on by Dr. Lois Hayden Meek.

In presenting the million dollar fellowship fund, Dr. McHale stated that 16 units had already pledged quotas. The unit idea is possible as a city, a state or a section if the quota is from $30,000 to $40,000, which at four per cent will realize either $1200 or $1600 annually for a fellowship. The unit may specify whether the fellowship is to be national or international, or it may leave the assignment to the discretion of the association.

To date there has been received for international fellowships, $6,056.21; national fellowships, $9,396.80; undesignated, $15,183.17; making a total of $30,636.18. Of this amount North Carolina has contributed $287.91.

These fellowships are to enable women to compete successfully with men. They are to be awarded to women who have been out of college between five and ten years and who need assistance in advancing their work, and to women with special talents. At present the association has fifteen fellowships with hundreds of applicants.

Preceding the special meeting at 3 o'clock, there was a joint luncheon of the Professional and Business Woman's clubs and the American Association of University Women. Miss Leona Glidewell of Reidsville, president of the North Carolina professional and business group, presided and Dr. O. Lathan Hatcher, director of the Southern Woman's Educational Alliance, and Dr. McHale delivered addresses.

Fire Damages Car

A Chevrolet roadster, owned by Mr. Williams of the building department of the University, caught fire about 10:30 o'clock yesterday morning near the Gimghoul Castle. The fire department was called and succeeded in extinguishing the blaze after the fire had done considerable damage to the body. The motor was not damaged.

Player Control Is Not a New Idea

ment that years of experience in after life might fail to teach. Is any one defeat or series of defeats upon the field of sport too great a price to pay for such a lesson?

Standard of Play Suffers

But, it is asked, are the players not too close to the game to see it as a whole? Will it not be less well played when no omniscient spirit can stand off to view the game in its entirety from the aloofness of the bench? Again yes. Player captains running a game under player control will of course make many mistakes that seasoned and experienced coaches sitting on the bench would never make. Errors in judgment and mistakes in tactics of all sorts will come fast and often; unquestionably the standard of play suffers. But what of it?

If the game of football is played for the spectators perhaps this ruling is unfortunate, although newspaper observers in Buffalo and Rochester have claimed that games are better played because of captain control. If, however, football is played for the boys it is of no importance whatsoever whether the team puts on a good show or not provided the players get the value and the lessons that are there to be learned when they are running as well as playing the game. The duty of scholastic and collegiate football teams is not to be professional gladiators for the mob. It is to furnish sport for themselves and their followers. Once this precept is admitted—and who will controvert it?—the winning or losing of a game becomes secondary. Moreover, is it not obvious that if both teams are playing under the control of their captains with their coaches on the bench, both are liable to the same errors and mistakes in the course of play?

Take Responsibility Early

One great objection raised has been that schoolboys cannot be trusted to direct and govern their own games at such an early age. Yet at the age of sixteen the State permits boys to leave school and begin the far more difficult business of earning a living. And the government in Washington urges boys of seventeen to join the navy and boys of eighteen to join the army; in the World War many boys of little more than that had responsibilities of a much more serious nature.

One of the men up state who was formerly against general regulation No. 1, and who is now heartily in favor of it, is Mr. Carl G. Chamberlain, the director of physical education in the Charlotte high school of Rochester. Mr. Chamberlain was a sergeant in charge of a platoon on the battlefields of France at the age of nineteen. Strange to say he fails to believe that a boy at this period in his life is unable to run a football team.

No, if the American boy of the twentieth century is not able to take up the problem of directing his own play time, if he is such a weakling that he cannot even control his sports, what use will he be in after life when decisions and problems a thousand times more important will be thrown at him from every side? And what better training ground can he have to form initiative, character and the habit of depending upon himself than the training ground afforded by the field of sport?

One of the most distressing arguments adduced against the idea that football coaches—and coaches in other sports also—should remain during the game in the stands is that an honest coach cannot prevent a dishonest coach from taking advantage of him. Thus there are ways of circumventing this rule as there are ways of getting around every rule made by man, and the honest coach in honestly working out the idea is very plainly handicapped. The only relief, the relief which is certain to come in time, is the gradual elimination of the dishonest coach.

every loyal citizen rose to meet the situation in 1917 and 1918. He implored the people to exercise their right as citizens to vote; to be just as patriotic now as during the war, and to help make our government truly one for the people, of the people and by the people.

The Armistice day celebrations began Sunday with the presentation of "The Soul of France," a war play sponsored by the American Legion, at the Carolina theatre. The services yesterday were managed by John M. Booker of the University English department, who is chairman of the joint committee of the University faculty and the local American Legion post. The services began with the invocation by Rev. A. S. Lawrence, state chaplain of the Legion and chaplain of the post here, followed by the singing of the national anthem. Dean Addison Hibbard read the roll of the University World War dead and Commander Paul Robertson, of the Orange county Legion post, read the roll of the Orange county dead.

Immediately before 11 o'clock, during Colonel Pratt's address, taps was sounded and a one-minute silence was observed. The celebration closed with the singing of America and the pronouncement of the benediction.

have one. It was with this in mind that the authors wrote the composition. If it proves popular, and there is little doubt that it will, the song will probably be adopted as the official gridiron melody of the local university.

At the chapel period today the song will be introduced to one group. The other groups of the student body which have chapel periods on other days of the week, will learn it later.

The Y quartet will sing the song several times at chapel and then the student body will join in and practice it. At the Virginia game, the cheer leaders and the band will lead it.

The song was written indirectly by Mr. Bryson and Mr. Malone, the latter being president of Wigue and Masque, for the opening song of Wigue and Masque's musical revue in that organization's annual presentation next spring.

Mr. Malone in the past has written the music for the last two presentations of Wigue and Masque, "Mum's the Word" last spring, and "Whoops My Dear" two years ago. Both of these productions were highly successful.

Mr. Bryson, known as "Block," has been prominently connected with the Carolina Playmakers and took a leading part in the Masque production, "Mum's the Word."

Plans Completed For Thanksgiving Dances

Jack Crawford Will Play; Rumored That He Will Go To Hollywood For Series of Comedies.

Jack Crawford's orchestra which is to play for the German club Thanksgiving dances November 29 and 30 is to play for photoplay comedies according to rumors. Elaborate plans are being made by the German club officials for these dances. Leaders for the dances were elected by the club two weeks ago and plans are practically completed for the dances. The set will be held in Swain hall this year. Five dances are to be given, two Friday and three Saturday.

It is said that Crawford, director of his orchestra, will become the next funny fat man of the movies.

Photoplay managers who have seen the comedy antics and humorous grimaces with which Crawford delights his dance audiences are trying to get the big fellow to sign up for a series of two reel comedies. After playing here the comedian may go to Hollywood for his first picture.

Jack Crawford's orchestra is one of the crack dance bands of the Music Corporation of America, and its phenomenal success in the past year has been due to the original and mirth-provoking stunts of its leader. Crawford is known as the "Clown Prince of Jazz." Moreover, he is an excellent saxophonist, as well as a versatile entertainer.

Everywhere the Clown Prince has appeared from Atlantic City to California, amusement managers have been besieged with thousands of requests to have Jack Crawford back for a return engagement.

Dancers like Crawford because he is really funny, and movie audiences will enjoy him for the same reason. His grotesque expressions range through every detail of comic and pathetic expression.

FRESHMEN SING SONG COMPOSED FOR VA. CLASH

Chapel Exercises Led By Cheerleader Barret; New Carolina Song Taught.

The chapel exercise yesterday morning was conducted by Cheerleader Jack Barrett, who endeavored to teach the freshmen the new football song which appeared in yesterday's issue of the Daily Tar Heel. Steve Lynch assisted the cheerleader in the singing.

Telling the freshmen of the song, Barrett said that it was original, being written by two Carolina men, and hence might be accepted as the Carolina football song if sung creditably. He ventured to state that it contained no little of that quality called "pep" and invited the agreement of the freshmen after the pianist had played the music.

Then Steve Lynch sang the song. After testing their voices the freshmen took up the air. Soon Gerrard hall was ringing with the lively strains of the new song, and before chapel was over the men had, at Cheerleader Barrett's injunction, "really killed it."

ALUMNI LOYALTY FUND COMMITTEE MEETS THURSDAY

Local And Class Representatives To Confer With Council To Make Plans For Campaign.

A call meeting of the council of the University Alumni Loyalty fund, to be held here tomorrow, was announced today by Leslie Weil of Goldsboro, chairman of the council.

The council will meet with representatives from the local alumni committees and some fifty class representatives. The meeting will be the first general conference to consider the whole problem of private gifts to the University and will be concerned principally with following up the 13,000 invitations for gifts recently sent to alumni.

The council of the alumni fund has been busily engaged in this work for months now, and during that time has invited into active participation in the work a representative of each living alumni class—near fifty in all. In addition, local committees to aid in the work have been formed in a large number of places in the state.

These organizations are aiding the loyalty fund council in its attempt to build up the habit of private giving to the University. The council anticipates

Frank Graham, T. S. Rollins, And J. Kenyon Wilson Compose Nomination Committee; Meeting November 27 and 28.

W. T. SHORE TO PRESIDE

Announcement of a committee to nominate alumni officers for 1929 was made yesterday by W. T. Shore, president of the Alumni association, who was in Chapel Hill for a short time. The committee is composed of Frank Graham, Chapel Hill, chairman; Thomas S. Rollins, Asheville, and J. Kenyon Wilson, Elizabeth City. Nominations will be made at the annual business meeting of the Alumni association here November 27-28.

Four offices are to be filled by election by members of the Alumni association. These are president, first and second vice-presidents, and alumni representative on the University Athletic council. The alumni business meeting, or General Alumni Assembly as it is known, will nominate to the members of the Alumni association two candidates for each of these two offices. Ballots will be distributed by mail to the alumni immediately after the Alumni assembly, and a tally of the results will be completed by January 1 when new officers take office.

Reports will be given at the assembly by Maryon Saunders, alumni secretary; George Watts Hill, general treasurer; the Alumni Loyalty Fund council, and the alumni representatives on the Athletic council. There will be two sessions of the assembly, the first being Wednesday evening, November 27, and the second the morning of Thanksgiving day.

Collegians Do Admirers Dirty Trick; Wear Regular Clothes

"Conservatism — That's the watchword" of the collegians of 1929. So says Sam Love of the United States Press in a Sunday feature. "They have done their admirers a dirty trick this fall. They have begun to wear regular clothes."

Sam is writing of the reform of Joe College as he has seen it in the universities around the Manhattan village. His reaction after the survey seems to be one of surprise, especially when he finds that "A great wave of something or other—possibly a desire to look human—has swept over the frat houses and dormitories and the result is so startling that it would have been noticed before had not public attention been diverted by the lowering hemline of United States Steel and women's dresses."

The writer seems to be particularly startled that the university men have become well dressed. He quotes one sophisticated young man as saying: "Oh no,—it's not being done any more—It's not good form, you know . . . I mean it's not the correct thing to slop around. Even last year it was rather the berries to drop in at a dance in any old outfit, but this year anyone who tried it would simply get thrown out on his spine. Evening clothes are the only thing for dances . . . as far as formal occasions are concerned. And a dance is a formal occasion, isn't it?"

As another smart young man has put it, "There are a great many things wrong with the world, but why add your person to the list?" And so far as campus attire is concerned, the most condemning blow of all is struck when Mr. Love declares:

"It is also bad form for even a star athlete to go around wearing a sweater with a big letter on it. In fact, wild horses could not drag an athlete into such a sweater."

Take heed to the decree of Fashion, O, ye heroes of the athletic arena!

From clothes the critic turns to college morals and the new campus code. On this subject he says that he has learned that, although a friendly draught indulged in privacy is permissable, "getting pickled openly and flaunting an alcoholic ego is de trop."

And according to Sam there is also a new chivalry towards the girls among the members of

More Satire And Relaxation Than Conflagration At Fire

(By H. J. Galland)

At 9:15 Monday night the first of the season's blazing social events flared up at the corner of the Intramural Athletic field. Most of the best people from the surrounding dormitories were present to see the event.

Following the city fire truck down Franklin street and past Spencer Hall, turning at the corner, a long line of cars helped the excitement along with horns and headlights.

The flames of the fire were easily visible beyond J Dormitory, but, helpful as they always are, the crowd of students which was already assembled directed the fighters with whooping yelps of "Fire!" Since it was too hot to stand within ten feet of the fire and half the field was illuminated, the assistance was hardly necessary.

Apparently considering the fire as too small and unimportant, for their full attention, the truck and most of the men remained parked on the pavement. One man, complete with blue uniform, hat, and pike, came down to look the fire over. His appearance was immediately hailed with cheers and loud handclipping. He smiled pleasantly.

The usual enthusiasm at social fires quickly died down. After all, it was only a rubbish dump which was ablaze, and there was no furniture to be dramatically and superfluously dragged out into the middle of the street, no jumps to be made from upper stories onto mattresses below, and no water to explode fountain-like and unexpectedly from the middle of the hoses. Nor was there a piano to be played while the flames leaped about, as at the Pickard Hotel fire of a few years ago. In short, after the first five minutes, it was unexciting. Several students muttered something about "Money back. . . ."and "Not what they used to be. . . ."

It was too early in the evening for the crowd to be properly attired for fire-attending in pajamas, so that the proper background was missing. The pine trees lit with a yellow light against the dark blue of the sky was interesting, but not exciting. And there was rain.

As a curtain-raiser for the Chapel Hill fire season, the recent affair was a disappointment. Chief Foister has promised bigger and better fires, more rescues, more opportunities for organized cheering, and more co-eds at the fires which remain on the schedule. If these promises are carried out, he may undoubtedly expect better gate receipts and more co-operation of the type which has always featured the proper kind of public fire in Chapel Hill.

Tar Heel Topics

Chapel Hill's first fire of the season was not so hot socially, nor did it furnish the highlights peculiar to such events here. Nossir, Chapel Hill fires ain't what they used to be.

Authorities at Stephens College require the 600 students there to take a nap every afternoon. Such a requirement is quite unnecessary here; the University students get plenty of sleep on their classes.

Three were killed and 25 wounded in a riot which started during a pre-election political parade at Mexico City Sunday. Evidently modern efficiency methods are being introduced in Mexican politics; heretofore they always waited until after the president was elected before shooting him.

We see by the paper that the University has a new football song, written by two of the Wigue and Masque outfit. If it is anything like those used in "Mum's the Word" last year, the Athletic Association would do well to cover the stands at Kenan stadium with asbestos before the Thanksgiving game.

Faculty Bootlickers

College students are queer birds, but some of the professors and would-be professors are downright peculiar. Perhaps the most incomprehensible of all faculty men are the numerous nincompoops who obviously curry favor with their students in an effort to secure reputations as popular teachers and thereby obtain promotions. They imagine that their students have the highest regard for them; in reality most of the undergraduates see through their rather transparent strategems and receive them with amused contempt and even disgust.

"Booting" is practiced assiduously by many students, who make themselves obnoxious to their instructors and classmates alike. But the faculty "bootlicker," who makes a big play for popularity with his classes, is even more disgusting to those among his students who refuse to be "booted."

A wide assortment of jokes, usually somewhat stale and frequently risque, is an indispensible part of the stock in trade of the professorial "booter." Frequent grats and easy quizzes are among his favorite devices. He considers it necessary to flunk few men, but never are they athletes or prominent campus leaders. The socially ineligible, the non-frat men, the obscure and mediocre student are the unfortunate recipients of the F's that he considers necessary to uphold the dignity of his position.

It is true that most really competent teachers are popular, but their popularity is based upon merit rather than conscious efforts to secure the favor of their students. On the other hand, a few of the many faculty men who habitually "boot" their classes are so consummate in the art that they actually secure some measure of popularity with the least discerning of the students. But whatever advantage the "bootlicking" instructor gains from his efforts to secure popularity are more than offset by the open ridicule that he receives from the more intelligent of the undergrads.

The Peril Of Examinations

Now that the season of mid-term examinations is over for this quarter the thoughts of the student body naturally turn to the subject of final examinations. Interestingly enough, students habitually look upon this phase of college life with a characteristic dread. The writer is inclined to believe that this attitude of dread can be explained in terms of an incorrect method of preparation.

Students cram on the eve of an examination because examinations are a nacessary evil—necessary, because professors must have some way of checking up on the work that students have covered in their courses, and evil because an unfair measurement of what the student has actually learned is often the result. Although students readily appreciate the teacher's motive in giving an examination, they are rather loathe to discover wherein they themselves are benefitted thereby. The resulting tendency is to put off preparation until the latest possible time before the examination is scheduled to occur. The method of preparation resulting from this situation is commonly known to students and professors as cramming. Cramming tends to augment the evil of examinations—an evil which, though necessary, does not need to be increased.

The student who crams on the eve of an examination is unfair both to himself and to the rest of his class. Intensive study is a good thing, but cramming may well be compared to building a house out of loose straw, or the Biblical incident of the man who built his house on the sand. No sooner is the storm of examinations over than the temporary knowledge gained from cramming becomes a thing of the past. The customary sigh of relief which students utter after finishing an examination is nothing more than the symbol of the passage of this emergency information from their minds. This is the fallacy of examinations which we feel is worthy of careful consideration and which we believe to be due to faulty methods of preparation.

Notwithstanding numerous opinions to the contrary, the writer of this treatise contends that all study on the eve of an examination should be confined to a review of the main headings of the material covered in the course. Such a process is obviously a review rather than the acquisition of new information. The workableness of such a scheme will depend, of course, upon the adoption of some scheme for getting students sufficiently interested in their work to produce a reasonable amount of study. Generally speaking, such is the case on this campus. We, therefore, advocate the abandonment of cramming. All too often an unfair estimate of what the student really knows is the result. All too often temporary information is confused with permanent information by professor and student alike.—J. C. W.

Are College Activities Stale?

In a recent article in the Atlantic Monthly on "The Convention of Going to College" William I. Nichols makes the statement that "The 'activity man' is gradually dying out in colleges, simply because he is discovering that college activities are only a rather stale continuation of those at school."

On the surface this statement may seem true, but to those who are intimately acquainted with college activities, at least in this University, the statement is not true. The "activity man" is on the increase here. A daily paper, a semi-monthly literary supplement, a comic magazine, and numerous other publications, along with the increased interest in sports intensified by the winning teams, are drawing many more men into "activities." Added to this many national fraternities are just getting a strong foothold here; for a fraternity to "rate" there must be "activity men," and consequently every pledge is driven, for a while at least, into some activity.

As to the charge that college activities are only a "stale continuation of those in school" no student intimately acquainted with both could make such a statement. In the prep schools and high schools that we were familiar with, the "activities" were many times so much under the supervision and direction of faculty members that the students really had little part in them; the principal in one school was the controling factor in publications; teachers often made the activities seem like regular school work. In college activities a new attitude is developed with no faculty directly in charge; a man is left to do what he can, guide himself, and decide matters for himself; the fact that the "activities" are not taken so seriously in college as in high school make them the more interesting and the fresher.

It is true, thank goodness, that the rah-rah type of "activity man" is dying out, but in his place a "new student" is arising, one who is more balanced in his judgement of sports, one who takes scholarship a little more seriously, who is more willing to recognize real worth, who is a little more tolerant, and who is a little deeper and a bit more thorough.

AN APPRECIATION

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

Few days ago Dr. Herbert Gray, the visiting London clergyman, commented favorably on the courtesy of of the Carolina students. In this connection I would like to relate a recent episode that speaks for itself.

Last Sunday my two children and I were caught in the terrific rain storm and forced to seek refuge on the porch of Bynum Gymnasium. As a shelter, this left much to be desired, for the wind blew the rain directly towards us and we were soon uncomfortably wet. Somewhat isolated from the path and notice of passing motorists, we shivered and waited for the storm to abate. Fortunately we did not have to wait for that, however, as a student in Steele dormitory saw our situation. Quickly borrowing a car from a fellow-student, he came to our rescue and, in the almost blinding rain, drove us home.

Stallings To Speak

Lawrence Stallings, author of "What Price Glory," "The Cock Eyed World," and other popular plays, will speak to the playwriting class at 9:30 this morning. The class meets in 113 Murphey.

Last Friday Mr. Stallings paid Chapel Hill a brief visit, and expressed a great deal of interest in the dramatic work being done here.

Marine Band Never Misses Concert Date

According to John P. White, trumpet soloist with the Marine Band which appears here Thursday, it is the rule of that organization never to miss a concert date. Mr. White tells of an incident which occurred on a recent tour.

The band was traveling from Shamokin, Pa., to Pottstown, of the same state. The private car in which the organization travels was switched off at a tiny junction somewhere between the two "dates." It was scheduled to be picked up by another train that would carry it into Pottstown. But time went by and no train arrived. Afternoon waned into early evening—and still no train. Finally the manager of the band became desperate and sent a distress call to railroad headquarters. Immediately a special engine was dispatched with orders to "Make Pottstown in time for the Marine Band Concert."

In all its tours the Marine Band never traveled as fast as it did that afternoon. The engine dashed into the station at Pottstown with its lone car a few minutes before performance time. Bandsmen jumped to the platform as the train slowed down; they were hustled into waiting busses and rushed to the theatre.

The audience was in their seats, perfectly innocent and quietly awaiting the performance. Breathless bandsmen, hurriedly grabbed their instruments and stood up just in time to acknowledge the applause as the curtain rose.

"It's a trying life," says Mr. White "when we take the road—but we would do anything to keep our tradition intact—the band plays on schedule!" The schedule of the United States Marine Band includes a concert here this season.

Intramural Cake Race To Be Held Next Friday

Regulations Governing Annual Contest Issued By Department

Prizes Will Be Awarded Runners; First Race Held In 1923 Won By Harry Thach.

CONTESTANTS MUST TRAIN

Letters of invitation containing the rules governing the sixth annual intramural cake race to be held at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon, November 22, have been sent out by the intramural department to the dormitory managers and fraternities.

Any one is eligible to compete who has not engaged in intercollegiate competition in varsity or freshman cross-country or varsity or freshman track at the University, and who has practiced at least five afternoons under the supervision of the varsity cross-country coach. Any one desiring to compete should check in to the manager just inside the main gate at Emerson field on the afternoons he practices, in order to get official credit for his work. Groups leave the field for runs every half hour between 3 and 5:30 o'clock.

Entries may be made either unattached or by teams. Cakes will be awarded to the three teams entering the largest number. The ten teams having the lowest team score will also receive cakes. The first five men on each team to finish in the first seventy-five will count in the team's score. A team whose first five men finish in first, seventh, 15th, 18th and 50th places would have a score of 91.

Gold medals will be awarded to the first five men to finish. Bronze medals will go to the second five. Prizes for those finishing between tenth and 76th will include neckties, socks, theatre pass, and track shirts. Both individual and team credit toward the intramural trophies awarded at the end of the year will be allowed. The course will be about two miles.

The first cake race, held in 1923, was won by Harry Thach. The course was three miles. Old West, finishing 14 men in the first hundred, won the team prize cake presented by the University laundry department. One hundred and twenty-five participated in the race that year.

Luther Byrd won the 1924 race and the cake presented by the University laundry department. He also won a two-weeks vacation from Swain hall, a prize offered to the winner if he were a member of the force there. The team cake offered by the Chapel Hill Bakery was again won by Old West.

Galen Elliott won the 1925 event. Old West again won the team prize.

Minor Barkley won the 1926 race, setting a record for the 1.9 mile course. He won the pick of one hundred cakes, and the loving cup awarded by the Book Exchange. Old West for the fourth time won the team prize—a large cake offered by the Smoke Shop. One hundred and seventy-nine took part in that race.

June Fisher led the 274 entries home in the 1927 race, covering the course in ten minutes flat. The "town team" won the big cake given by Dean Paulsen of the Smoke Shop. Placing 14 men in the first hundren they nosed out the New Dorms team which placed 13.

FOOTBALL TEAM HAS LIGHT WORK

Rain And Soggy Field Prevents Heavy Work For Carolina Team.

Rain and a soggy field combined yesterday to give the Tar Heels another day of rest—to the detriment of training plans for Saturday's invasion of the lair of the Davidson Wildcats.

Formal practice was declared out, but the mentors had all the men take light workouts before going to the showers.

Coach Collins said tonight that Pete Wyrick, veteran quarterback, out for two weeks with another back injury, may be able to play at least part of the Davidson game.

Jim Magner, halfback, and Red Gilbreath, center, the only casualties of the South Carolina game, are coming around nicely, Trainer Quinlan reported.

A victory over Davidson would leave only Duke to pass for the state title. All Carolina strength may be needed, for Davidson's 13-0 upset of the N. C. State Wolfpack indicates that the Wildcats must be taken very seriously.

"Yank" Going Great

Yank Spaulding, who is leading all scorers on the 33-point Tar Heels, played two seasons without receiving a monogram. Injuries always hit the hefty ball-carrier just as he was making the grade. He has really come into his own in this his senior year. He has 6 touchdowns and 10 extra points to his credit for a scoring total of 46 points, and has played a jam-up defensive game all season as well.

Davidson, Duke And Tar Heels Still In Carolina Title Race

With both N. C. State and Wake Forest having lost two games apiece in Big Five competition, it looks as if the 1929 state title race has turned into a three-cornered affair between Davidson, Carolina and Duke. Somebody goes down Saturday, for the Tar Heels are to clash with Davidson in the native Wildcat lair in what promises to be another of those epic Carolina-Davidson fights. Duke and Davidson clash at Durham on Thanksgiving Day, and then on December 7 comes the monumental Duke-Carolina battle, already predicted by many as being the game that will settle the title race.

SPAULDING LEADS CAROLINA SCORERS

Jimmy Ward, one of South Carolina's two big contributions to the University's "33–point a game" backfield, took advantage of Saturday's game with the South Carolina "homestaters" to fatten his season batting average and step out front of the Tar Heel touchdown makers.

The fleet left halfback circled the ends and rammed the tackles for two more touchdowns, to run his season total to seven.

"Eight-Yard" Magner, who was tied with Ward at five markers before that South Carolina game, didn't get to play much due to a sprained ankle, and fell behind in the scoring chase.

But Yank Spaulding, the hefty fullback, was far from idle, and Spaulding, by virtue of two more touchdowns and two more placekicks, ran his touchdown total up to six and his extra point total up to 10. So, by virtue of a nimble toe, Spaulding still has a slight edge on the Tar Heel scorers.

Spaulding leads the race with 46 points, to Ward's 42. Magner comes third with 31, followed by Johnny Branch, the sensational sophomore, with 27, and a trio of right halfbacks tied for fifth place with 18 points apiece —Strud Nash, Rip Slusser, and Chuck Erickson.

The Tar Heel team, to date, is averaging 33 points a game, and if it maintains the pace, will set a new record for Tar Heel scoring machines of all times.

Head Coach Chuck Collins began the week's work for Davidson with an official decree of three days' rest for the 29 men who worked against South Carolina. It looks as if the Tar Heel express" will be in fine shape again Saturday.

Fysal Makes Good

Ellis Fysal, stocky, hard charging 188-pound son of Wilson, N. C., is beginning to look like a fixture at right guard for the Tar Heels. Fysal, a converted fullback, playing his first year on the varsity, crashed into the lineup, over two lettermen, in the V. P. I. game, and has been starting every game since. He makes a great running mate for the crashing, driving Captain Ray Farris at left guard.

Place-Kickers Wanted

Chuck Collins, head Tar Heel mentor, is giving especial attention to his place-kickers this week. Captain Brock at Davidson is an artist at the game of making "Point No. 7," and the Tar Heels to meet Davidson there on Saturday, with all their 33-point scoring average a game, have converted only 15 of 36 attempts into extra points.

By Henry Anderson

THE NEXT GAME on the slate is with Davidson. Davidson has defeated N. C. State but has lost to Wake Forest. Either game can be taken by the prophet for his prediction in the approaching week-end affair. Some say that Davidson upset the dope in both cases. Losing to Wake Forest was a freak, while State's defeat came as a natural course of events (according to a Davidsonian).

CAROLINA is still maintaining her 33 points per game and scores of rival institutions to date show that this average won't drop much if any as a result of the games left on the schedule. In the past game with South Carolina this average picked up a little.

WRITE UPS OF THE GAME last Saturday at Columbia say that the group of feminine rooters for South Carolina remained enthusiastic throughout the entire game. The same sports writers introduce the thought that they probably thought it was merely a game of tag and that S. C. was chasing N. C. all over the field. Live and learn!

DUKE upset another dope bucket by taking the L. S. U. Tigers in tow by such overwhelming odds. After spending three very unsuccessful weekends in foreign territory they celebrated their return home by routing the Tigers. The Duke Blue Devil certainly did its work last Saturday and confirms the opinion held by many that Duke is a far from broken team by the numerous defeats.

THE BLUE DEVILS came to life just in time to get their finger in the Southern Conference pie. At present they are ranking with the leaders of the Conference and pass Carolina in the standing. Duke hasn't lost any games in the Conference and though they have won only one they still have a good chance for a clean slate. IF they could dope out plans for the Tar Heels' downfall things would be rosy in Durham. (IF.)

CAPTAIN BARKLEY and his colleagues turned the tables on the Duke harriers last Friday and avenged completely the defeat in '28. The whole team showed up well. Besides his stellar work in cross-country, Barkley is a prominent miler during track season. Cliff Baucom, number two man in varsity cross country, replaces last year's track captain, Henderson, in the two-mile run this spring. Last season Baucom showed up exceedingly well in all the meets. He pushed Captain Henderson hard in most of the races and is expected to be one of the best in the south this spring.

THE CAKE RACE this year is being resumed after a year's lay-off. There was a rebellion last year against the large number of cakes that Chapel Hill housewives had been so generously preparing previously. Because of this imposition on so many of the Chapel Hill women it is understood that nearly all of the 100 prizes to be given away will be in merchandise, with the exception of 10 or 15 cakes.

We hope that the noise commission will make itself heard. —New York Evening Post.

FRESHMAN TEAM MEETS MARYLAND FROSH SATURDAY

Tar Babies Have Won Past Two Years; Maryland Holds Victory Over Virginia Yearlings.

Forced to hold practice in the Tin Can yesterday afternoon on account of the rain, the Tar Babies are taking advantage of every opportunity to become a well organized football machine in the few remaining days before they leave for the Maryland game on Saturday.

A long signal practice was held Monday afternoon which kept the freshmen until after dark. Four teams were organized and paired off to learn new plays and run the regular formations which will be used in College Park.

Little is known about the strength of the Maryland frosh offense, but in a recent game with Virginia they won by a close margin of one touchdown. The Maryland freshmen always put up a tough fight and coaches Enright and Sapp are preparing to meet any unexpected difficulties which may arise inthe coming game.

For the past two seasons the freshmen have won from Maryland, having lost but one game to them in three years. This year's game is expected to be an exceptionally tough one in that the Old Liners will be on the war path to make the wins even in the last four years.

Close Scores Mark Virginia Contests

The North Carolina-Virginia grid rivalry, to be renewed here Thanksgiving Day, is one of the hottest as well as the oldest in all the South. Figures for ten games since the war prove the point. The Cavaliers have scored 70 points, the Tar Heels 64. The Tar Heels have won five games, Virginia three, and two have been ties. Only once has a game been won by a two-touchdown margin and the average difference between the scores has been 4.2 points. The Tar Heels have won the last two games 14-13 and 24-20.

Toe Work Important In Cavalier Games

Toe work has always proven a big factor in the Carolina-Virginia rivalry, to be renewed here Thanksgiving Day. A field goal apiece made a 3-3 tie in 1925. Virginia got the field goal in 1926, but Carolina failed. The next year the Tar Heels won on an extra point, 14-13. Last year, by getting the extra points Virginia led until the last few seconds by 20-18, Chuck Erickson's great run giving the Tar Heels a narrow 24-20 victory margin.

Carolina High In Nation's Scoring

The Tar Heels with 231 points to 47 are standing well to the fore in the national pigskin chase for points. Southern California leads the list with 289 points. Only Tennessee, with 257, and Tulane with 240, are leading the Tar Heels in the South. In the State, the Tar Heels' nearest competitor is Elon with 98 points, and Duke with 95.

Carolina Has Edge

The Tar Heels and the Davidson Wildcats have played four scoreless ties in a series that dates back to 1898, and these scoreless games were only fair samples of the remaining 20 games on the records. The Tar Heels have won 17 while losing three, but they have had a tough time winning a lot of the annual battles. Only five times have they run up as many as four touchdowns over the fighting Presbyterians.

Sophomore Cabinet Discusses Church

The Y cabinets met Monday night at the Y at 7:15. The program for the sophomor cabinet consisted of a discussion of the subject "Is the Power of the Church Waning?" It was decided by the council ,that the church was, to a certain extent, decreasing, and if it continued there was a chance of it dying out. The council agreed also that if such ever did occur that the whole civilization would suffer a big loss, but since the church was not keeping up with all the modern industry there should soon be some change made.

This discussion, which was led by Edward Yarborough, was the main feature on the program. It was also decided, in the way of business, that the program next meeting would be a talk by some speaker of campus prominence. These talks, which have for the last month been on the subject of "Religion," will for the next month be on the subject of "The State Labor Situation." The meeting was considered one of the best discussion meetings of this year.

The junior-senior cabinet, Jimmie Williams presiding, opened with a devotional which was followed by the minutes of last meeting. President Williams then read a very interesting article on "Why Study the Bible?" The cabinet decided to devote a part of the program each meeting for the rest of this month to a discussion of the life of Christ. After a discussion of the plans for the United States Marine Band's advertising and managing the meeting closed with a word of prayer.

G. D. Metz, student pastor of the Lutheran church, opened the Metz, student pastor of the Lutheran church, opened the freshman council program with a devotional reading after which he gave a talk on what he had just read. Taking up the meeting of Jesus and the rich man, Mr. Metz went on to say that what this world needed today was real men.

After a few changes in the committees Mr. Aubrey Perkins gave a short review of all the past discussions and what had been decided in each. Mr. H. F. Comer, general secretary of the Y, began a discussion, but on account of the lack of time it was decided to continue the discussion until next week. After a discussion of a few plans for the United States Marine Band the council closed with prayer.

COLLEGIANS DO ADMIRERS DIRTY; GO WELL-DRESSED

the new order. To permit the most unattractive of wallflowers to wilt at a fraternity function has become a disgrace. "As against this," says the writer, "the 1929-30 collegians are attempting to recognize woman's emancipated status by inaugurating the dutch treat idea among co-eds upon informal social occasions. But so far, they have met with successful resistance."

In conclusion Love says that as he talks to those men their "faces are as devoid of expression as a stage English butler's." From this he gets "the hottest tip of them all." That is "if you would be collegiate, 1930 model, you must never, under any circumstances, display the slightest emotion. It is the worst possible form."

Although it makes interesting reading matter, much of Sam's "dirt" is written from a viewpoint similar to that held by a young country clubman from the University of Virginia who was so shocked, on a recent visit to Carolina, to find that the boys here were "so rough in their dress."

Mrs. Mahler Speaks Before Garden Club

In spite of the weather, there was a full attendance of the Garden club yesterday to hear Mrs. L. A. Mahler of Raleigh, who spoke concerning the need of highway planting and beautification. Mrs. John Anderson agreed to order red crepe myrtles for those who wished to plant the Jefferson Davis highway, at 50 cents each.

Mrs. Mahler spoke on "A Garden Plan." "This is not a day of chance," said Mrs. Mahler, "it is a day of plans for everything, and no more should we plant a garden without a plan than build a house without a plan or plueprint. Not only should it be a plan, but a good one, and one stamped good by some one who is qualified to stamp it."

She stressed suiting the planting to the architecture of the house, and to the size and shape of the lot. Several concrete examples were cited.

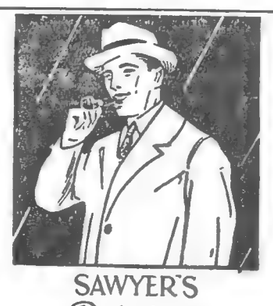
Mass, screen, and repeated planting were given their values; as well as the proper arrangement of colors.

Mrs. Mahler discussed formal gardens in a most instructive way, bringing in rockeries, pools, streams, bird-baths, and furniture as vital parts. She urged that the English be taken as examples and really live in the gardens more.

After her lecture a "round-table" was held while tea and cookies were served, and the plants of the exchange were being distributed.

Harland's Book Receives Praise

Dr. J. P. Harland's book, Prehistoric Aigina, which was published last year, has not only been widely reviewed in America but has also received favorable comment in the archaeological and classical journals of Europe. Recently there was a review in Eos, a publication in Poland, which was written by Przworski. Other countries in which the book has been reviewed are England, France, Germany and Italy.



Dr. Harland is a member of the archaeology department of the University.

STUDENT ESTABLISHES LIBRARY OVER THEATRE

A long wanted need of Carolina students has at last been realized. A student has recently opened up a library over the Carolina theatre in which he keeps only popular novels.

The stock of the Imeprial library consists of recent reprint editions and some of the older editions of popular fiction. As the demand increases the manager of the library will supplement his present stock with books just off the press.

Some of the new books included in the collection at present are Harper's 1929 prize novel, The Dark Journey, by Julian Green, and the latest novel by Percival Christopher Wren, Soldiers of Misfortune.

Two Thanksgiving Dances To Be Held

Two dances at the Washington Duke hotel in Durham will provide entertainment for the evenings before and after the Thanksgiving game between Carolina and Virginia.

The committee sponsoring these dances has planned to make them the biggest and the best given in the south this year. Charles Dornberger and his Victor recording orchestra alone will furnish the music Wednesday evening, November 27, while Thursday evening will see both ballrooms of the hotel in use—Dornberger in one and Jack Crawford, "The Clown Prince of Jazz," in the other. One ticket will give admittance to both dance floors.

Although this is to be Dornberger's first appearance in North Carolina, the popular radio and recording star should be a drawing card. Crawford's popularity in this state has been proven by the success of his engagement here last fall and the renewal of his contract to play for the Carolina fall dances; he also furnished the music at the June German in Rocky Mount.

Student tickets for these dances may be obtained today from authorized dispensers. These tickets, priced at $6 each, will give admission to the dances both nights. The regular price of admission to the dance Wednesday will be $3, and $5 for the one Thursday night. The number of student tickets is to be limited to 200.

DR. KNIGHT IN S. C.

Dr. Edgar W. Knight, of the school of education, was in Charleston, S. C., last Friday, where he delivered two addresses before the South Carolina State Teachers Association.

ALUMNI LOYALTY FUND COMMITTEE MEETS NOV. 14

that this custom of private giving will develop into a habit on the part of the alumni and will ultimately result in a large income, such as those developed at Yale and many other leading universities, by which the University can go beyond the routine instruction provided for by the state.

The council of the loyalty fund is first aiming to ally with itself thousands of alumni who will share in the development of the whole program.

So far as money is concerned, the council has been modest in amounts asked of the alumni. Mr. Weil stated here today that two-thirds of the 13,000 invitations sent out by the class agents were for amounts of $25 or less. No request has been made for an amount in excess of $500.

This policy gives point to the contention of the council that it is not on a begging campaign, according to Chairman Weil. The difference in what the council is doing and in the general type of appeal for gifts is that this campaign cannot succeed in money alone. It must have in addition the sustained interest of the doners.

GRADUATES TO ENTERTAIN

The Graduate Club will give their third annual reception in Smith Building, Friday, November fifteenth, from eight-thirty to ten-thirty. The faculty, the residents of Chapel Hill, and the students of the University are cordially invited to be present. Following the reception, from ten-thirty to one, there will be an informal dance given for the faculty and the people of Chapel Hill.

LAW CLASS WILL MEET THURSDAY

The second monthly meeting of the new class in administration of justice will be held Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the law building. This is an experimental course which is being tried for the first time this year. Every month a group of students after investigation under the supervision of faculty members report on some fundamental problem on administration of justice.

At this meeting the subject to be dealt with is arbitration and conciliation. There is a widespread movement at present among business men to avoid law suits by referring their disputes to unofficial judges under agreement to abide by their decision.

These students under the supervision of Professor Breckenridge have for several weeks been studying actual results reached in these arbitration cases. After reports are made, discussion by the entire group of students present and by all faculty members is invited. The subject chosen is a live one. The slate has recently adopted an elaborate statute authorizing arbitration in North Carolina.

Any persons who are interested in the subject are invited to attend this meeting Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the law building.

Fraternity Meeting

The Phi Delta Phi legal fraternity had its regular monthly dinner last night at the Cabin. Those present were addressed by Professor Hobbs of the school of commerce on the subject of "Constitutionality of the Workman's Compensation Acts." Insurance features of the Workman's Compensation Insurance were discussed by Walter Hoyle of the law school. Dean McCormick and Professor McCa were present at the dinner.

Co-ed Athletes

A special meeting of all co-eds interested in athletics will be held this afternoon at four o'clock in Gerrard hall.

Carl Farris, basketball coach, will make a talk. Election of co-ed managers for various fields of athletics will also take place at this meeting. A special invitation is issued by Ida V. Weaver, president of the Co-ed Athletic Association, to every co-ed who is interested in any form of athletics to be present at the gathering.

McINTOSH ISSUES FROSH STATISTICS

C. E. McIntosh, executive secretary of the School of Education, after checking over the report on the midterm grades of freshmen in that school, has announced that their progress made thus far this year has been much more satisfactory than that of previous years. Although there was a considerable decrease in the enrollment of freshmen this fall from that of last year, this year's scholastic record compares, relatively, very favorably with that of last year, according to his announcement.

The number of first year men enrolled in the school is only 81, as compared to 124 enrolled last year. Of this number, however, 40, or 53 percent of the total, checked all their work, while only 36, or 29 per cent, did so last year. Only four, or five per cent of the total number, failed to check any of their work, to 24 (19 per cent) last fall. Of all those receiving unsatisfactory grades on one or more subjects, there were 35 (47 per cent) this year, to 88 (71 per cent) last year. Of this year's class, the majority of those failing to check all their work received only one W, while no freshman in the school received three X's, or two X's and one W.

PLANS BEING MADE FOR CHEERIO SECTION HERE

The freshman class practiced "Carolina Ho!" the new football song which was written for the Virginia game, at chapel exercises yesterday. Handbills with the song printed on them were distributed to the freshmen at that time.

Cheerleader Jack Barrett opened the exercises with a few cheers. Then practice on the song began with Steve Lynch leading. Though the song is somewhat difficult in places, the freshmen were aided by the copies of the song.

Barrett is planning to introduce "Carolina Ho" and, possibly, certain other songs as a special feature of the cheering program for the Thanksgiving game. Arrangements are being made with Grady Pritchard to seat the freshmen or a large cheerio group in sections together, so that plans for the cheering at this game may be carried out in the best manner.

Notice

By arrangements which have been made with the Davidson Athletic Department the students of the University can secure tickets to the Carolina-Davidson game for $1.00 by bringing their pass books to the Book Exchange. The regular price of these tickets is $2.00.

Marine Band To Appear Today In Two Concerts

First Show Is This Afternoon In Kenan Stadium at 3:30 And Tonight In The Tin Can At 8:30.

The United States Marine Band arrives here this morning to deliver two concerts, one in Kenan stadium at 3:30 and the other at the "Tin-Can" at 8:30 tonight.

The band, which has been making a tour of eighteen of the largest cities in the United States, brings with it two special cars, one for the members of the band and the other for the baggage. It has also chartered two busses to bring the players to the Carolina Inn, where day registration has been secured in order that the band might get a rest before the concerts. Twenty trunks containing all the players' belongings will be carried to Raleigh where the band will go in busses after the concert tonight. The band will take the mid-night train at Raleigh for Norfolk, where its next concerts will be held.

According to Chas. A. Horr, advance agent for the band, "The afternoon performance being in Kenan stadium will add greatly to the success of the program." Mr. Horr continued by saying, speaking of the stadium, that he had not seen a place where the work of man and Nature had combined with such marvelous results. He was very enthusiastic over the idea of having the afternoon performance in the stadium.

The band, which has been in operation for the past 129 years, has played at all the presidential inaugurations from Thomas Jefferson's through Herbert Hoover's.

It has in all its seven score years of existence had but nine leaders, and was for 12 years led by Sousa. While in Kansas City 36,000 people attended its performances.

According to Mr. H. F. Comer, general secretary of the Y, "The United States Marine Band will bring here only the highest class music, and Chapel Hill and the University are exceedingly fortunate in being among the few privileged cites that will hear this noted band."

Those in charge of the ticket sales especially urge all those that expect to attend the afternoon performance to please get their tickets as early as possible so as not to allow any mix-up at the last minute.

Phi Assembly Holds Heated Discussions

With a large percentage of its regular membership in attendance, the Philanthropic assembly met in regular session Tuesday night. The program for the evening included a discussion of the new constitution and the initiation of new members.

Following the reports of the various committees, Speaker Allbright presented a full and clear explanation of the revised constitution, as drawn up and presented by the constitutional committee.

Several of the amendments were subjected to heated discussions. However, all of them were included in the final draft which was accepted by a substantial majority.

After completing the business at hand the remainder of the meeting was taken up with the initiation of seven new men.

ESPERANTO CLUB MEETS TUESDAYS

World Language Society Holds First Meeting; Forty Members.

There occurred this week 3 events of interest, not only to the philologist but the average student interested in world affairs. The first was the decision of the Irish Dail to appropriate a large sum of money for the furtherance of the use of the Gaelic language at Galway college, where very little English is spoken. The second event took place in Turkey. The secondary schools of that new republic agreed to discontinue the teaching of ancient languages and to adopt the modern languages in their curriculum and to latinize Turkish. The third, and most pertinent development was the first meeting of the Esperanto Club of the University of North Carolina, held last Tuesday at 5 o'clock.

The meeting was originally planned to be held in the "Y" but due to the unexpectedly large number of enthusiasts who responded to the invitation printed in the Tar Heel Gerrard hall was decided upon as the most suitable gathering place.

More than forty persons, two of them co-eds, all interested in a world language movement, listened attentively as Dr. Ernst Metzenthin, the leading spirit of the club and its teacher, traced the history of the earliest universal language attempts. Occasionally he digressed for a moment to point out a few of the many unnecessary forms with which modern languages are so overburdened. And many were the smiles and sighs of contentment as he stressed the fact that the simplified grammar of Esperanto can be very easily learned in an hour or two and that with the aid of a dictionary letters could be written after several lessons.

It was decided that there would be no formal club organized until the members have a fair knowledge of Esperanto. Classes are to be held every Tuesday at 5 o'clock in Murphey hall and all students and other people interested in becoming members of this world movement are invited to attend.

Woofter Directing Folk Culture Study

Dr. and Mrs. T. J. Woofter, Jr. left Chapell Hill Tuesday to spend a week on St. Helena Island, S. C. For the past two years Dr. Woofter has been directing a study of folk culture among the negroes who make up the larger portion of the population of the island.

Living thus in isolation the inhabitants of St. Helena have developed customs, a dialect, and a civilization which have attracted the attention of numerous social research groups. The present survey is being sponsored by the Social Science Research Council, a national organization, and the University Institute for Research in Social Science, of which Dr. Woofter is a member.

The Research Council serves as a clearing house for social scientific information. Although it is not endowed for research, it frequently conducts surveys similar to this one, using funds obtained from various foundations.

Di Senate To Hold Tryouts For Debate

The Dialectic senate held its weekly meeting in New West Tuesday night. Much interest was exhibited toward the bills that were placed upon the floor and many arguments were presented.

Following the clerk's reading of the minutes, the President announced that the tryouts for the Mary D. Wright debate would be held Monday night at 7:30 in the Di hall, New West building. Senator McPherson, further reporting for the dance committees, stated that Jack Wardlaw has been engaged to furnish music for the occasion.

Mr. Hanna was presented for membership and was unanimously granted full privileges, except that of voting, his initiation to take place at the next initiation meeting, the date of which has not yet been set.

After the clerk's reading of the calendar, the following resolutions were discussed and voted upon:

Resolved: That the Dialectic senate go on record as requesting the officials of the University to repair the walks in front of Swain hall.

Resolved: That the Dialectic senate go on record as stating that, since co-eds are permitted to enroll in the University, they should be admitted to all classes.

Senators Davis and Shreve argued pro and con upon the first bill. The vote was 9-8 in favor of the resolution. Senators Shreve and VanCleve upheld the second resolution, being ably opposed by Senators McEver, Vick and McPherson. The vote of the senate defeated the bill, 12-8.

No further resolutions were placed on the calendar, and after a favorable criticism by the critic, the senate adjourned in favor of carrying the two remaining resolutions over until the next meeting.

In September, 1913, Adolphe Pegoud was the first flyer to loop the loop.

DORMITORY PRESIDENTS RESPONSIBLE FOR GRASS

At the last meeting of the Dormitory club it was decided to make the dormitory presidents responsible for the grass adjacent to their respective dormitories.

In the past few years it has been the policy of the dormitory government that the dormitory councilmen should not have jurisdiction over any activities outside the dormitory walls. This year a student has to be warned only twice to keep off the grass before he is expelled from the college dormitories. A student has been hired to go around and warn the offenders.

Tar Heel Topics

The guy who got four X's on midterms and wrote his parents that X is an abbreviation for excellent is our idea of an optimist.

A few weeks ago it was front page news when stock prices failed to gain an average of at least half dozen points; now it's worth a streamer when they fail to lose two dozen points.

Dusky Politics

We quote from a dispatch by the esteemed AP, appearing in the dailies yesterday: "promotion of a plan to put negro candidates in the race for Congress in the north as Democrats in order to 'hold in line' the southern states which went for Herbert Hoover in the last election was attributed to J. A. Arnold, manager of the Southern Tariff association, today by the senate lobby committee."

Described as a program for "blackening the Democratic party," the scheme was attributed by Arnold to Vance Muse, field representative of the tariff association. A letter from Arnold to Muse revealed that the former went "with the darkey today to see Vice President Curtis and he thought well of our negro congressman idea, but said it was a matter which should be taken up with Mr. Hoover and that he would talk with Hoover about it."

Sounds like old times in the political arena. A few decades ago the cry of "nigger" was enough to ruin the political career of any hopeful in the South, or of any party for that matter. The famous DePriest tea at the White House a few months ago revived the ebon shade which has hovered over the Republican campaigns in the South since carpet-bagging was in its prime. In the last presidential fiasco the Republicans managed to shake themselves free of the dusky stigma for the first time in over half a century, and now it appears that they have decided to tar the gentlemen of the opposition with the same brush that has been used quite effectively upon themselves. A clever political maneuver, if maneuver it is. But we smell a nigger in the woodpile.

In the first place, we doubt seriously that anybody, even a Republican, is so utterly devoid of intellect that he imagines such a scheme to be practicable. How would Republicans be able to induce northern Democrats to run negro candidates for Congress? After all, there are quite a few astute men in the Democratic ranks, and very little astuteness is required to see through the far from opaque ruse.

Nope, the affair appears from this distance to bear a suspiciously strong resemblance to the propaganda which has been manufactured by the Democratic party during the past few months. But whether the plan was really conceived by the Republicans or whether the entire affair is an especially cunning outgrowth of Democratic ingenuity, it is diabolical in its implications. Political appeals to race prejudice are dangerous and utterly damnable, especially in the South.

Substituting The Tin Can For Memorial Hall

Tonight the Tin Can will be used—perhaps for the first time—as a concert hall. Since the University announced that Memorial hall would be closed for an indefinite length of time, those agencies sponsoring lecture and concert programs decided upon the plan of equipping the old Tin Can with the conveniences suitable to accommodating these programs. Consequently new seating arrangements have been made, the acoustics have been improved, and, most important of all, a heating system has been installed. Therefore, most all of the disadvantages of the Tin Can as a concert hall have been removed, and the building should not be lacking in comfort to the audience.

Because of the emergency of the situation, the Tin Can will out of necessity be used in place of Memorial hall. The concert tonight is as much an experiment as anything else, in so far as the place is concerned. Those in charge of the affair are working under a serious handicap in making it a success. Not only the students but the citizens of Chapel Hill as well, in considering the proposition, are apt to look only at their experiences of chill and cold during basketball games. Many will no doubt be dubious about heating arrangements and will not attend on that score. According to authoritative statements, however, these fears are to be removed.

It happens that tonight's concert by the United States Marine Band is being sponsored by the Y. M. C. A. The latter organization is doing the student body a real service in bringing entertainment of this calibre here, and the students should not fail to support a thing of this sort just because of the shift in place. The future of the remainder of the year's entertainment program depends largely upon the support given by the students and townspeople to the feature this evening.

Grass Killers

In deference to precedent we submit herewith our annual reprimand to those who persist in treading the campus greens rather than the gravel walkways. Every year the University authorities take great pains in warning the students, upperclassmen as well as freshmen, not to walk on the grass. However, there are some who disregard these pleas, and the erosion of the grass continues.

It should be unnecessary to warn upperclassmen that if they do not refrain from walking on the grass a beautiful campus cannot be maintained. Attempts to impress this fact upon them are made quite frequently through the medium of the Tar Heel, although they should be aware of its importance at least by the end of their freshman year.

Freshmen ought to know by this time what the walks are for. They are not built to improve the landscape features, but to protect the grass and to expedite rather than to retard traffic.

Much money has been spent on the campus recently, especially on the southern part. The state legislature appropriated a large sum for the purpose of beautifying the grounds alone. The planting of grass and general landscaping of the south campus was in keeping with the development of that section in buildings and equipment. Hence, the property, even if only for the financial investment, should be taken care of as much as possible.

Grass killers should realize, in the future, that walkways and gravel paths are made to walk on.

Readers' Opinions

A NEW KEEP OFF THE GRASS MOVEMENT

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

A new movement is on foot on the campus. This is to make the dormitory presidents and councilmen responsible for the beauty of the grass adjacent to their respective dormitories. In recent years, since the inauguration of the present system of self-government, it has been the principle of dormitory government that the dormitory councilmen should not have jurisdiction over any activities without the walls of the dormitory in which they resided, their chief concern being with noise, agents, and disturbances detracting from the ability of the students to study.

This year, it was seen by the Dormitory club that some steps should be taken to inform the students that they were not supposed to play football on the grass. After offenders had been informed and warned to discontinue their athletic contests on the campus, they were to be dealt with by the men in whose dormitory jurisdiction they resided. In other words, if occupants of Carr played football in front of F, they would be dealt with by the Carr council, and not the F council.

To make this plan effective, the Dormitory club suggested gested that a student be hired to go around and inform first offenders. If he caught the same men on the grass again, to turn their names in to their respective councils. These councils have power to expel occupants from the dormitory, with loss of room rent, and to forbid these expelled men, through the University business office, to secure a room on the campus in the next two succeeding quarters. In other words, the dormitory council has power to enforce its demands. All appeals from the decisions of the dormitory council are taken to the student council, and must be perfected within a short time after expulsion from the dormitory. It was not contemplated by the club to make the student informer concerning the proper use of grass in any manner a policeman. It was thought that prudent and thinking students, even if being unmindful once, would not have to be reminded often concerning the maintenance of the beauty of the campus. The ill effects of trampling grass are easily seen by some of the students, but it has to be explained to others. Even explanations become boring to the explainer, at length, and more remindful methods have to be employed.

J. A. WILLIAMS.

The Campus

By Joe Jones

Of late many scribblers and not a few writers have put controversial pen to paper in the name of great god Football. Laudation, condemnation, vindication and indictment of the game have flowed glibly from the inkhorns. Likewise, senates and committees and governnig bodies have sat in weighty conclave on the subject. Meanwhile, new stadia continue to arise, crowds continue to fill them, the signals are called, the pass taken from the air, the touchdown scored, the game played; and football, whose other name is Conflict, unconcernedly weathers the storms of verbosity.

Which is as it was in the beginning, and will be for a great while to come. For there is that in every man and woman which answers the thrilling note of conflict. The thing that makes men enlist and women say 'go!' when the drums beat is the same as that which causes nonchalant students and dignified college presidents to wallop each other on the back when the slashing halfback runs sixty yards for touchdown. The crowd that yells and shrieks for Captain Farris and his men coming all hot and bloody from the field is the same crowd that hailed the news of Leonidas and his four hundred at Thermopylae, that shouted to Achilles and Hector from the windy walls of Troy, that watched Launcelot and his knights drive hard in the lists of Camelot, that wept and sang of Pickett and his Virginians climbing the deathly hill at Gettysburg. The crowd at Kenan stadium is as easily driven to frenzy as was the crowd in the Colosseum, and the modern grid warriors are as hard fighters as ever Spartacus and his gladiators were. Of course we are all somewhat less bloodthirsty, but we are no wise ripe for the abolition of the thing football symbolizes, and which is as old as life itself.

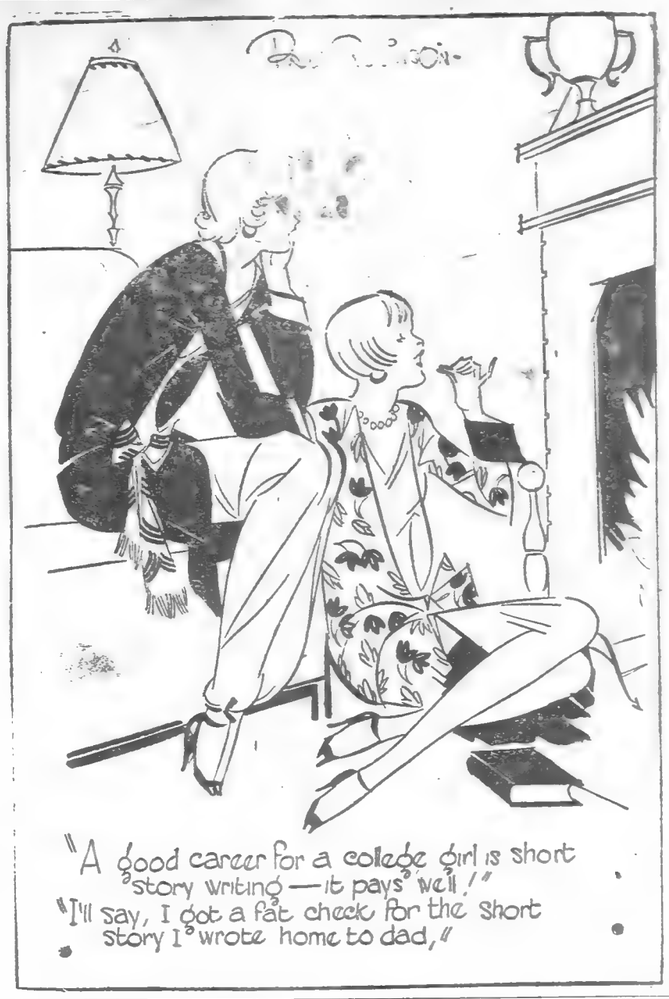
By merely changing the word 'heralds' to 'cheerleaders,' and 'ships' to 'cars' we have a perfectly literal description of a 1929 football crowd written by Homer some eight centuries before Christ. Here it is, direct from the Iliad: "Even as when the tribes of thronging bees issue from some hollow rock, ever in fresh procession, and fly clustering among the flowers of spring, and some on this hand and some on that fly thick; even so from the ships and huts marched forth the many tribes by companies to the place of assembly. And so they gathered, and the place of assemblage was in an uproar, and the earth echoed again as the hosts sate them down, and there was turmoil. Nine heralds restrained them with shouting, if perchance they might refrain from clamour. And hardly at the last would the people sit, and keep them to their benches and cease from noise.

"And the assembly swayed like high sea waves of the Icarian Main that east wind and south wind raise, rushing upon them from the clouds of father Zeus, and even as when the west wind cometh to stir a deep cornfield with violent blast, and the ears bow down, so was all the assembly stirred, and they with shouting hasted toward the ships; and the dust from beneath their feet rose and stood on high. And they bade each man his neighbor to seize the ships, and clear out the launching ways; and the noise went up to heaven of their hurrying homewards."

Some folks say that romance, chivalry, high adventure and such are outworn and dead. Football is not only proof positive to the contrary, but it serves a more practical and valuable purpose—it is a substitute for war and unruly strife which are prone to break forth from repression and dullness. Phillips Russell, the author, in writing of the old days at the University when he was a student here, admirably clarifies this point. He says, "Here, 20 feet east of the Well, N. and S. once fought with their fists for two hours. They fought until they could only tap each other feebly. The whole college was there. It was brutal, it was disgraceful. We enjoyed every moment of it. It did something for us—released some obscure tension, broke up some inner dam. We needed that fight. It was after the close of the football season, and from then until the opening of baseball, there yawned a dismal vacancy, hollow and dry as a skull. This period is filled now, perhaps, with vigorous and useful activities. We hope so, for this interim is loaded with dynamite."

'Rio Rita' Is First To Show Screen Power

There's a new phase of the theatrical business in the making. Broadway producers are beginning to wonder about "stage rights" to screen productions for the first time.



One of the films that has brought about this new point of view on the exchange of stage and screen material and talent is "Rio Rita," the all-talking, all-musical extravaganza Radio Pictures has made from the Ziegfeld hit.

The immediate reaction to the rich production value of the film "Rio Rita," its new music, new sets, new costumes and wealth of color and beauty, is that Broadway stage producers soon will be seeking "stage rights" to the bigger screen productions instead of the screen invading Broadway for its ideas and talent.

There were several figures connected with the screening of 'Rio Rita" who were associated in the original stage production. Harry Tierney, who wrote the score was one.

Collins Gives Varsity Rest As Reserves Get Scrimmage With Frosh

Moore And Redfern Show Mettle Against Freshmen; Magner Improving And May Play.

VARSITY WORKS TODAY

The 29 veterans who faced South Carolina last Saturday were given another day of rest yesterday by Coach Collins. However, the shock troops found that there was plenty of work for them as the coaches drove them through a long and tough scrimmage against one of Coach Enright's freshman teams.

The move was obviously to allow those who suffered bruises and bumps in the South Carolina contest to get in the best possible condition before the Davidson game Saturday.

The frosh proved tougher for the reserves than for the varsity, but the reserves, aided by Jimmy Moore's pass-catching activities, and Redfern's running, eked out a one-touchdown victory.

These two boys have been showing steady improvement. Moore, a quarter, broke into the lineup in the State game, and looks good to get another chance Saturday, as also Redfern, fleet little halfback.

The holiday will be over tomorrow, and the aftermath, Coach Collins said last night, will probably be a big dose of scrimmage.

Jim Magner, ground-gaining ace, still had a slight limp today, despite the fact that he has shown marked improvement, and there is doubt whether he will face Davidson.

Coach Collins stated tonight that he would probably bank on Jimmy Ward, Jimmy Maus and Phil Jackson at the halfback posts.

If this happens, there is all the more reason that the sophomore Moore may get a chance. Johnny Branch, sophomore flash, is still running at quarter in place of the injured Wyrick. Jackson has been doing the relief work, and in the event Jackson works at half, Coach Collins probably intends to use Moore behind Branch.
hind Branch.

The other injuries were coming around O. K. yesterday, and it looks like the Tar Heels will be able to put a strong team in the field when they renew their state championship drive at Davidson.

An important item in yesterday's workout was a warning against possible over-confidence when the team meets Davidson.

Davidson scouts who saw the Tar Heels subdue South Carolina 40 to 0 were quoted in the papers as having warned their squad that the Tar Heels would be a tougher foe than Army.

Overconfidence inspired by such a statement would be as disastrous to the Tar Heels as the Chicago fire was to Chicago, thinks Coach Collins.

The Tar Heel mentor's wish was that the papers bearing that story might have been banned from the village. That being impossible, he gave the squad a lecture, picking flaw for flaw, that could hardly have left anybody a victim of a superiority complex.

The Tar Heels' 33-point backfield is in good shape, and likewise the big Blue and White wall. But Coach Collins is far from believing the Davidson nut will be easy to crack on the Davidson field, on Davidson's homecoming day, and with the Cats boasting such an array of scrapping stars as McCall, Parrish, Brock and DeCamp, who led Army for a half, whipped Citadel, and blanked N. C. State!

(By J. C. Eagles)

This week-end the football season swings into its final quarter and brings speculation concerning the chances for the undefeated teams to continue their records. Southern conference title aspirants have been narrowed down to Tulane, Vandy, and Tennessee, Duke being eliminated because her schedule shows a scarcity of conference foes. Now the question is: which of the three contenders will come through? While we do not want to make any definite statement yet we believe that Tulane stands the best chance. Vandy and Tennessee battle this Saturday and of course one of the contenders will be eliminated in this game. If Tennessee wins she will then have to defeat the great Kentucky eleven to finish her schedule without a loss. If Vandy comes through Saturday she will have fairly easy sledding after that. However we doubt her ability to stop Hack and Mack. Tulane, conquerors of Georgia and Georgia Tech, should have no trouble in downing Sewanee and Louisiana State. Thus it seems logical that the Green Wave has the best chance of the three to remain undefeated and accordingly right now seems to be the most logical contender for Conference honors.

A statement from Edward K. Hall, chairman of the National Football Rules Committee intimates that the rule on fumbles which was instituted this fall is a permanent fixture. Only here and there he points out have protests been voiced against the rule. Unless three arises some general movement to abolish the provision that the ball becomes dead at the point of recovery by the defensive team, there will be no action taken. No one as yet has been able to raise a convincing argument against the rule and it would require a loud outcry from all over the nation to make the rule receive no more than a one year trial. In fact the general satisfaction with the football rules as they now stand portends that there will be little tinkering with them when the National Committee meets this winter.

Reports from Davidson say that their scouts who saw the Tar Heels in action last Saturday are convinced that all the talk about Carolina having a wonder team is worth some thought. They report that the overwhelming victory scored by the Collinsmen was quite impressive. While this is all very pleasant and appreciated, we want to return the compliment. Though the Wildcats may not set things on fire with their powerful attack, they cannot be beaten in this section for the fight and spirit they always show. State college, another fighting bunch, was outfought by the Davidson eleven last Saturday. The old spirit instilled by Coach Younger will offer a great obstacle to the Tar Heels this week-end though the brand of football put up by the Presbyterians may not match that of Carolina.

The first airplane flight from a battle ship was in 1911.

Army Star

RUNNING ATTACK MAY BE USED IN DAVIDSON CLASH

State's Passes Resulted In Presbyterian Touchdowns; Carolina Passes Good Against Gamecocks.

Since Davidson proved so adept at converting N. C. State passes into Davidson touchdowns, it is an interesting matter of speculation just what sort of offense the Tar Heels will feature against the Cats on Saturday.

Both of Davidson's touchdowns in that 13-0 N. C. State victory came as the almost immediate result of intercepted State passes and long runs—one by Joe McCall, the stellar Cat halfback, the other by DeCamp, a hard-hitting guard.

The Tar Heels have been featuring a fast aerial attack all season, interspersing running in proportion as the other team showed ability at pass defense.

South Carolina, after making both its scores on Clemson on intercepted Clemson passes, was doped to give the Tar Heels trouble on their aerial efforts.

But the Tar Heels turned the dope, didn't have a single pass intercepted, meanwhile playing havoc with the Gamecocks' aerial efforts.

Open football or aerial football — much may depend on which attack the Tar Heels will feature, and that question, although the Davidson battle is just two days off, is still an open one.

Marsters Still Leads

Al Marsters' total of 108 points scored in six football games for Dartmouth held good against the week-end assault of eastern rivals as the crippled Green back lay in a hospital, his gridiron career ended.

Morris, of Haverford, runner-up to Marsters in the eastern individual scoring table, added ten points to his total to climb to 75, but still faced a difficult job in any attempt to overhaul Marsters.

VIRGINIA HAS 66 - 0 SCORE

One of the South's oldest and hottest grid rivalries, to bloom forth anew on Thanksgiving Day when the Virginia Cavaliers stage another of their epic fights in Kenan Stadium here, might conceivably take on the nature of a grudge war. The Cavaliers, once upon a time, humiliated the Tar Heels 66 to 0, a debt which the Tar Heels have never been able to repay in kind. The Tar Heels have one of the greatest scoring machines ever turned out here, and loyal alumni are calling unanimously for a settlement of the 66 to 0 debt.

PULLEN SOCIETY SCORES ROGERS

State College Literary Group Disagrees With Massachusetts Professor.

The Pullen literary society of State college disagrees with Professor Rogers of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology who early this year counseled a group of students to be snobs if they wanted to succeed. Professor Rogers advised his group of men students that they should give very close attention to their dress. He also counseled them that they should conduct themselves in such a manner that all the people would know that they had attended college and had been given the very best of educational opportunities. The professor declared that their ambitions and aims should always be high for it was just as easy to marry the boss' daughter as to marry his stenographer.

The members of the Pullen society think that Professor Rogers' instructions to his group were entirely out of place and that such men as he are doing more injury to the college student than all of the other prevailing forces of evil put together.

The letter of the Pullen literary society to Professor Rogers is as follows:

"Dear Professor Rogers:

"Your views concerning the relation of the college man to the society about him have been discussed at some length by the members of the Pullen Literary Society of North Carolina State College, Raleigh, North Carolina. We are unable to agree with your opinion as stated in the press, although we willingly admit that you have been a stimulating force in American thought. We have summarized our objections in the following resolutions:

"'1. It is not necessary to be a "snob." If college students are trained in literary club activities, debating and public speaking, they will inevitably become leaders.

"'2. The well-trained student will succeed as a result of his ability and need not marry into wealth.

"'3. The members of the National Association of Teachers of Speech, who are now giving faculty supervision to the literary and debating societies found in most universities and colleges, are eager to provide this training.

"'4. Your opinions, widely quoted in the press, may do serious injury to the college student. As our companion, the Leazer Literary Society of North Carolina State College, has already pointed out in a recent proclamation, many motion-pictures now give unfair portrayals of college life. In the future we may expect to see pictured the typical college student a la Rogers—a snob in pursuit of an heiress. Please be careful in what you say, Professor Rogers.

"'5. Are we unfair to you? If so, we invite you to visit North Carolina State College and present your views to the students. We assure you of a capacity audience."

Freshman Cross Country Teams Invited To Meet

The University athletic officials have mailed out invitations to the freshman cross country teams of the "Big Five" for a meet to be held here Friday, November 22, as a preliminary to the Southern Conference meet the following day.

The Duke coaches have already entered their harriers in the meet, and within the next few days the other three, N. C. State, Wake Forest, and Davidson will probably do likewise.

FOUR BIG FIVE TEAMS TO PLAY THIS WEEK-END

Wake Forest Is Only Eleven That Does Not See Action; Carolina To Meet Davidson.

For the first week-end this season four of the Big Five teams will see action. Wake Forest is the only one that will be inactive. Carolina meets Davidson, while Duke and N. C. State will fight it out in Durham.

Carolina is the only team in the State, to date, that has played any games in the Big Five without a defeat. In the first game the Wake Forest Demon Deacons bowed before the Tar Heel attack. In her next game Carolina defeated N. C. State by a large margin.

Davidson and Carolina each play their third game within the Big Five this week when they meet on Sprunt field. So far Davidson has been beaten by Wake Forest, but has defeated N. C. State.

State's chances for honors in the Big Five were routed by her two defeats, first at the hands of U. N. C. and then by the Davidson Wildcats. The Wolfpack trimmed the Demon Deacons by a small score, but in the following Big Five game lost to Wake Forest's victims, Davidson.

Wake Forest, like State, has one win and two losses to her credit. Defeats by Carolina and N. C. State eliminate her from any first honors in the Big Five.

Duke is the only leading state team that hasn't played a game within the Big Five. This Saturday the Wolfpack and the Blue Devils meet at Duke's new stadium. This will be the first game that Duke will have played which will in any way indicate the relative strength of the Duke team with the other North Carolina aggregations.

Team In Good Shape

The football squad is in fine shape as Coach Chuck Collins begins laying plans for Saturday's invasion of Davidson. Jim Magner, who has averaged 8 yards a clip for every time he has carried the ball, and Red Gilbreath, fighting sophomore center, received slight injuries in the South Carolina game, but both are due to be in shape for Davidson. Pete Wyrick, the veteran quarterback, out with a back injury, promises to be the only man the Tar Heels will be missing as they strive to maintain their great scoring record —33 points a game.

Reserve Ends Deliver

With Holt and Fenner, senior ends on the Tar Heel outfit, both to finish their careers this year, Head Coach Chuck Collins has been looking around no little bit for strength for next year, and the results have been quite encouraging. Red Parsley and Theron Brown have been showing fine at right end, and Herb Nelson has done great work at the left flank post. Parsley and Nelson are juniors, Brown a sophomore. All three should be seen in action when the Tar Heels invade the lair of the Davidson Wildcats on Saturday.

TAR HEEL STARS PLAY NEAR HOME

The Tar Heel football squad draws many of its star performers from the Southern and Western Piedmont section of North Carolina, and hundreds of fans from nearby towns will flock to the Carolina-Davidson game at Davidson on Saturday afternoon to see the "home town boys" play in Tar Heel togs.

Charlotte, Gastonia and Salisbury are all within a short distance of the Wildcat lair, and each town boasts one or more outstanding performers on the North Carolina squad.

Captain Ray Farris, regarded as the South's outstanding guard, heads the Charlotte delegation. Little Johnny Branch, the jack-rabbit broken field man, who will probably run the team most of Saturday's game, hails from Salisbury. Heading the list from Gastonia is Phil Jackson, able veteran halfback, who will probably be backing Branch up at quarterback on Saturday.

Many others of the battling Tar Heels hail from these nearby towns, and quite a number are expected to see service in the Davidson game.

Charlotte contributes also a quintet of sophomore linement, who, while they have bowed to veteran contenders this year, look mighty good on the list of prospects for next season. These are Reid, Johnson, and Morris, ends; Hutchinson, guard; and Alexander, center.

Coming also from Salisbury is Bus Gregory, dependable reserve tackle of a season's experience.

Paul Green Returns To University Following 18 Months European Study

University Professor Arrives Here Tomorrow Following Leave of Absence on Guggenheim Foundation.

After a vacation of a year and a half, Paul Green, playwright and assistant professor of philosophy in the University, on a tour of Europe at the expense of the Guggenheim foundation, will return to Chapel Hill Saturday morning. With his wife and two children he landed in New York Tuesday after a voyage from Liverpool on the S. S. Majestic.

The European trip was made possible by the Guggenheim fellowship awarded to the playwright in 1927. The fellowship stipulated that the recipient be allowed one year in Europe with the possibility of the extension of the time. The additional half year was allowed Mr. Green and with the permission from the University he extended his stay to include a thorough study of the English drama.

Leaving here following the close of school in June 1928, Paul Green, his wife, and two children embarked for Germany. They made their residence in Berlin. From this center, Mr. Green was able to make excursions to various literary shrines and to study German masterpieces of the stage in their original surroundings.

The stay in Berlin was marred by the illness of the entire family during the winter of 1928. Unfortunate to encounter the severest European winter in seventy years, the Greens were ill with influenze. They were never in serious danger however.

From letters written to various friends in Chapel Hill and professors on the faculty, the events of the European trip which made impressions on Mr. Green are apparent. The Volksvhne, or Folk Theatre in Berlin, fascinated the famous American playwright. Here Tolstoian productions were presented to the avid lower classes.

Most fascinating of all is the manner in which the audience received the presentations of Green. Sometimes forty minute soliloquies would receive the rapt attention of the entire audience which sat spellbound by the revelation of the actor's mental thoughts in the monologue. The impracticability of adopting such methods to the American stage were remarked on by Mr. Green.

With the coming of spring and the extension of their stay for another six months, the Greens moved their residence to London, where Mr. Green visited the theatre daily and met the most famous English playwrights. Some of the great dramatists he met while abroad were: Shaw, Barry, Galsworthy, in England, Parandell in France and many other German and French writers.

Speculations as to the work done by Mr. Green on his leave of absence tend from his complete disavowal of all negro plays to no writing at all. From letters received by friends, it seems that most of the dramatist's time was spent in visiting various places, meeting famous men and taking care of his sick family.

Carolina Passes

City editors Sherman Shore and Elbert Denning and reporters Milt Wood and Howard Lee received passes to the Carolina theatre this week for excellent work on the Daily Tar Heel.

Four passes to the theatre are awarded by the editor and managing editor each week through the courtesy of E. C. Smith, manager of the Carolina.

House Addresses Greensboro Club

An address by R. B. House, executive secretary of the University, preceded a tea at which Mrs. William A. Hewitt entertained the Wednesday study club of Greensboro at the Greensboro country club on Wednesday afternoon. The attendance at the meeting was one of the largest in the history of the club; and, in addition to the regular members of the study club, there were also present members of the Wednesday afternoon book club and a number of distinguished guests from in and out of the city.

Mr. House, who is also a former director of the North Carolina Historical Commission and editor of the "History of North Carolina in the World War," had as his subject "Frontiers of Freedom."

In his talk he reminded his audience that although opportunities for adventure and for discovery may be limited in a material sense the intellectual life offers limitless freedom for the development of personality. He urged his hearers to free themselves from the "tyranny of the printed page" and reminded them that there is no one "best book," but that the best book for each individual is that one which best helps him find intellectual vigor, with the tolerance and stability which can come only from intellectual freedom.

GREAT PROGRESS MADE IN ALUMNI LOYALTY DRIVE

Class Agents And Members Of Council Make Reports Here Yesterday; Movement To Be Pushed.

Encouraging reports of the progress of the Alumni Loyalty Fund of the University were presented yesterday at a meeting of class agents, local committee chairmen and members of the Loyalty Fund Council.

Representatives of many classes and many sections of the State were present at the meeting, which was called to report the progress of the appeal now being made among University alumni throughout the State.

Opinion was unanimous among those present that the proposal to place the University in the budgets of the alumni for a small amount each year, the funds so derived to supplement the revenue received annually from the State, was met with a hearty response. It was pointed out that many of the subscriptions already made are larger than had been asked of the individuals making them.

So encouraged was the Loyalty Fund Council with the progress already made that it agreed to push the movement with even greater vigor throughout the year. As a part of this program of continued activity, class agents will communicate with their classmates, urging them to make their contributions soon.

It was also announced that committees have been formed in many alumni centers throughout the State for the purpose of visiting personally all alumni who have not as yet made a contribution to the Loyalty Fund.

Dr. Pittman To Speak Here

Dr. R. L. Pittman, well known surgeon of Fayetteville, N. C., will speak to the Medical Society of the University in Caldwell hall at 7:3 0o'clock on Friday evening. The subject of his address is to be Acute and Chronic Inflammations of Bone. It will be of much interest to all medical and pre-medical students. Everyone is cordially invited to attend.

ACCOUNTANT TO SPEAK

F. J. Charnley, member of the well-known firm of accountants, Scott, Charnley and Company of Charlotte, will lecture to the accounting students on methods of cotton mill accounting this morning from 10:30 to 12:00 o'clock.

SALE LECTURES HERE DECEMBER 2 ON HIS BOOK

Author Of "Tree Named John" To Tour North Carolina During December; Book Published By University Press.

Students who have become tired of listening to the same long-winded professors talk on the same old subjects at the same time on the same days every week will soon be given an opportunity to hear a man of business talk about something entirely new and different.

Did you ever hear of spitting on bait to catch a fish, swallowing a blown-up fish bladder to learn swimming, biting off a butterfly's head to get a new suit of clothes, and eating the brains of the first bird you're killed to become a mighty hunter?

Did you ever know anybody who actually did all these things? John B. Sale, who is to give readings here on December 2, did all these and more besides in his boyhood in Mississippi. His recent book, The Tree Named John, published by the University press, tells of these experiences, and it is from this volume that he will give his readings.

Mr. Sale, a cotton trader by profession, has writen this his first book at the age of 48. He had made the study of southern negro folk-lore his hobby.

Students of the University will be given an opportunity to hear him talk at a reading to be sponsored by the Bull's Head book shop.

Mr. Sale's other appearance in Chapel Hill will be in the Episcopal parish house before the community club. His engagements in the state are as follows: Asheville, November 25; Charlotte, under the auspices of Miss Anne Pierce of the Charlotte public library and Mrs. A. B. Justice, president of the Woman's club, November 26; Winston-Salem, November 29; Durham, at the public library, the Book Lovers' shop, and at the Morehead high school, December 2; Greensboro, under the sponsorship of Miss Nellie Rowe, of the library, and the Book Shop, December 4; and Raleigh and Wilson.

Following the tour of North Carolina it is expected that dates may be arranged for appearances in South Carolina. It is also probable that Mr. Sale will be heard over the chain of the National Broadcasting company at an early date. Information as to the date and the list of stations of the radio presentation are not available at present.

Laurence Stallings Prefers Silent Movies To 'Talkies'

A room full of members of Professor Frederick Koch's playwriting class, other students of the University, and townspeople, heard Laurence Stallings, former newspaperman, author and playwright chat with them for an hour Wednesday morning.

Stalllings told a few interesting behind-scene incidents at Hollywood, used a limited number of swear words for Stallings, and let those who heard him know that he thought little of the "talkie" compared with the old silent movie.

There hasn't been one good love story pictured since the advent of talkies, he said, presaging this remark with the statement that most dramatic high-points of the old movies were sacrificed probably forever when the talkies became the rage.

Stallings sat down while he talked, smoked cigarets, appeared a little nervous, and informally recalled among other things the first motion picture produced.

Later in the hour, the author of "The Big Parade" and "What Price Glory" displayed his quick wit and reason in answering several questions propounded to him by students and members of the faculty.

Many People Pleased With Two Concerts Given By Marine Band

Graduate Reception

The third annual open house of the Graduate club will be given in Smith building from 8:30 to 10:30 tonight. The faculty, students, and residents of Chapel Hill are cordially invited to be present.

Following the reception there will be an informal dance given for the faculty, residents of Chapel Hill, and invited guests. The dancing will continue until 1 o'clock.

ALUMNI REPORT MAY BEAR UPON RECENT SURVEY

Representatives of Athletic Council To Report At Business Meeting of Alumni Here November 27 and 28.

Alumni representatives on the athletic council of the University are expected to make a report soon that may have some bearing on the Carnegie inquiry into collegiate athletics.

The alumni report will be made at the annual business meeting of the General Alumni Association to be held here November 27 and 28, just before the Carolina-Virginia game, according to announcement by Maryon Saunders, alumni secretary.

The three members of the University athletic council elected by alumni are Dr. Foy Roberson, Durham; William A. Blount, Durham, and Benjamin Cone, Greensboro.

The University athletic council is composed of three faculty members appointed by the president of the University, three student members elected by the stuednt body, three alumni representatives, and the director and graduate manager of athletics.

Alumni members are elected by qualified alumni voters, and serve for three-year terms of office in a rotating system. Dr. Foy Roberson is the alumni representative whose term of office expires this year.

Engineers' Airship Nearing Completion

The airplane recently received from the War Department by the department of mechanical engineering, for use in instruction in the aeronautical courses, is being assembled in the mechanical engineering laboratory in the basement of Phillips hall by seniors and graduate students who are taking the course in aerodynamics.

Wednesday afternoon the tail controll surfaces and one wing were attached to the fuselage. N. P. Bailey, instructor in aeronautics, who is directing the assembly of the plane, said that the work was progressing slowly because the many pieces had to be fitted by trial.

It is expected that the plane will be completely assembled after Saturday morning when the group will work again.

Mr. Bailey stated yesterday that any one interested in viewing the plane is invited to inspect it in the mechanical engineering laboratory in Phillips hall.

Presbyterian Tea

Young people are invited to attend the social tea at 8 o'clock this evening in the social rooms of the Presbyterian church.

Musicians Led By Captain Branson, Who Has Been With Band Since He Was Seventeen Years Old.

A large crowd attended each of the excellent concerts given by the United States Marine band here yesterday afternoon and night. The afternoon program, being given in Kenan stadium, was exceedingly fine, while the night program in the Tin Can was just as good. All who attended either of the concerts thoroughly appreciated the high-class music that was played.

The feature of the afternoon program was several fine selections. The program was, with the exception of a great many added encore numbers, as follows:

Overture, "The Flying Dutchman," Richard Wagner.

Richard Wagner conceived this piece while dreaming of the wild Norwegian coast, beaten about with storms and listening to the weird tales of mariners as they confided to him the legend common in one form or other to seafaring folk in all parts of the world.

Intermezzo, "Al Fresco," Victor Herbert; Solo for Cornet, "The Premier" played by Arthur Witcomb), Edward Llewellyn; Characteristic March, "Parade of the Gendarmes," Matthew Lake; Suite, "Neapolitan Scenes," Jules Massenet; "Marche Heroique," Camille Saint-Saens.

This is a composition which might in a sense be termed a tone poem. It is dedicated to a friend who fell in battle, though there is nothing in it that resembles a funeral march. One can imagine the tramping of a battalion of soldiers eager to repair past defeats and march on to victory.

Solo for Xylophone, "Grand Tarantelle" (played by Wilbur D. Kieffer), Stephen Heller; Grand Valse Brillante, Francois Chopin; Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2, Franz Liszt.

By taking the rhythms, melodies and harmonies of the fiery and impetuous people of the soil of Hungary, and weaving them into the form we now recognize as his well-known rhapsodies, the pianist - composer has achieved results that are stupendous and majestic.

"The Star-Spangled Banner" (the United States Marine band always closes its program with the national anthem).

The evening program, which was given in the Tin Can at 8:30, consisted of the following pieces:

Overture, "Carneval," Antonin Dvorak; Nocturne, "Dreams of Love," Franz Liszt; Solo for Cornet, "Bride of the Waves" (played by J. P. White), Herbert Clarke; Grand Scenes from "Andrea Chenier," Umberto Gordiano.

This opera was first produced at the La Scala Theatre, Milan, Italy, in March, 1896. The first American performance was given at the Academy of Music, New York, in November of the same year.

Rhapsodic dance, "Bamboula," Samuel Coleridge Taylor; Solo for Trombone, "Ecstasy of Spring," Robert E. Clark; "Pasquinade," Louis Moreau Gottschalk; Carneval in Paris, Johan Severin Svendsen; "Star-Spangled Banner.

There are very few institutions in this country that are

Tar Heel Topics

The coeds have gone in for athletics; they held a meeting yesterday afternoon and made plans for a big year in an athletic way. 'Tis said that several members of the varsity wrestling team are looking to their laurels.

From the Five Years Ago column in the South's best—and worst—college daily we learn that the University had an epidemic of hiccoughs. Reckon Orange county corn hasn't become very much worse in the past five years, after all.

A South Carolina jury drank 40 gallons of homebrew the other day. Since the spirits constituted the evidence in the prohibition violation case which they were trying, the defendant was released. We see where jury duty subpoena servers will have easier jobs in the future.

The Species Bummus Cigarettae

Collegians are adept at the art of bumming, i. e., securing goods or services without returning the equivalent of value received. Particularly are many of them proficient in obtaining cigarettes and tobacco from their fellows who provide themselves with a sufficient supply of these commodities.

The habitual cigarette bummer is an abomination unto the sight of man. Marvelous are the artifices that he employs to satisfy his craving for the slender pellets without expending cash money, although he be plenteously supplied with the wherewithal to purchase them. Even though he realizes perfectly that his friends are wearied by his continual bumming, their likes or dislikes can never be allowed to interfere with his favorite pastime. Rather would he alienate his dearest friend, or perhaps his best girl, than refrain from bumming their cigarettes.

All known brands, and a few unknown, are acceptable to the bumming fiend. He would pry the last cubeb from the clutching fingers of a man dying of catarrh. Not only would he walk a mile for a fag, but he would walk two miles—if it were free. They all satisfy him. The only requisite is that they be without cost as far as his own bankroll is concerned.

Considerations of pride do not enter into the thoughts of a cigarette bummer on the warpath. Cigarettes he will have, and that without expense, though he must debase himself beyond all human understanding. When the pack is once within his clutches it is just too bad. Surreptitiously he will appropriate a few extra cigarettes for good luck, and if perchance the attention of the pack's owner be diverted, there is a darn good chance that never again will that particular pack repose in the pocket of its purchaser.

Since murder is not legal in this state, the best thing that could be done with the species bummus cigarettae would be to secure jobs for all specimens of the genus in a single gigantic powder factory, leave a number of easily ignited high explosives lying around loose, give the employes a plentiful supply of cigarettes and a few car loads of matches, none of them of the safety variety. Then they would at least die happy.

More Friendships With Less "Booting"

We hold no brief for the habitual "booter" who "boots" for grades and grades alone; like the maproity of students here we view this practice with great disfavor. But we can see no harm that will result from a closer personal contact between students and faculty.

Any student who takes the initiative in forming friendships by chatting with the instructor after class, or calling on him in his home, or engaging in any sport with him, inevitably earns the name of a "booter." Any effort one may make toward sincere friendship is balked by the ridicule and derision heaped upon it by fellow students.

The most valuable and richest experiences in college life may easily result from friendships formed with the professors. A student can learn infinitely more from a friendly chat before the fireside or in a conversation casually and easily conducted while walking through the woods than he will ever get from a dry lecture he hears in the classroom while his mind wanders to thoughts of pleasure. Our keenest disappointment in college life has been the lack of a genuine sincere, friendship between professors and students.

Many of the teachers are so busily engaged with outside work that they have no time for student friendships. But many exhibit a sympathetic attitude and would welcome student friendships, if "booting" were not viewed with such disfavor by the students.

College Loyalty

Without a doubt loyal students, professors, and alumni are an asset to any college or university. Indeed, no institution could exist for long without loyal supporters both within and without. Of the various types of loyalty that can be manifested toward one's alma mater the writer feels that the rah, rah type which is habitually demonstrated at football games and other contests which arouse human emotions by thrilling performances of the physical man is accorded a relatively greater influence than it really exercises. People are generally prone to think that the students and alumni who yell the loudest at football games are the most loyal supporters of the University. Without attempting to minimize the significance of the loud, emotional type of loyalty demonstrations this editorial seeks to call attention to other and more nearly secluded phases of college loyalty.

Scattered throughout the state of North Carolina, the South, and the nation are numerous alumni of this institution who are deeply interested in its work and expansion. The major portion of these seldom, if ever, get an opportunity to attend any of the athletic performances in which their alma mater is a participant. Yet these same persons turn with eagerness to the sports pages of their morning papers to ascertain the outcome of such contests. In the case of victory their delight is equally as great as that experienced by any member of the student body. If Carolina loses they share also in the disappointment. It is this deep and profound interest in the activities of the University of North Carolina that accounts for its steady and unthwarted development.

Although the people of the state continually complain about being overtaxed, officials of the University often find that state appropriations are not adequate to the financial needs of the institution. Consequently, and in order to supplement these funds, alumni donations are sought. Some respond readily; others ignore the call as though uninterested. In this latter category are included numerous sons of Old Carolina who attend nearly all of the big football games and who yell with startling earnestness. On the other hand, many alumni who never get an opportunity to see the Tar Heel team on the gridiron respond with fat checks. Which, we ask you, is the more valuable type of loyalty?

Although we have no intention of condemning any kind of loyallty and although we are convinced that any kind is better than none at all, we do believe that the real interest and concern which the emotional type of loyalty manifests is somewhat overemphasized in the case of this and other American Universities.

Readers' Opinions

A CALL FOR DORMITORY REFORM

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Where but at the University of North Carolina can one find such vandalism and rowdyism as exists in the domitories? And existing in a totally unchecked state?

The Building department is no doubt indirectly responsible for much of the damage prevalent because it allows all sorts of destruction in the rooms without in any way holding the occupants responsible. This explains the almost wretched state of some of the rooms in the newer buildings. Besides this, they are none too well taken care of.

It would seem that something could easily be done to stop the disgraceful conditions now existing. There is no excuse for shrieking and yelling and running in the halls or in the rooms, whether it be in the afternoon or at midnight. (It is usually at midnight, though.) And the burning of papers in the rooms in certainly uncalled for (although a little sweeping would help).

And then the victrolas that are played between 11 and 1 o'clock at night are very annoying to say the least, as are the automobilists who stand under the windows yelling for no good reasons.

I don't know whether all this is due to the fact that the University in its frantic democracy is making itself the refuge for the feeble-minded or not. But the matter surely needs some investigation. And if the Student Council turned its attention to it, doubtless some of these conditions could be remedies, and dormitory rooms made a bit more livable. At present, the dormitory presidents and councilmen do nothing to improve conditions.

ESSE QUAM VIDERI

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

A lad inquisitive, I looked them over—
My father's books—and found on every cover
Esse Quam Videri he had written there,
And often at the strange words I would stare
All wondering what they meant, until one day
I asked their meaning. With a kindling look
He said, "My son, I've written in each book
The motto of the much beloved state
Where I was born—'I'd rather Be than Seem,'
If you adopt it, be you small or great
You shall attain your own best self esteem.
When Alabama called me years ago
North Carolina held my heart, and so
All I had left was memory and pride
For that far land where my dear parents died."
Now I, that lad, grown old have lived to see
The greatness that would not Seem but would Be.

Scientific Society Hears Two Speakers

At the last meeting of the Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society, held Tuesday evening in Phillips hall, papers were presented by E. K. Plyler, of the physics department, and J. F. Dashiel, of the psychology department.

Mr. Plyler presented a paper and Mr. Dashiel talked on "Some Psychological Effects of Insulin."

In his paper Mr. Plyler gave the results of a series of experiments in which the molecular construction of certain materials was investigated through the use of infra-red rays. The results of these experiments tend to show that in certain cases the connection between atoms within molecules is not the commonly accepted idea.

The specific example demonstrated in this paper showed that in the infra-red spectrum the typical nitrate band of inorganic compounds is not present in certain organic nitrates. Instead of the nitrate band there appears the typical band of the organic alcohol.

This investigation shows that in some cases the nitrate group representing organic compounds is not bonded to the other parts of the molecule in the same way that it is bonded in inorganic compounds.

Mr. Dashiel presented in his paper the results of a series of tests to determine the psychological effects of insulin. The conclusion drawn from the results of the tests was that either an over or an under normal amount of sugar in the blood tended to reduce the rating of subject in certain psychological tests.

The tests on which Mr. Dashiel based his paper were made upon a diebetic who consented to undergo the tests both with an under dose and an over dose of insulin.

This work of Mr. Dashiel was the first series psychological tests to have been given to a diabetic in several years.

Freshmen Asked To Protect Grass Here

This morning in chapel R. B. House presented in a rather unique manner a plea to the freshmen to help preserve the beauty of the University campus. Without bold assertions, Mr. House tactfully impressed his hearers with the importance of avoiding needless injuries to grass and shrubbery which are likely to injure seriously the appearance of the campus.

Beginning Mr. House gave some simple and apparent facts regarding the care and development of the campus. The land promontory upon which Chapel Hill is situated is composed chiefly of sandstone, and consequently grass is not well adapted to the soil. Under no conditions will grass grow here if walked upon or, which is worse, if students play football upon it. Mr. House emphasized also the fact that shrubs are certain to sustain injuries from repeated kicking and blows from footballs. Paths are intended for use in walking over the campus, as they have been made for that express purpose, he said.

These facts are plainly obvious, Mr. House admitted. "Nevertheless, they seem to be the points most often overlooked. Acknowledging the desirability of maintaining a beautiful campus, one should do nothing contrary or detrimental to this intention."

He stated that in the future he expected freshmen to do everything possible toward keeping the regulations governing the care of the campus.

AT THE CAROLINA TODAY

Her third moving picture was the most interesting one for Claudette Colbert, slender beauty of the Broadway stage, who will be seen and heard in the leading feminine role in "The Lady Lies" at the Carolina theatre today.

All of her pictures have been made in the East. Her first picture was "Love O'Mike," filmed while she was busy every night and two afternoons a week on Broadway in her stage hit, "The Barker." It was a "tough" assignment, but she put all her energy into it and kept both jobs running smoothly.

Her next picture was Paramount's all-talking melodrama, "The Hole in the Wall," which was filmed while she was working on the stage as star of "Tin Pan Alley." It meant a lot of earnest work. At the finish she was ready for a long vacation, but she didn't get one.

She plunged into the task of leading woman in Eugene O'Neill's Theatre Guild play, "Dynamo," incidentally winning laurels by her performance. She didn't essay any film work during the run of "Dynamo."

When the play closed she was back at work again at the Paramount Long Island studios. The new opus was "The Lady Lies." This time she was working in a movie without any contemporary stage obligations. It was a lot of fun—it was the first time she had a chance to get a real "kick" out of her film work. Here was interesting work, uninterrupted by legitimate stage duties. She liked it a lot, and Director Hobart Henley said afterward that the best performance of her career is the characterization of Joyce Roamer in this great all-talking romance-drama.

BASKETBALL TO HOLD SPOTLIGHT IN A FEW WEEKS

Ashmore Has Three Veterans For Nucleus of 1930 Team; Needs Two New Forwards.

Some three or four weeks from now and basketball will step to the forefront as the major sport of interest upon the campus and with its approach will arise the speculation as to whether the team can retain its place among the leaders of the Southern Conference. In viewing the losses from last year's team due to graduation, it may be safely said that Coach Jim Ashmore has work on his hands.

Rufus Hackney, Henry Satterfield, George Cathey, and Red Price are all missing this year, and as these men formed the nucleus of the 1929 team, it may be easily understood why Coach Ashmore is not promising the 1930 Southern Conference crown to Tar Heel followers. However, in the face of such facts, things might look worse; and even though the team this year may not gain the premier position in the south, it will undobutedly forge to a place among the Conference leaders.

Three letter men return to form the defensive foundation for the team this year, Harper, Marpet and Brown. Harper is a center, while the other two men held down the guard positions last winter. Ashmore's main task is going to be that of finding some one capable of stepping into the berths left bare by Satterfield and and Hackney. To do that he will have the following material to work on; some of these men worked out as guards last year but may be changed into forward materal in the face of this necessity: Neiman, Race Farleigh, Cleland, Slater, Craig, Wily, Choate, Gordan Gray, Fenner, Williams and Fysal. Damerson showed up pretty well in his first appearance last year and may develop into a strong pivot man. From the freshman team have come up such men as Harper, Reid and Alexander; what these men hold of worth to the team only big time action will show.

A new system will be inaugurated ths year in selecting captains. The old method of electing a full season captain will not be employed; instead, before each game, the coach will appoint a captain for that particular game. This experiment will be witnessed with interest since so much discussion has been going on recently in regard to captain control over coach control.

This boy made the All-University tag football team last year, and should have little trouble retaining his position. He is about the best passer in either league.

TENNIS MATCH TO BE PLAYED TODAY

Ed Yoemans Will Meet Bryan Grant Of Atlanta On Varsity Courts At 3 O'clock.

Interest in tennis is rapidly gaining momentum upon the Carolina campus. Even at this early date the teams that will represent North Carolina next spring on the courts are beginning to take form; new men are being uncovered, and old men are being further developed; all in favor of preventing the Tar Heel racqueteers from falling from their present position among the leaders of the Southern tennis teams.

This afternoon almost unheralded will be played off what may be one of the keenest matches that will be seen in this state this year. This match will be in the form of the semi-finals of the University tournament which is played off this month. Yoemans, rated No. 1 man on the team this year, has reached this stage in the tournament undefeated and will meet Byran Grant of Atlanta, Southern Amateur Champion. The match will be played on the varsity courts at three o'clock, The winner of this contest will engage Wilmer Hines, Southern Junior Champion, next Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock in the finals.

The team this year will suffer greatly from losses due to graduation. At this date only three men have definitely sewed up places on the team; their tentative rating is as follows: Yoemans, No. 1, Graham, No. 2, and manager, Merritt, No. 3, captain. The following men are out for berths on the teams and have as yet been more or less impressive: Palmore, Bryan, Baggs, Kendall, Rhett, Dig Wardlaw, Fred Wardlaw, Winecoff, Waterhouse, Dressler, Draper. After Christmas it is possible that Phil Lisken, rated No. 2 on the yearling team last year, may return; also it is possible that Shapiro, No. 1 on last year's varsity may be back. The return of these two men would greatly strengthen the 1930 sextette.

A number of freshmen this year are showing up rather well and may possibly develop into valuable material fo rthe varsity next year. Among this grour are: Wright, Barnett, Abels, Grant and Hines.

HILLIANS BATTLE HENDERSON TODAY

The Chapel Hill football team, after four games away from the home field, play Henderson high school on Emerson field this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

The Henderson team averages around 160 pounds, and this extra weight promises the Hillians a hard fight.

Chapel Hill, after their defeat in the hands of Roxboro last week, are determined to chalk the Henderson game on the credit side of the ledger.

Players In Good Shape As They Work For Last Time Before Cat Game

Coaches Give Team Plenty To Do But Holds Off Scrimmage; Three-day Rest for Varsity.

PLENTY OF PEP

Jam full of pep after a three-day holiday, the Tar Heel veterans joined with the reserves in a real afternoon's work yesterday in preparation for the Davidson invasion on Saturday.

It was another scrimmage-less afternoon, but far from a workless one. Four full elevens got a look-in on Davidson plays run in dummy scrimmage.

The backs brushed up on their passing in a long drill.

The linemen drove the bucking machines all around the lot developing push and drive.

The backs drilled on sidesteps, hopping, dodging, bucking and other calisthenics designed to render flying bodies more elusive.

The squad was in good shape and full of pep after the unprecedented layoff.

Jim Magner was about the only veteran not participating. It is doubtful whether Magner will be in shape Saturday.

Phil Jackson ran in his place at left half. Pete Wyrick called signals to this backfield with Rip Slusser at right half and Henry House at fullback.

The starting backfield of Johnny Branch, quarter; Jimmy Ward and Strud Nash, halves, and Spaulding, fullback, was intact.

A third backfield showed Jackson, quarter; Jimmy Maus and Chuck Erickson, halfbacks, and Pap Harden, fullback.

The first string line is in good shape all around and looks good to start Saturday, with Holt and Fenner, ends; Koenig and Adkins, tackles; Captain Farris and Fysal, guards, and Lipscomb, center.

The second string line has been showing well also. If it got the call, it would mean Nelson, Parsley and Brown, ends; Dortch and Harper, tackles; McIver, Crew and Hudson, guards, and Gilbreath, center.

The squad will take a light workout this afternoon at 1:30, and will leave by train for Charlotte at 4 o'clock. The team will stay at the Hotel Charlotte Friday night and got to Davidson early Saturday morning.

Golf Notice

All students—both freshmen and varsity men—who are interested in trying out for the golf team are requested to meet at the Emerson stadium today during chapel period. Plans for a match with the Virginia team Thanksgiving day are to be discussed.

STARTING TEAM IS UNCERTAIN

With only a last light workout to go, the whole squad in fairly good shape, and the transportation reservations calling for places for a squad of 50, Tar Heel followers were busy speculating yesterday on the probable lineup Coach Collins will hurl against Davidson on Richardson field Saturday.

The second-string line showed almost as well against South Carolina as the veterans.

Nelson and Parsley, ends, showed up especially well. Dortch and Thompson, tackles, looked good; and the center trio of Crew and Hudson, guards, and Gilbreath, center, proved as impenetrable for the Gamecock backs as the veteran center trio.

It's a known fact that Coach Collins is trying to get his men in tip-top shape, to fill the hard engagements, not only with Davidson, but also with Virginia and Duke. He gave them three days of rest this week for that purpose.

But will he risk starting his second string line against the Cats when state title hopes are hanging in the balance?

That's the question. The first team line is in good shape after a week of rest and comparatively light work, and, despite prevalent gossip, seems more likely to get the call.

That would mean Holt and Fenner, ends; Koenig and Adkins, tackles; Captain Farris and Fysal, guards, and Lipscomb center.

Wyrick and Magner, veteran quarter and left half, are in shape to be used if necessary, but Coach Collins will probably save these boys unless things come to the worst.

It seems likely that the sophomore Johnny–Branch will start at quarter, calling signals to a veteran trio of Ward and Nash, halves, and Spaulding, full.

Young Favored In Conference Meet

Bob Young, captain of the Georgia harriers this year, is expected to be the individual star in the Southern Conference cross country meet to be held here Saturday, November 23. Young was the winner of this meet last year when he established a new record for the Atlanta course.

Young has, up to this time, created an enviable reputation in track and cross country circles. In 1927 he finished fifth in the Southern Conference meet, coming in behind Elliott, Henderson, Fisher and Pritchett of Carolina. Young was second to Woodward of Duke in the one mile run in the Conference track meet last year, and came in fifth in the national collegiate championship meet in Chicago in this event. In his first appearance here last year he won both the mile and the two-mile runs in the Intercollegiate indoor meet held at the Tin Can.

101 Yards For Score

Credit for making the longest scoring run recorded so far this season in college football is given Ted Franz, Ashland, Ky., halfback of Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, according to statistics. He caught the ball on the kickoff behind his own goal line and ran 101 yards for a tuchdown against Heidleberg.

MANY REGISTER FOR CAKE RACE

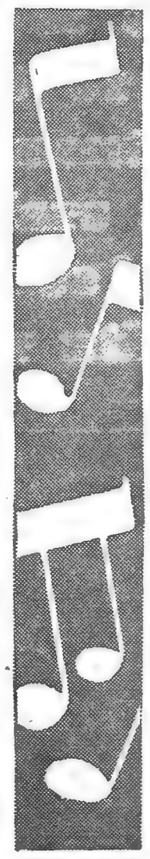
Enrollment For Annual Event Closed Yesterday; Unusual Interest Shown.

After a year's lapse, the old custom of "run and get a cake" is to be revived.

The sixth annual cake race is carded for Friday afternoon, November 22, and from all indications a great throng will race over the two-mile course for the treasured prizes at journey's end.

Ninety-seven men are already registered and going through the formalities of training required for participation by the University track coaches, who are assisting the intramural athletics department in staging the event.

The prize list reads like a mail order house catalog. Three big cakes are to go to the organizations qualifying the most men, and 10 more to the organizations finishing the most men.



There will be medals for the first ten men, and after that a heterogenuous assortment of from 50 to 75 individual prizes that is doped to include articles of clothing, athletic equipment, merchandise, food, or what have you.

The cake race, held every year but last year since 1923, is an ancient classic and has developed fine varsity runners.

Harry Thach, 1925 winner, became a 4:30 miler. Galen Elliott, who won in 1925, later captained the Tar Heel harriers and lowered the Southern Conference mile mark to 4:21.2.

Minor Barkley, winner in 1926, is the present Tar Heel cross-country captain and a fine miler. Red Fisher, who won in 1927, placed third in the Southern Conference cross country championship run the same year, his first year to go out for varsity competition.

Bull's Head Book Shop Serves As New Lost And Found Bureau

(By Casual Observer)

A badly flustered graduate student entered the Bull's Head Book Shop Monday afternoon with her parasol held at a menacing angle. Her hat was somewhat awry and from outward appearances she was certainly very agitated.

"Where's my clothes brush?" she demanded of the shopkeeper.

The keeper carefully brought his feet down from their private resting place at the side of the desk and put them on the floor. "Your clothes brush," he mused. "why really I couldn't very well be expected—"

"I'm sure it's in here and I must have it. Where is it?" The demand was even more imperative than before and the shopkeeper grasped a nearby paper cutter which he thought would serve as a means of defense in a case of necessity. The student's face was flushed because the keeper was taking no chances.

"Really I haven't seen it," he protested. "We seldom have clothes brushes turned in here, although there are several pencils and an old hat that were left here this summer. You see, I could hardly be expected to have clothes brushes." His face brightened, "But I tell you what I'll do; if anyone brings your clothes brush here I will certainly save it for you."

His face fell again when he found that the student wanted no history of English literature or of Renaissance plays or bilingual text with which to prepare herself for the coming language examinations for doctoral candidates. "I'm sure it's in here," she said, "and I want it now."

If it may be said that way, the shopkeeper sensed the seriousness of the situation. He rose and sidled toward a row of seats where he had noticed said student sitting during the morning. "Possibly," he opinioned, forcing an academic smile, "maybe, it is over here."

There was great commotion. No, not there. Here? No. He moved over a bench. Sure enough! he thought as he tried to remember an approperate rhyme in "Alice in Wonderland" or "Through the Looking Glass," the brush was there! As he handed over the brush, he felt as if he were handling a flamingo croquet mallet or trying to stand on a porcupine rolled up like a croquet ball.

The graduate student forced an academic smile. "Ah, ha," she actually laughed, and blushed, "I—I suppose I'll lose my, ah, head next." He laughed and almost said, "OH, NO, nothing like that, please."

Although the shopkeeper at the Bull's Head makes no habit of acting as a lost-and-found bureau and thinking that the Y. M. C. A., for instance is a mere efficient and well-equiped organization for carrying out duty, he does now and then have articles given to him to be returned to their owners. "Yes," he said yesterday afternoon flicking an ash from his cigarette in a careless manner, "I'm glad to be of service in reuniting owners and their lost articles, even down to clothes brushes, note books, and literary translations."

ADVISES WOOLLEN TO WATCH MONEY

State Manager Of Farms Says The University Should Be Beneficiary Of $100,000.

"Watch the pot, Charlie," is the advice Charles H. Ross, State manager of farms gives his friend, Charles T. Woollen, efficient watchdog of the University's treasury.

The University should be the beneficiary of approximately $100,000 from the half million dollars to be distributed by receivers to members of the defunct Tri-State Tobacco Growers' Co-operative Association, Mr. Ross asserts.

His letter follows:

"Not long ago some of your divisional research fellowships made an autopsy of the Tri-State Tobacco Growers' Association. I don't recall their findings but you look up a copy for we are going to need all the help we can get.

"The receivers announced in yesterday's News and Observer that the debts are all paid and plenty of tobacco left on hand. Just as soon as the court costs are paid and the receivers and special masters are settled with and Judge Meekins decrees a settlement with Col. Person, Col. Beaufort, and Mr. Glidewell, then here is where you come in.

"The receivers will try to pay out a half million dollars or so to ninety-six thousand deserving members, their heirs and assigns. Much of this cannot be delivered and through the channel of the clerk of the several courts and in keeping with the law of the state, probably $100,000 could find its way into the treasury of the University."

Rankin Announces Schedule For High School Title Race

Interest in the high school title races will reach its highest point this week-end as the leading teams clash in both class A and class B circuits. Wilmington, Goldsboro and Raleigh lead in the east.

The class A game between Wilmington and Goldsboro will determine in a large measure just how Raleigh will fare in case it triumphs over Durham.

In Class B. competition Ayden plays Smithfield Friday in the semi-final game of the East with Oxford, the other survivor, drawing a bye. The winner of the Smithfield-Ayden tilt will face Oxford next week for the Eastern title. The Western survivors in Blass B series and the games this week are Concord at Forest City on Thursday and Reidsville against Mount Airy at Winston-Salem on Saturday.

STUDENTS STATE INSTITUTIONS TO STUDY PROBLEMS

Department of Conservation To Be Assisted by Collegians; Harrelson Is Director.

A plan designed to bring to the service of the State and benefit of a tremendous volume of scientific research and at the same time to afford graduate students at the various institutions of higher learning in North Carolina practical problems on which to work has been made by Col. J. W. Harrelson, director of the Department of Conservation and Development, says a statement from the department today.

Director Harrelson explained that he has in mind a close cooperation between the Department of Conservation and Development and universities and colleges of North Carolina, especially the graduate schools and the research departments.

It is his idea to ask the officials of these institutions to assign practical subjects to students doing research work along the lines that are particularly needed in the State, especially in fields where study is needed to solve definit problems.

Although these institutions have lent valuable assistance to the Conservation Department in the past through the work of faculty members, graduate and undergraduate students, it is the plan of the director to map out a schedule of studies needed immediately and seek to have them undertaken as earlly as possible.

The first study under the new plan, it was indicated, will be with the oyster under the direction of the departments biology and zoology of Duke University. A field inspection as the first step will be made of the oyster grounds of the State beginning December 13. Research is also badly needed in carrying out the department's program of conservation of inland fisheries, the director pointed out.

Director Harrelson expressed a belief that students can get considerable benefit from working on practical research problems and that the State can profit materially therefrom.

The text of this book, which is to be published by D. C. Heath and Company, is entitled Sept Contes de La Vielle France. It is a collection of stories, adapted from the "Lais" of Marie de France, which have been put into simple, modern French, suitable for reading by beginners.

Mr. Green spent the greater part of the present week in renewing old friendships in New York and taking care of odds and ends of his business affairs. The opinion was expressed that he might be making arrangements for a production of one or more of his dramas written on his trip.

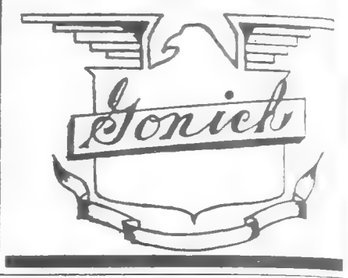
as rich in history, tradition and sentiment as this famous United States Marine band. The band really dates back to a small fife and drum corps which existed as early as 1775, but not until 1801 was the band officially organized. During all its 128 years of existence the band has had but nine leaders—Tyre, Pons, Scala, Fries, Schneider, Sousa, Fanciulli, and Santelmann. Santelmann, after leading the band for 29 years, turned the leadership over to his successor, Captain Taylor Branson, on April 27, 1927. Captain Benson, who was here with the band yesterday, enlisted in the band when he was only 17 years old and has taken an active part in the band since that time.

Until the fall of 1911 it was only at intervals of from ten to twenty years that the band had been heard outside of Washington. But one hot summer afternoon while congress was in session, the band was giving one of its famous concerts at the east front of the Capitol. Among the group of senators who had stopped as usual to listen to the music was the late Senator "Bob" Taylor of Tennessee. Turning to his southern colleagues he said, "Boys, I want my people down in Tennessee to hear that band and I know you would like to have your home folks hear them, too. Come and join me in a request to President Taft to give the band permission to go." The result was that permission was gladly given and the enthusiasm with which the band was received through Dixie-land has resulted in similar permission being granted for annual concert tours ever since.

Before the band was allowed to leave Washington it had to receive the permission of President Hoover, who as all other presidents had done, took the position that such a tour would afford much pleasure to those citizens who do not have the privilege of hearing the band in Washington; and that the visits of the band not only tend to promote patriotic pride, but their concerts are of educational value.



According to H. F. Comer, general secretary of the Y, "the University and Chapel Hill were exceedingly fortunate in being among the few privileged places to hear this great band."

Important Meeting Tar Heel Reporters Sunday

Changes in Assignments Will Be Made at Regular Meeting of Staff; Carolina Theatre Passes To Be Awarded.

An important meeting of the Tar Heel reportorial staff will be held Sunday evening at seven o'clock in the Tar Heel offices in the basement of Alumni building. All reporters, unless previously excused by the editor or managing editor, must attend this meeting as changes in beats will be made.

The Tar Heel has been holding regular meetings every Sunday evening at which time announcements were made and new men added to the staff. It has been the policy of the Tar Heel to replace men who missed as many as three meetings without excuses from the editor or managing editor.

The meeting Sunday evening will be the last one this quarter at which new men will be added to the staff. Several vacancies have been created by failure of men to cover beats and new beats have been added. About six new men will be added to the staff at this meeting.

Through the courtesy of E. C. Smith, manager of the Carolina theatre, four passes have been issued to the reporters doing the best work each week. In addition to the passes charms are to be awarded at the end of each year to the reporters doing consistently good work throughout the year.

At the meeting Sunday night the week's passes will be awarded to reporters and a new system of assignments will be inaugurated. All members of the staff must attend this meeting.

Henderson Conducts Mathematical Club

One of the most interesting and liveliest of all the clubs on the campus is the matehmatical seminar conducted by Dr. Archibald Henderson. The membership of this club is made up of the mathematical staff, fellows in math, graduate students in math, and advanced students in math.

Once during the week some of the members present the results of their research, including thesis written for advanced degrees. A large percentage of the published works of the club members is originally presented to the seminar.

On October 30 A. W. Hobbs talked to the club on the study of Vietas transformation. He finished his discussion on November 6, and was followed by Dr. Henderson who also talked again on the 13th of November.

Another recent lecture was presented by Dr. Max Mason, former president of the University of Chicago.

SPECIAL THANKSGIVING EVE SHOW AT CAROLINA

A special midnight show will be given by Manager Carrington Smith of the Carolina Theatre on Thanksgiving eve. The picture is "Untamed," starring one of the most popular actresses of the current cinema, Joan Crawford.

No advance in price is announced for this special performance, the admission being 40 cents, as for all regular shows. The doors will open promptly at midnight.

ENGLAND ON 1939 DEBATE SCHEDULE

In the light of recent communications from New York, the debate council announces that the proposed Carolina-British debates in England this spring will not take place sooner than 1939.

Hereafter only one American team will be sent to England annually. Eight applicants are already on the list. The secretary of the American Student Federation has been asked to place the University of North Carolina on the list for 1939 and as a substitute for any of the eight teams which might not be able to make the trip at the assigned time.

SLADE DISCUSSES ENGINEER'S WORK AT CAIN SOCIETY

At the meeting of the William Cain student chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers held Thursday evening in Phillips hall, J. J. Slade, member of the school of engineering faculty, spoke of his experiences in engineering work in South America and presented the work of the independent engineer in that part of the world.

In addition to the talk by Mr. Slade, there was a showing of a one-reel moving picture, "Building New York's Subway."

In his talk Mr. Slade told of his work with a South American transportation company as locating engineer for railroad lines and with a lumber company as director of operations in making a timber stand available for cutting.

Mr. Slade presented the work and life of the independent engineer in South America as contrasted with that of an engineer connected with a large corporation as presented by Mr. Carter of the International Telephone and Telegraph Company, who spoke at an earlier meeting on his experiences with his company in South America.

The moving picture showed construction of the new Eighth avenue subway line of New York City. The views showed the methods used in making the excavations, removing the material, shoring up the adjoining buildings, planking over the streets, and in finishing the actual tunnel.

The film was made available to the society through the courtesy of the E. I. duPone de Nemours & Co. of Wilmington, Del.

Mrs. Lear Entertains

Mrs. John E. Lear entertained last Wednesday afternoon from four to six o'clock in honor of Mrs. George F. Bason and Mrs. N. P. Bailey, who have recently moved to Chapel Hill. Mr. Bason is head of the department of engineering, and Mr. Bailey is instructor of aeronautics and machine design at the University.

There were approximately one hundred and fifty guests present at the reception. An effective color scheme of orange and green was carried out, the flowers, candles, and candle holders all blending in with the general design of the decorations.

It is better to curse your luck than never to have any.

Grid Gaph Report

A Grid Graph play-by-play account of the Davidson-North Carolina football game will be given this afternoon at 2:30 in the Pickwick Theatre. Radio reports of other games will be given at the same time. Admission charge will be twenty-five cents.

POLICEMEN PLAN REAL PROFESSION

School for Policemen Last Summer First Step in Improving Work.

(By E. J. Woodhouse)

The North Carolina Association of Chiefs of Police, at its fourth annual convention in the fall of 1928, passed a resolution requesting the University to cooperate with the association in "planning and carrying on the most effective possible training course for chiefs and other members of police departments to the end that the police departments of this state may be greatly improved and their value to the public and their rewards to their members proportionately increased." This project for a police school had been informally and unofficially discussed previously and on several occasions by Association President Walter F. Doby, chief of police of Durham; Past President J. Winder Bryan, chief of police of Raleigh, and various members of the University faculty and executive staff.

This association, open to all paid police officers in the state above the rank of patrolman, has held five notable conventions with unusual addresses and discussions by the governor and other state officers, by various chiefs of police of North Carolina and neighboring states; has been instrumental in securing the enactment of the North Carolina finger print law, of the act to require the drivers of all vehicles to display lights when on public highways at night, of the act making it a felony for any person to use a smoke screen attachment on an automobile, of the act requiring poolrooms or clubs to secure permits from the local city government before state charters or permits will be granted them, of the act making it a crime to impersonate an officer of the law; and has otherwise shown remarkable vigor and strength for an association of busy men. The University was very glad to cooperate with the association by undertaking some form of instruction for present and prospective members of police departments, and the extension division at once entered upon plans for this purpose.

It was decided, in consultation with the executive committee of the association, to hold a ten-day school of police practice and administration at the University August 14-24, 1929, and to plan then and thereafter, on the basis of the experience gained, for in-

DR. HENDERSON RECEIVES WILD GOOSE AS GIFT

Head of Math Department Gets Present But Is Unable to Identify Donor.

In an interview with a Tar Heel reporter yesterday Dr. Archibald Henderson told of receiving a wild goose recently. As Dr. Henderson was unable to identify the donor he gave the following statement to the reporter:

"Recently some one, whose name has never reached me, delivered at my door a magnificent wild goose which had been shot only a short time before. The goose was left "for Dr. Henderson," but the name of the donor reached me in such an evidently garbled and, to me, unidentifiable form.

"Such a gracious gift inspired me to a vivid sense of gratitude, which I have been most eager to express to the donor. But all my inquiries and efforts have failed thus far to identify him.

"Accordingly I am giving this public notice, hoping thereby to acquaint the donor of my great delight in the gift, and to receive some communication from him."

FOOTBALL RACE TO END FRIDAY

Only Three Teams Remain Undefeated in Intramural Contest; Championship Game November 26.

The Intramural Tag Football League enters the final week of competition with three undefeated teams competing for honors in the fraternity standing while the New Dorms is the only undefeated dormitory team, to date.

An unusual amount of interest in tag football has been displayed this fall and approximately 350 or more boys have competed during this season, and an exceedingly small number of forfeits have been given. Aside from the regularly scheduled games between the fraternities and the ones between the dormitories there have been many practice games between these teams.

Beta Theta Pi, Pi Kappa Phi, and Delta Kappa Epsilon are the three teams with the 1.000 per cent average in the fraternity standing. Pi Kappa Phi and the D. K. E.'s will meet on Tuesday afternoon and the winner of this game will play Beta on Wednesday, provided Beta registers wins over the Chi Psi and Phi Delta Theta.

The final game between the dormitory and fraternity champions for the campus championship will be played on Tuesday, November 26.

Kappa Psi Pledges

Kappa Psi fraternity announces the pledging of the following men this year: M. L. Cline, Granite Falls; W. S. Crouch, Leaksville; A. D. Edens, Red Springs; C. S. Curry, Lexington; A. T. Griffin, Pine Tops; F. B. Ham, Greensboro; L. R. McLellan, Godwin; and K. T. White, Louisburg.

Social leaders in New York City have decreed that debutante dances next season shall start at 10 p. m. and end by 3 a. m.

Practice Teaching In Local School Is Well Safeguarded

No Instruction Allowed in Any Class Not Under Control of School of Education Staff.

For the past two years seniors in the school of education have been accorded practice teaching privileges in the Chapel Hill high school. This work is very closely supervised. Six members of the school of education staff act as heads of the six departments into which the high school is divided. Each man is in direct charge of two high school classes. The pupils in these classes are taught more than half the time by these University professors; the rest of the time the actual teaching is done by practice teachers under their supervision. No practice teaching is allowed in any class not under the direct control of a member of the school of education staff.

Patrons of schools in which practice teaching is permitted are frequently fearful of the consequence of having their children practiced upon by immature and inexperienced teachers in training. Such fears are justified. Practice teaching inevitably tends towards a lowering of the quality of instruction. That this tendency is more than offset in the local school through the safeguards provided is proved by the results of the battery of examinations given to the seniors in all the high schools of the state last spring. The returns have been tabulated and show that in every department the median score made by the Chapel Hill pupils is greatly in excess of the corresponding state median. The sum of the state medians is 86.9; the sum of the Chapel Hill medians is 136, or more than 50 per cent higher.

Further objective evidence having a bearing on the quality of instruction being given in the local school appears in the reports of the Association of Colleges and Secondary schools of the southern states. The last report shows that the percentage of failure of Chapel Hill high school graduates attending college dropped from 26.9 to 10.5 after University professors were placed in charge of the various departments.

These data show clearly that practice teaching as it is conducted in the local school has not proved to be detrimental to the interests of the pupils. On the contrary the school of education influence seems to have resulted in a distinct improvement in the quality of instruction being given.

BOXERS WORKING HARD FOR STIFF WINTER SCHEDULE

Boxing practice in the tin can has begun to assume the proportions of mid-season activity. Prospects for the coming season are very bright and Coach Crayton Rowe is well pleased with the turn out so far this fall.

The work of the freshmen is particularly promising and an early forecast of the team promises to be one of the best on the Hill since the inauguration of boxing several years ago. There are several men out for each of the weights and practicing with the varsity squad they are getting in a form that is little short of seasoned scrappers. Many of these boys after little more than a month's experience behind them are slinging their punches like hardened veterans, in fact they are giving the older members all the fight they are looking for.

In the lighter weights Jimmy Grey and Livingston are making strong bids for positions and should prove good men for the 125-pound class. Livingston, who has seen service before, is one of the leading men for the weight and been doing some very good boxing all fall. Jimmy Grey has also been doing well, and is improving fast, and indications are that he will be a fine man in his class before long. Both of these boys are heavy hitters besides being clever at the more scientific end.

The 135-pound class has three men who are coming along very well and should make hard hitters and rugged fighters. Just above in the 145 class Stallings, Jackson and Preston have been showing up well. Mixing it with varsity men like Captain Archie Allen and Goodrich, they have progressed rapidly and are both shifty and fast. This is one of the strongest classes and competition for positions at this weight will be keen.

The middleweight is slow at furnishing material but has one very good southpaw in Kaughman, who has been laying out the last week with a dislocated finger. Men are needed in this class and Coach Rowe is looking for men to show up for the position.

Lightheavy and heavy has another southpaw, Miller, who has been doing consistent work this fall, and Hubbard, who can be used for either weight. Hubbard who has only been out for a short while is coming along exceptionally well and should make a very good man. He can hit well with either hand and is naturally shifty and fast. Miller, who is doing well in the heavy class, is also shifty and fast for a large man, and packs a hard left.

Coach Rowe again is interested in getting all men who are coming out for boxing to start training soon, as the season is getting away to an early start and the first meet is only six weeks after the Christmas vacation.

Phi Delta Phi legal fraternity announces the pledging of the following men: J. G. Adams, Biltmore; Travis Brown, Charlotte; T. J. Gold, High Point; D. J. Craig, Statesville; H. N. Woodson, Salisbury; Calvin Graves, Mt. Airy; and A. J. Stubbs, Durham.

OFFICERS ELECTED IN ENGINEERING SOCIETY

The University of North Carolina Society of Mechanical Engineers met in Phillips hall Thursday night. A constitution and bylaws were drawn up and accepted. The following officers were elected: Prof. E. G. Hoefer, honorary president; E. L. Merritt, secretary, and J. B. Pittana, treasurer. J. S. Newsome and R. A. Parsley were elected vice presidents.

The rest of the meeting was taken up in electing a program committee. Around thirty members were present at the meeting.

Tar Heel Topics

"Fruit fly conclave in Washington 16th" reads a headline in the Greensboro Daily News. Ye gods, and so they believe in organization too!

One newspaper tells us that a man was "fatally wounded in shooting at border." All of which goes to prove that boundary lines are dangerous things.

One of the state newspapers informs us that Raleigh must start its fight all over again for a new depot. And we thought that revolutions were restricted to Mexico!

Well, we have all heard the United States Marine Band, and now we have one ambition—to be President of the United States. Then we could listen to it free of charge.

The New York City Noise Abatement Commission recently sent out 1,500 questionnaires and found that "reverberations set up by heavy trucks, promiscuous tooting of automobile horns, and the squaking of radios" constitute the three chief noise worries in that city. Evidently the newspapers have been overdoing the stock market crash.

Gate-Crashing At The Marine Band Concerts

The desire to get something for nothing is strong in all men—but particularly so in women. Often people will waste hours of valuable time and expend a prodigious amount of energy in order to secure some trifle of inconsiderable value, simply because it costs them nothing in actual cash.

Gate-crashing is one of the most pronounced manifestations of the "get something for nothing" urge. With many persons, especially college students, gate-crashing becomes an obsession, a passion to which they will subordinate pride, common sense, everything of a reasonable nature. They regard paying admission to an athletic event, musical program or performance of any descriptions as a mark of weakness, of inability to outwit the gate-keepers. All newspaper men are familiar with the attentions upon a city editor or other journalistic slave-driver, merely to secure a four-bit pass to some attraction.

Thursday this gate-crashing mania was carried to extraordinary lengths here. When the Marine Band played in Kenan stadium Thursday afternoon, scores of students made the difficult and dangerous ascent of the huge barb wire fence, tumbled to the ground on the inside, and crawled on their bellies like mongrel dogs to the shielding screen of the fringe of cedar bushes which surrounds the stands. There they groveled until the performance was over, although they could have secured good seats and enjoyed the concert in respectable fashion by the payment of an inconsiderable sum.

Again Thursday night the gate-crashers were on the job. They attempted to rush the doors of the Tin Can during the intermission; after their attempts to massacre a few gate keepers were thwarted, they vented their spleen by showering bricks and clubs against the tin walls of the structure, meanwhile hurling all manner of uncomplimentary epithets at the student doormen.

The University's famed light of learning seems to have penetrated only feebly into the craniums of these habitual student gate-crashers, if at all. Chances are so solid as to defy penetration anyway.

The Progressive South.

All too often residents of other sections of the United States criticize the Southland. And what is worse than this—occasionally a native southerner, seemingly disgusted with his environment, refers to his native land as "The Stagnant South." The writer of this editorial could never believe that the person who recently published a treatise in this paper bearing the aforementioned title fully realized the heinous and unmistakably unjust implications accompanying such a group of words, for of all the word combinations in the English language there is not one which is any further removed from the realm of the complimentary. With all due respect to this unnamed writer, let us proceed to a careful scrutiny in this misleading pharse—The Stagnant South.

From coast to coast the culture of the Southland is unsurpassed. Southern hospitality looms up as the very emblem of satisfaction to the sojourner, and in other sections of the nation the term southern hospitality is the most flattering combination that could be applied to a friendly effort. Within the last fifteen years the enrollment of many southern colleges and universities has doubled. Great highways have found their way across the hitherto well nigh untraversable sands of this and other southern states. And, to make the contention even stronger, this phase of development is yet in the infant stage. The South is rapidly becoming a manufacturing region. In many of the "Sunny States," notably our own state of North Carolina, the roar of cotton and tobacco mills is by no means a unfamiliar sound. Northern manufacturers, in recognition of something not even remotely akin to stagnation, are establishing mills in this and other states of the old order. Lives there a man, even in the depths of illiteracy, who can meditate upon these things and then say "This is my own, my native land"—The Stagnant South?

In the last half century the North and West have forged ahead, it is true; but so has the South. Southerners were once prominent in education, commerce, and everything worthwhile, and they still are. People boast of coming from the Southland just as much as they did in the never-to-be-forgotten days of the great plantation and the negro slave. Who has the audacity to say that the South has not advanced almost immeasurably since the days of the "Old South"? Yet to refer to this region as being stagnant is in effect the same thing. Stagnancy and progress are irreconcilable opposites.

People are prone to forget the fact that the South has not yet fully recovered from the disaster of the War Between the States. That she is progressive, however, is attested by her present condition which offers a striking contrast to her chaotic condition of a comparatively few years ago. The South is enamoured of her part in the development of the American nation of tomorrow, the like of which the world has never yet seen. Our native land is a recognized part of the Union and as such lays claim to a position in the affairs of the nation and of the world which is never accorded a stagnant region. In point of rapidity of development in recent years the South has no counterpart in all of American history. And yet this our native land—"The Stagnant South?"

It is true that many southern universities turn to the North or the West when in quest of a president. It is true, also, that some of the most prominent educators of these sections are solicited from the ranks of the Southland.

It is time for all loyal southerners to turn a deaf ear to the showers of destructive criticism which continually descend upon their native land both from within and from without, for this is our native land, and it is the Progressive South which bids fair to take the lead in the America of tomorrow.—J. C. W.

The Proposed Income Tax Reduction

Secretary Mellon has now launched forth into a project which no doubt he has been working on for some time. It is his plan to reduce the income tax one percent for the year 1930, and thus effect a pet ambition of his to slash taxes. He realizes—perhaps better than anyone else—that the budget for the next fiscal year is much in excess of that of this year, but rather than increase taxation proportionally to the increase in expenditures he would reduce the tax rate.

Of course Mr. Mellon knows that revenue must increase. He bases his proposition on the hypothesis that big business is going to increase so much during the coming year that the revenue brought in by the reduced tax on corporations (the one percent reduction affecting largely incomes of big corporations) will adequately cover the added governmental expenditures. He is, then, advocating a reduction not on a certainty but on an assumption.

In case the earnings of big business do not come up to the expectations of Mr. Mellon, the payment on the national debt will probably have to be reduced and that money diverted into other channels. At any rate, instead of taking chances on a deficit, a surplus—which also is economically unsound — should be anticipated in order to carry on public works when general business conditions are at a lower ebb than they are at the present time.

It is a well known fact that the proposed reduction will increase the stocks of corporations, several corporations already having capitalized on the proposal. Thus in the final analysis, it will result in the government's making a gift to stockholders in corporations, the welfare of the average man being unaffected. If Secretary Mellon can reduce taxes and meet the increased governmental expenditures, and at the same time promote the general welfare, he is indeed a wizard.

The Truth Will Out

Such was the opinion of the many students who found their names on the lists of deficiencies pasted on the walls of the registrar's office. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" is as true a statement now as it ever was.

Something Unusual

A thing is generally desired in proportion to the difficulty encountered in getting it. "Grats" from professors who cut their classes every once in a while have little kick for the students concerned. But the situation is entirely reversed when some professor, with a conscience and a reputation for always being there, fails to show up. This seemingly small matter is received in the light of a great event. The impossible has happened! We must celebrate! And so we do celebrate. Old Mother Nature is very kind to her children at Carolina. She instills in them a love for freedom and optional class attendance.

Hot Air Artists Warming Up

From the pages of this daily publication we learn that the local debaters are studying the question of DISARMAMENT every Thursday night in 201 Murphey hall in preparation for coming contests with N. C. State and the University of South Carolina. In the case that the Tar Heels should win both sides of the question we wonder what the conclusion would be. 'Pears like we'd be right back where we started. If they lost both sides we'd still be confounded as to what to do. We wouldn't know whether to disarm or not. At any rate, we'll wait and see what happens.

Artistic Justice

We've always contended that artistic justice was a fake. To prove our contention we detailed a Daily Tar Heel reporter the other day to stand at the entrance to the Carolina theatre and solicit the opinions of twenty students regarding the picture—asking them "How was the picture" just as though he himself contemplated going in to witness the performance. The answers ranged all the way from "damn good, pretty good, fair, pretty fair, not much, just ordinary, rotten to not worth a damn." A thing is beautiful or pleasing according to our own individual enthusiasms. After all, why should we care whether the crowd admires the same things that we do or not? We feel certain, however, that we cannot possibly think of any favorable location for the man who aims to please everybody. Certainly, Chapel Hill would not

A specimen of construction work in the Bell System is the new catenary span carrying telephone wires across the Gila River, Arizona. The "natural" obstacle is no longer an obstacle while there are telephone men to find a way through it or over it.

This is but one example in a general expansion program. Others are such widely varied projects as linking New York to Atlanta by cable, erecting 200 telephone buildings in 1929, developing a $15,000,000 factory at Baltimore.

Tar Heels Renew Ancient Grid Rivalry With Wildcats

Game To Be Main Feature Of Davidson Homecoming

Collins Takes Squad of Fifty Men to Meet 'Cats.

SQUADS IN SHAPE

Officials Expect to Have Complete Sell-Out Due to Bearing of Game on State Race.

The Tar Heels and the Davidson Wildcats meet this afternoon on Richardson field to renew an ancient grid rivalry between the two institutions. The game will be the main feature of the Davidson "Home-coming" and a large crowd is expected to attend. Davidson officials have already reported a large advance sale of tickets, and because of the bearing of this game on the state race a sell-out of seats is predicted.

Coach Collins carried a squad of 50 men to meet the Cats and the majority of these will undoubtedly see action today. This is the largest squad that has been carried on a trip this year by the Tar Heels.

When the Tar Heels and the Wildcats meet at 2:30, two of the strongest Big Five teams in the state will go against each other. Davidson and Carolina now head the list of the Big Five teams. Carolina with two wins and no losses is closely followed by Davidson with one win and one loss. Wake Forest upset the Cats for a victory, but the following week the Davidsonians took the Wolfpack down under a 13 to 0 score. N. C. State trompled on the Deacons a week or so preceeding this game.

Davidson has always been one of the hardest teams in the state to defeat on their home grounds and although the season scores to date indicate a Carolina victory it is by no means an impossibility for a Davidson win.

The traditional Wildcat spirit will no doubt be present when the Presbyterians meet the University this afternoon. Brock is Davidson's most outstanding star and his toe accounted for the win over Citadel earlier in the season.

Davidson took the strong Citadel team in tow at the first of the season, after Citadel had defeated Oglethorpe, the conquerors of the University of Georgia. By subduing the Citadel aggregation the Cats could, by scores on paper, claim a win over the Oglethorpe team, another win over the strong University of Georgia's Bulldogs, and would be given a 25 or 30 point margin over Carolina.

Davidson was also given about 75 points over the Wake Forest team but their plans were upset by a defeat.

There will be a grid-graph of the Carolina-Davidson game at the Pickwick Theatre at 2:30. In addition to the regular grid-graph account of the game, there will be quarter by quarter reports of all other leading games inthe state.

The Tar Heels' starting lineup will probably be the veteran combine with Holt and Fenner, ends; Koenig and Adams, tackles; Captain Farris and Fysal, guards; Lipscomb, center; Branch, quarter; Ward and Nash, halves; and Spaulding, fullback.

The other Tar Heels making the trip were Nelson, Tabb, Parsley and Brown, ends; Dortch, Thompson and Harper, tackles; Crew, McIver, Hudson, Eskew, and Hutchinson, guards; Gilbreath and Alexander, centers; Wyrick and Jackson, quarterbacks; Magner, Maus, Erickson, Slusser, and Houston, halfback; Harden and House, fullbacks.

125 ENTRIES IN ANNUAL CONTEST

Great Interest Shown in Cake Meet to Take Place Friday; Good Material Found.

The number of entries in the annual intramural Cake Race has been steadily mounting and now approximately 125 or more boys have registered for the meet next Friday. Nearly all of those that have registered have taken one or more workouts under supervision. It is still not too late to enter for the meet, and all interested are urgently requested by Coach Ransom and the intramural department to sign up at once.

There is a table at the entrance of Emerson field where all entries must check in for workouts. Coach Dale Ransom stated yesterday that some very good prospects for freshmen and varsity track have been uncovered since training began and the race next week promises even better.

Many of the frosh track candidates as well as new aspirants for the varsity in the spring are taking this opportunity to get in shape. Although no freshmen or varsity member of the cross country or track team is allowed to enter the meet, there are some entries that, although not having participated in any meets on varsity or freshman teams, have shown fine style and much promise.

The numerous and attractive prizes to be given away have enticed many former high school track men to the track and some fast times will be made over the two mile course.

Only five or six fraternities have entered teams in the race and few of the dormitories. Prizes are to be given to each team as well as individual winners, and the number of men on each team is not limited, but at least five are required.

(By J. C. Eagles)

Today's grid slate with the exception of the Carolina-Davidson game offers very little football of major interest to fans in this section. Away out in front in importance and interest in Conference ranks is the battle at Knoxville between Tennessee and Vanderbilt, two of the three undefeated aspirants to the southern championship. Then there's the game between Tech and Alabama plus that between Duke and State and you have about all those which seem important.

The Tar Heels began the season with a good team and have been getting stronger right along. This afternoon they will be able to present their full strength with the exception of Halfback Magner. Davidson has one of the few mediocre elevens it has had under the expert coaching of Monk Younger. Accordingly there is little doubt that Carolina will win. The fighting spirit of the Wildcats will be their chief strength for as far as football goes the Tar Heels have all the advantage.

Now to consider the Vandy-Tennessee battle. To begin with, Tennessee has been going like a house afire all fall. They lead the conference in scoring and have been scored on less than any other conference team that has played more than one game. Add to this that they did not lose a game last season and have yet to lose one this season and you have some idea of the strength of the Vols. Vanderbilt, under the tutelage of the veteran Dan McGugin, is also a team to be considered seriously. Only the powerful Minnesota team has humbled them this fall. Southern conference play has seen them preserve a clean slate and run up victories over Georgia Tech and Alabama in successive weekends. The Vols have a well-rounded team and undoubtedly a strong one, but we believe that the touchdown twins, Hack and Mack, will carry Tennessee to victory.

Duke after going out of its class for four games was given a chance to show its real power last Saturday and ran roughshod over Louisiana State. They should have no trouble in piling up the score on State.

Georgia Tech has had many ups and downs this fall. We believe that Alabama, led by Holm at fullback, will be successful in keeping them down this afternoon.

Tulane, outstanding candidate for the conference crown, should experience little trouble in keeping its slate clean when it meets Sewanee today.

Virginia battles Washington and Lee in a game which brings together two teams of about equal strength. Neither has had a very successful season and neither seems to have much power. We believe from a study of comparative scores that the Cavaliers should come out on top.

Tar Babies Go To College Park For Maryland Game

Game With Old Liners Freshmen Is First Game Since Blue Imp Contest.

CLOSE CLASH IS EXPECTED

Backed by three weeks of intensive training the University of North Carolina freshman football team left last night at 7 o'clock for College Park where they meet the Maryland freshmen this afternoon in their third contest of the season.

Last year the Terrapin frosh were easy victims for the champion Tar Baby eleven, dropping the contest by three touchdowns. This year the encounter will in all probability be a close one in that the entire Maryland team for 1930 will be rebuilt on the freshman squad next year. Their victory last week over the Virginia by the score of 13-6 was the second in as many starts this season.

Little pre-season information has been received about the Maryland offense but in their game with the Cavalier cubs last week Ray Poppleman and Al Woods, fullback and quarterback, formerly of the United States Marines, were the big threats of the game scoring all of Maryland's points. These two outstanding backfield men with able assistance of the remainder of the team will more than likely prove real trouble makers for the Carolina youngsters.

Close rivalry between the first year teams of the University of North Carolina and the University of Maryland has been burning for several years. The Carolina yearlings have won the last two games, losing the first in a bitter contest. Today's schedule heaps more coals upon the fire and the Maryland frosh will put up a tough battle to even the four year series.

This afternoon the Tar Babies face the Old Liners with the disadvantage of a weak offense due to the formations of rival teams which the freshmen learned and scrimmaged the varsity with, giving them no opportunity to perfect their own plays. Their main strength lies in defensive ability and the outcome of the game depends largely on this.

Coach Enright found it rather difficult to pick a limited number of players from the crack freshman squad. The following 29 men made the trip—Hodges, Allen, Grier, Reddings, Zovesus, A. Davis, Robinson, Philpot, Newcomb, MacDade, Collins, Smith, Sharkey, Adkin, Walker, Nichols, Henry, Cole, Beale, Chandler, Jackson, Thompson, Donnell, Ferrebee, Daniels, Wormon, MacNeil, Sickler and Abrams.

Duke's First Big Five Contest Will Show Its Strength

The traditional rivalry between the Blue Devils and the Wolfpack will be continued in Durham this afternoon. This game will be one of the highlights in Big Five circles for this season. So far Duke is the only member of the Big Five that has not played a game in the state.

When the Blue Devils meet the Wolfpack the sports writers of the state will have more than an approximate idea of the strength of the Duke aggregation in comparison to the other Big Five elevens.

Duke's machine functioned so well in the game last week with L. S. U. that its stock has risen considerably in the prediction of the outcome of the Big Five race.

State has shown quite a bit of improvement since its meeting with Davidson last week and it is expected to show its full strength this afternoon. Several shifts have been made in the Pack's lineup and the Devils will have a tough game on their hands when the whistle starts the affair.

The game this afternoon in Durham will probably be of as much importance in the state as the Carolina-Davidson game, as it will determine at the start whether Duke will have a chance for the state title or not. Should the Devils register a win over the Wolfpack they will undoubtedly be in a good position towards Big Five honors. In case of a Wolfpack win the Devils will be practically out of the state title race.

So far the Wolfpack has the edge in the series of games between the two institutions, but Duke is given a slight margin in the game today.

AT THE CAROLINA TODAY

Life is seemingly just one bruise after another for Lenore Ulric, great emotional actress of the stage, whose first talking picture, a Fox Movietone feature, opens at the Carolina today.

Miss Ulric's many Broadway successes have all included strenuous scenes, from her hair pulling contest and rough-and-tumble fight in "Kiki" to the business of racing up endless flights of stairs and crawling under all sorts of machinery as in "Mima."

At least she registered not a whit of perturbation when, at the close of her first day's production work on "Frozen Justice" she learned that for the next twenty-four hours her film husband, Robert Frazer, was to maul her about, drag her across the floor of a ship's cabin and otherwise muss her up with occasional connubial beatings. In fact, an amused smile flitted across her face as she told Allan Dwan, the director, she didn't mind.

Inevitable Comment

It is a fact greatly to be lamented that in many sections of the state Carolina students have the reputation of being quite adept in the noble arts of drinking, gambling, petting, etc. Some few days ago while spending a night in our home town we chanced to have a chat with a good old brother who was spiritually troubled about the alleged wickedness of Carolina students. He had heard it said that even the co-eds of the University could blow smoke circles and cuss with an alacrity far from negligible. True it is that a few college students do drink and make undue merriment of the menancing variety, but the majority do not. Yet the reported row of the few offenders makes otherwise sensible citizens of the state believe that the Carolina campus is a modern edition of old Tyre. The great eagerness of press reporters in securing tales of scandalous doings in Chapel Hill is doing much to give the University a bad name. After this published scandal has undergone the process of community gossip, words are weak to express the heinousness of some of the reports which come out of simple matters.

FIRE BREAKS OUT IN RUBBISH HEAP. Thus spake the Daily in a recent edition. Most certainly this is something new in the way of fire behavior. Fires often break out of a pile of rubbish, but 'tis indeed rare to hear of a fire's breaking out in a pile of rubbish.

Today's Question

Is the use of profanity any longer an art?

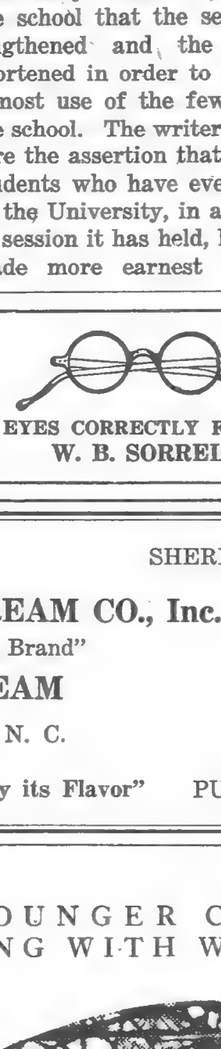
struction of police officers by similar schools.



A total of 97 police officers from the cities and towns of North Carolina registered during the ten days of the school, but, of course, they were coming and going from day to day and not all of them attended the sessions throughout the ten days. Naturally, Durham, only 12 miles away from Chapel Hill, had the largest attendance, but Chief Bryan of Raleigh attended every day with a large delegation from his force, and Chief McGhee of High Point detailed five of his men to spend the ten days in the school and attended most of the sessions himself. Chief Cutler of Washington, Chief Hoover of Belmont, and Captain Wooten of Winston-Salem attended all sessions, and six other chiefs attended one or more sessions. The officers attending the school came from 17 cities and towns of the state. Several mayors, city attorneys and city clerks, besides those on the program, dropped in to attend one or more sessions.

Certificates were issued to those attending 75 per cent of the sessions and 41 qualified for these certificates. Five took special night work in first aid and received the Red Cross first aid certificate. One of the most striking things about the school was the regularity and enduring interest shown by the officers attending. Though few of them, entirely too few, took part in the discussions, more asked questions and often very good questions, and all showed remarkable endurance in listening attentively from morning until late afternoon to the lectures and discussions. The experience of this ten-day school left with those responsible for it the conviction that no group in the state offer more promising students for work in adult education that the police officers of the state. Not merely did they pay close attention and ask intelligent questions during all of the sessions, but they also asked more questions outside of the regular session periods and spent a surprising amount of time during the recesses and early mornings and late afternoons in the reading room provided opposite the hall where the meetings were held, going over the books and magazines selected and recommended to them for supplementing the lectures and discussions. During the first day or two, the rank and file of officers attending suggested to the committee of the association of chiefs and to the University officers in charge of the school that the sessions be lengthened and the recesses shortened in order to make the utmost use of the few days of the school. The writer will venture the assertion that no other students who have ever attended the University, in any school or session it has held, have ever made more earnest effort to make the most of their opportunity than did these police officers gathered from the four corners of North Carolina.

It is also noteworthy that the police officers, from chief to patrolman, in expressing themselves either in the meetings or more informally in conversation outside, took the position that this school was the beginning of a great opportunity to make of police work in this state a real profession.

Ninety days to go— teamwork wins

While you Seniors were shuffling worries about machine stresses and saturation curves with those of football last fall, a group of your predecessors, not so many years ahead of you, were playing the game with grim realities.

The Columbia Steel Company of Pittsburg, California, completed plans on September 12th to build a new tinplate plant. On the 13th they gave an order to Westinghouse for two 5,000 horsepower synchronous motors to drive the rolls, to be physically the largest synchronous motors ever built. Delivery of the first was wanted in ninety days.

Ninety days in which to design, manufacture, assemble, test and ship any large unit, let alone a new achievement in size and type of construction, affords no time for idle speculation. Westinghouse men went at the job as only an experienced and thoroughly equipped organization could do. And on the scheduled date, four flat cars and a box car rolled out of the Westinghouse plant, carrying the completed and tested motor.

It was an industrial victory, as satisfying as any athletic gain. Teamwork and individual skill had won. Westinghouse had once more made good and upheld the reputation that earns the big electrical jobs for Westinghouse men.

Charlotte, Nov. 16.—Rain and passes fell here today while the University of North Carolina regulars swept through Davidson and a steady downpour to cross the Wildcat goal line four times for a 26-7 victory. It was the 26th renewal of rivalry between the two Carolina institutions.

Scoring early in the first quarter when Parrish filtered through left tackle for 37 yards and a touchdown, Davidson never threatened throughout the remainder of the contest. Her best efforts brought the ball no nearer than the 20 yard line at any other time during the struggle.

The Carolina shock troops found the Davidson eleven too formidable and Coach Chuck Collins substituted his first string men after the first touchdown. On the second play Jimmy Ward side-stepped the entire Davidson team to score the first Carolina marker from his own 38 yard line. The run was good for 62 yards.

With the score even at 7-7 at the end of the first quarter, the Tar Heels proceeded to march down the field two times for touchdowns in the second session. Receiving Brock's punt on Davidson's 40 yard line, Johnny Branch returned the ball to the 22 yard line. Before the Wildcat line had lined up, Branch threw the ball far to the side into the waiting arms of Ward for the second Carolina score.

A punt straight into the air good for 15 yards led to the Tar Heels' second score of the quarter. Brock punted high into the air from his own 40 yard line out of bounds. A series of line plays advanced the ball to the 13 yard line from which point Slusser circled right end for a touchdown. Score: Carolina 20, Davidson 7. It was the half.

Mindful of the Davidson march for a touchdown in the initial quarter, Collins started the entire first eleven in the second half. Spaulding kicked to King on his 15 yard line. He returned to his own 34 yard line. King went through left tackle for four yards. Brohardt hit left tackle for one yard. Parrish tried right tackle and advanced another yard. Fourth down.

MARYLAND FROSH BEAT TAR BABIES

The Tar Babies and the Old Liner frosh evened up their four year series yesterday afternoon when the Maryland yearlings defeated the Carolina frosh 18 to 12 in a bitterly fought game.

Both teams were fighting throughout the entire game and the final score by no means indicates the hard fight put up by either team.

When the Tar Heel went to press the full particulars of the game were not available but another account of the game will published in Tuesday's issue of the paper.

This is the fourth game between the Old Liners and U. N. C. frosh and both teams have two wins to their credit. The first game of the series was won by the Maryland frosh in a bitterly fought game by the score of 6 to 0. Both the second and third games were won by the Tar Babies by impressive scores.

The Maryland freshmen played Cavalier freshmen last week and defeated them 13-6. The game with the Virginia frosh showed the Maryland outfit to have an unusually strong freshman team.

This is the second defeat of the season for the Tar Babies. The first loss was to the Duke freshmen, 8 to 7. In the first game of the season the freshmen won over the Roanoke freshmen.

The meager reports that have been received about the game show that a large number of the men making the trip were used by the coaches.

Long Distance Teaching

Big Expansion in Absent Treatment by University's Extension Division

A bulletin issued by the extension division tells of the growth of correspondence instruction given by the University.

There were 1,695 persons registered for correspondence courses last year. Many of these took more than one course, so that the total enrollment stood at about 2,500. More than 75 per cent. of all who have begun courses have completed them. It is now possible to study any one of 150 subjects by correspondence. Nearly all of these lead either to the B.A or B.S. degree.

More than 42,000 lesson assignments were examined in the school year 1928-1929.

"Correspondence is no longer an experiment—it is an assured success," says the bulletin. "This fact is testified to by University instructors and by earnest and enthusiastic students."

For its degrees the University makes no distinction between credit obtained in extension and that obtained in residence, except that there is a limit to the amount of extension work that can count towards a degree.

SOPHOMORES TO HEAR WILLIAMS

Class Executive Committee Will Select Programs For Chapel Exercises.

Professor Horace Williams, Kenan professor and head of the philosophy department and one of the most stimulating teachers in the University, will address the sophomore class in Gerrard hall at 10:30 Monday morning, November 18. The move from Memorial hall has necessitated separating the sophomore and freshman classes for chapel exexrcises. The exercises Monday morning constitute the first formal assembly of the sophomore class apart from the other University groups in many years. The president of the class, Ben Aycock, will preside. He and his class executive committee have been asked to assist the committee responsible for chapel programs in planning the sophomore class programs for the rest of the quarter, in order that these may meet the needs and interests of the class.

Di Calendar

Two bills are listed for discussion of the calendar of the Di senate for Tuesday night. They are:

Resolved: That the Dialectic senate go on record as being of the opinion that catching rides on the highways is detrimental to the student's welfare.

Resolved: That the Dialectic senate go on record as being of the opinion that daily paper in the University is basically unsound and impracticable.

EPWORTH LEAGUE MEETS

Parson Moss, of the Presbyterian church will speak to the Methodist Epworth League tonight at 7 o'clock. Vocal selections will be rendered by Miss Margaret Eubanks.

Staff Meeting

There will be a regular meeting of the Tar Heel staff tonight at seven o'clock in the offices, basement of Alumni building. All reporters unless previously excused by the editor or managing editor must attend this meeting. Changes in assignments and other important announcements are to be made.

FEMALE STUDENTS BETTER MALES IN EDUCATION SCHOOL

According to an announcement by C. E. McIntosh, executive secretary of the school of education, the work of the women students in that school has thus far averaged much higher than that of the men students. The mid-term reports show that out of twelve women in the senior class only one failed to check all her work, and that out of eighteen women in the junior class only three failed to do so. Of these three, each received only one "W." As only girls who have already passed half of their college courses are admitted to the school of education, there are no women students in the freshman or sophomore classes.

This excellence on the part of the women students, according to Mr. McIntosh, may be in part due to the fact that only very few of their numbers are self-help students, partly, also, to the fact that, until the present at least, none of them have engaged in athletics. Futhermore, as only women students who have successfully completed two years of college work are received into the school of education, the scholastic ability of the women students in this particular school would naturally excel that of the male students, for whose enrollment in the school there are no such requirements.

Survey Of Development Of State Universities Made By President H. W. Chase

Retiring Head of American Association of State Universities Says Institutions Were Children of Growing Impulse Toward Democracy of Early Days.

President Harry W. Chase of the University of North Carolina, who is the retiring president of the National Association of State Universities, addressed the annual meeting of the association early last week, speaking on the development of American state universities.

Dr. Chase said:

We are attempting at this meeting to define certain of the functions and relationships of the state university of today, at the end of the second decade of the twentieth century. As a setting and background for that interpretation, it has occurred to me that this paper might well bring together certain silent facts regarding the origin and development of the state university movement in America. The task is, I am aware, somewhat different from that usually essayed in a presidential address; my apology must be that I have been unable to find anywhere that a survey of the development of state universities has been brought up to date, and it has seemed to me worth the doing.

"The American state university is a child of the growing impulse toward democracy that swept over the United States in the early days of its history as an independent nation."

Coming first to the methods of operation and finance of the first of the American Universities, Dr. Chase declared that from the earliest colonial history subsidization and certain assertions of public control over the institutions has been repeated practices. He offered examples of these in Harvard, William and Mary, Yale, Pennsylvania, King's College, Brown, Rutgers, and Dartmouth, all of which received financial aid from the Churches and the State in addition to having governmental and ecclesiastical officials on their executive boards. Princeton, an exception, was mentioned as receiving no public aid. He next turned to a discussion of "one of those struggles that are so typical of the dealing of an age of transition with institutions through which it desires to express its thought . . . . the history of the attempt at public control of the older institutions . . . which began . . .

Felix Grisette Appointed Director Loyalty Campaign

Pittsburgh Man Selected To Succeed Daniel Grant Who Goes To New York; Is An Alumnus of University.

Felix A. Grizette, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has been appointed director of the Alumni Loyalty Fund of the University to succeed Daniel L. Grant who is leaving North Carolina to take up educational administrative work in New York, according to an announcement made today by President Harry W. Chase. The change becomes effective immediately.

Mr. Grizette, although he has resided in Pittsburgh for approximately six years, is a native North Carolinian, having been born and reared in Burke County, where his family still lives. He was graduated from the University with high honors in the class of 1922.

The new director assumes charge of the loyalty fund with an experience which is particularly fitting for the type of work to be done, according to University officials. For the last three years he has been a member of the publicity and organization staff of Ketchum, Inc., one of the largest financial campaign firms in the United States. During this time he has successfully directed many large financial campaigns.

Prior to his entry into campaign work, Mr. Grizette was a member of the editorial staff of the Pittsburgh Gazette-Times. For a brief time, several years ago, he was acting chief editorial writer on the Charlotte Observer. He has also been a member of the faculty and has done post-graduate work at the University of Pittsburgh.

In leaving the University, Mr. Grant terminates a very efficient service which dates from the time of his graduation in 1921, with the exception of one year spent in educational research work for the Carnegie Corporation. Much of his time at the University has been spent in building up an effective alumni organization, which is now handled by J. M. Saunders.

The Alumni Loyalty Fund was begun on a full-time basis a year ago, with Mr. Grant in charge. It was the outgrowth of a plan conceived in the mind of the late President Edward K. Graham which was to eventually persuade every University alumnus to place the University in his budget for a small amount of money each year, the funds so derived to be used by the institution as a supplement to money now received from the State.

Such a campaign was inaugurated last October 12, the birthday of the University, and is still in progress. The change in the directing heads of the work will in no way affect the campaign now being engineered very efficiently as a result of the efforts of Mr. Grant, who, according to his own statement leaves it reluctantly and only because he is confident it will grow in strength under the direction of his successor.

Graduate Club Gives Annual Entertainment

The Shirley Graves graduate club held its third annual open house on last Friday evening at 8:30 p. m. at the Mary Ann Smith building. The building was fittingly decorated for the occasion, both on the outside and in the inside.

This is the first time that the undergraduates have been invited to attend a reception given by the graduate club. Immediately following the reception a dance was given for the graduate students and faculty members. The dance lasted until 1 o'clock. Music was furnished by Archie Stringfellow and his band.

Automobile Mishaps

Mrs. Harlan Slightly Hurt in Wreck; McCorkles Upset by Hit-and-Runner

There have been several automobile wrecks in and around the University lately. On Saturday morning Mrs. J. Penrose Harland was driving toward town in her Chevrolet coupe past the Inn, when the car in front of her stopped suddenly. She applied her brakes, but a truck owned by a tobacco company hit her car in the rear, throwing it with considerable force into the one in front. Mrs. Harland, slightly injured, went to the University infirmary, but it is reported that she is all right now.

The coupe was damaged a little. According to several witnesses, the truck was traveling at a high rate of speed.

Sunday afternoon T. S. and Mrs. McCorkle were traveling toward Durham in a Ford coupe, when their car was sideswiped by another. Neither Mr. McCorkle nor his wife was seriously injured, though it is said that their coupe turned over three times. Strange to say, none of the glass in the car was broken. It has been reported that the driver of the car which struck the McCorkle's was drunk at the time of the accident, and that he was taken to jail and locked up for the night.

In recorder's court Monday morning G. R. Carlisle, white, was fined $36.35 for damaging an automobile belonging to Dr. B. B. Lloyd. Carlisle was charged with driving in a reckless and careless manner.

Tar Heel Topics

We noticed in the papers the other day that eight bandits robbed an Omaha bank of $15,000. At last the renowned "wild and wooly west" is passing, for in those days bandits worked alone. Or else this is another form of a syndicate.

A North Carolina youth recently announced his intention of leaving his home in Spring Hope to stowaway on an airplane to Hawaii. Probably it would have been better if he had sent the sponsors of the flight an engraved announcement to that effect.

The following appeared in the Greensboro Daily News: "C. Q. Rhyne, driving a Ford car, attempted to beat a freight train across the tracks at Kings Mountain. A passenger train which he had not noticed approaching from the opposite direction reached the crossing at the same time the Ford arrived. The passenger train knocked the automobile, golf-like, about seventy-five yards down the track where the freight train caught it on a bounce and made a perfect return to the passenger train's path. The passenger train then booted the car out of bounds and it landed in a nearby field." We suggest that a Rules and Regulation Committee be formed to determine which train won the decision.

Six Years For An A. B.?

Year after year the college population of the nation increases, gaining each twelve months on the general increase in total population. Every man's son in the country goes to college, if he and his mother can persuade "the old man" that it is the thing to do. This is commendable. The millenium certainly would be reached if the world were composed of highly intellectual and cultured citizens. The trouble with the huge enrollments today is simply that a large percentage of the sons and daughters of the land registered in the higher institutions of learning are there merely to avoid having to earn their own bread and butter for another four years, or in the case of the young women, they have in very many cases gone off to the University of Kentucky, Illinois, Michigan, Columbia, or any other co-educational institution for the age old purpose of tracking down a man. As for some of the finishing schools, the sole objective seems to be to finish off the young lady's four years with both a diploma and a "splendid" match.

There be some—and Thank God for them—who take university and college life seriously. The haven't come to college with the avowed intention of increasing their earning capacity, but would like in their four or more years of knowledge seeking to acquire a cultural background by which they may live more happily.

And when these matriculate, they find that the membership of American institutions, being overcrowded as it is, that because of the lack of application of most students during their secondary preparation that the first two years are entirely void of cultural stimuli. The valuable first two years become exaggerated high school years. With few exceptions the subjects treated are continuations of secondary work.

This leaves the man who through lack of funds can go no further than the acquiring of an A. B. with but two years of genuine college work. Two short years to become master of a field. In secondary schools the cry is "Push them ut as fast as you can in order to save the tax-payers money and save our own jobs." In college it seems to be "Give them an urban touch, a good coat of veneer, and enough college spirit so that they will contribute to Dear Old ———so that in the end we too can keep our jobs."

Any general picture is unfair to the exceptions. There are countless good teachers and masters but they are entirely too few. The English have been laughing for years at our mad scramble to turn out A. B.'s and M. A.'s from our educational mills, and rightly so. It can't be denied that our colleges are turning out the best crop of dilettantes that any nation has, nor can it be said that they are not most excellent schools for ettiquette and mannners. Most every Tom Dick and Harry who has been off to Princeton, Harvard, or Leland Stanford can certainly tell you whether it is proper to ask the little girl from Oskowie, Iowa, up for the Prom, especially if her father happens to be a butcher or a general-storekeeper.

Tired professors worn out by euridite research or the struggle to keep the intellectual climbers in their place have a rather profound contempt for the undergraduate mind. A great many are poseurs with a picture to uphold before the world. Some have drifted into the profession feeling wrongly that after the struggle for the Ph. D. is over that the life would be as easy as that offered by some ministries.

As for the students, they are there to earn more money, to avoid getting down to work, to hunt a mate, or as in the case of a small minority to acquire a little culture, which it is impossible for them to do in two years.

The only possible solution seems to lie in raising the requirment for the degree of A. B., making the course a six year one. The other alternatives would be compulsory attendance for two years at acredited preparatory schools upon being graduated from high schools and before entering college, or offering some higher degree in place of the Ph. D., stepping honors down—M. A. to replace the A. B., and the A. B. degree to be given for four years work, the significance of the degree being practically subordinated to that of M. A. so far as literary and pedigogical requirements are concerned.

Readers' Opinions

A LESSON NECESSARY

Editor The Daily Tar Heel:

A scrawled message was found Saturday written on the fly leaf of one of the more popular novels at the Bull's Head Bookshop. There has been a great deal of talk recently about the vandalism committed on library books. It is hard to believe that this spirit would extend to the deliberate defacing of books in a semi-commercial library such as the Bull's Head, which is kind enough to let even the ikkle boys and girlies tum in and jus' wead and wead. But children must learn that the fly leaves of recent novels are not the place for notes to neighbors—even important notes like "I want to meat your friend." The offense hereafter, it has been very sanely suggested, should be punished by sending the scribbler to bed for the rest of the day and giving him only oatmeal or mush for supper.

R. M. WALLACE.

J. C. W. REACHES APPOMATTOX

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

J. C. W., eminent assistant editor of the Daily Tar Heel, has come to the defense of the Southland in the bathos and bombast characteristic of that esteemed gentleman. He deplores in a dolorous vein the criticism of a native southerner made public in these columns some time ago under the heading The Stagnant South.

With all due respect to J. C. W., let us proceed to a careful scrutiny of the Progressive South.

Mr. W. advances the proof that the Southland is possessed with culture and to prove the statement claims that southern hospitality is a manifestation of a unique culture. We might mention for Mr. W.'s edification that there are certain peaceful tribes in the South Sea Islands which welcome with open arms and no canibalistic intent whatever visitors who happen to come to their shores. Hospitality, a very commendable trait, is by no means a sign of culture, but is rather a sign of an easy going life and abject laziness.

The very learned senator, the Honorable Tom Heflin of Alabamah, by gohd, suh, pointed with pride at the progress of his state university at a time some few years ago when the football department of that cultural institution was so fortunate as to have won a mythological title—the national championship of the United States—and marked with evident pride and pigeon-breasted pomp the doubling of the enrollment of the institution at that period, never realizing that the fall of the football team would result in an inevitable decadence.

While the writer of this learned treatise acknowledges the fact that some southern universities go north for their presidents, he points to the fact that many valuable professors in northern universities come from the South; he overlooks the fact that possibly the South underpays these valuable professors, besides smothering them with narrowness, bigotry, dogmatism and stagnancy.

Speaking of the infant stage of the development of the roads in the South, J. C. W. waxes jubilant over the fact that "great highways have found their way across the hitherto well nigh untraversable sands of this and other southern states." If this be culture, it is certainly culture in an embryonic stage, particularly in the states of Mississippi, Alabama and South Carolina. The point is, however, that some people do not consider roads and buildings as evidences of intellectual culture.

The Southland has always made much of the fact that its people are composed of 100 per cent Anglo-Saxon blood. We might respectfully suggest that this is an absolute proof of stagnation. For instance, Alabama, the home of the first capital of the Confederate States of America, ranks fourth in illiteracy in the United States, first honors going to Louisiana, and second place going to South Carolina, the home of the first Ku Klux Klan, the original 100 per cent Kult.

Of course, "the Sunny States including our own North Carolina hear the roar of the cotton and tobacco mills," but this roar is punctuated with pistol shots and the screams of murdered men and defenseless women, and to the acute ear these roars are drowned by the cries of hungry children—hungry because the culture of the Southland has moved the cotton mills South.

"Lives there a man" out of the depth of illiteracy who would not say—"This is my native land, the Stagnant South?"

True, Southerners were once great in the realms of education, politics, commerce, law, and the fine arts. But as to the present, Tom Heflin, Coleman Blease, E. Y. Clarke, Governor Bilbo, and Thomas Blanton of Texas, the cream of Southern diplomacy, fail to thrill us; we cannot think of any one prominent in education; as to commerce, we admit of the great traffic in boll weevils, fruit flies, and cotton fleas, but maintain that a one crop civilization is stagnant. The fine arts alone show any hope of a rising cultural level. No one denies the worth of James Branch Cabell, Walter Lipmann, Julia Peterkin, Anne Preston Bridges, and others. In journalism we find Josephus Daniels, Julian Harris, and editors of papers like the Birmingham News, New Orleans Times-Picayune, Macon Telegraph, Montgomery Advertiser and Jackson (Miss.) News—all virulent and active examples of intellectually minded persons.

Mr. W. reminds us that "people are prone to forget the fact that the South has not fully recovered from the disaster of the Civil War." When then, if ever, will the South recover? Sixty-five years is a long time to spend recovering from a war, and we should say that rather than "chaotic" the South was apathetic until a few years ago.

The South may be "enamoured of her part in the development of the American nation of tomorrow" but some of we southerners are interested in the South's development of today.

Naturally, "our native land is a recognized part of the Union and as such lays claim to a position in the affairs of the nation and of the world which is never accorded a stagnant region"; so too is the Death Valley of California a part of the Union, but its aridity and stagnancy hardly command a position in the affairs of the nation. To a lesser degree "our native land The Stagnant South," has small hold on the affairs of the nation. It is time for all loyal Southerners to open their ears to criticism, and their minds to progress and bend their efforts toward a genuine and progressive South. Any civilization to exist must have as a keystone—culture.

Pen Points

By H. J. Galland

At least one professor in this university has been forced to use unusual methods for making his students learn their stuff. The professor is Howard Mumford Jones. He doesn't come to class armed with brickbats, nor does he attempt coercion with daily quizzes. Instead, he awards a penny for particularly good recitations. 'Sfact. The moral-pointing rights to this incident are uncopyrighted and free for all. As for us, we feel no urge to point a figurative finger to the decline of learning for the sake of knowledge. We're merely going to register in Professor Jones' class.

Copious attempts were made last Thursday to crash the concerts of the Marine Band, which may be taken as a compliment to that organization, if you want to construe the crashing of the last means of desperate and true music-lovers. But the music-lovers didn't stop at crashing. While the concert was on, some one took the Marine insignia from Captain Branson's coat collar. Captain Branson was not in the coat at the time. He was on the platform conducting, and his coat was in the dressing room.

A problem of considerable difficulty suddenly arose to disturb two serious thinkers Friday night. They were uptown in a car, and decided that, due to various causes, it would be seemly to ride down Franklin street, around the stop light, and all the way back to their fraternity house in reverse gear. They did so, but couldn't decide on which side of the street they ought to be. If they drove on the right, they were obviously proceeding in the wrong direction, and if they proceeded backwards on the left, they were on the wrong side of the street. So they drove backwards down the middle of the street, and let it go at that.

Mid-term marks have been posted, and one more hurdle has been jumped. Our thoughts turn pleasantly now toward the finals, and we suppose it's about time to begin now to brush up on the notes we scribble so lightheartedly during the courses, and oil the mental equipment, if any. Or, as the eminent Dr Sherlock Holmes said, speaking of exams, "Quick, Watson—the needle!"

We learn from the Tar Heel that the marimba is the national instrument of Guatemala, or is it Peru? We like the efforts of the make-up men in searching for bits of knowledge which will be useful to the readers, whenever they are in need of a two or three line filler. Following this idea, we think you would like to know that Persian cats can be sent out for dry-cleaning, that elephants are entirely vegetarian in diet, that the shortest last name in New York belongs to Mr. George F. Of, that handwriting readers will tell you that if your S's are open it means that you are a hypocrite, that we think all this is nutty too, and that Walter Winchell, who gathered the facts, vouches for their truth.

Dr Henderson doesn't know who gave him the wild goose which was left on his doorstep recently, but we think it was his neighbor, the President. We hesitate to suggest this, for people might get to calling him Wild Goose Chase.

Fletcher Whitted Dead

Fletcher Whitted, more familiarly known as "Fletch," colored headwaiter at the Coop Eating Club for the past ten years and likewise a well-known character in Chapel Hill, died suddenly at his home last Saturday morning. Heart-failure was the direct cause of his death.

Many of the boys whom he had faithfully served in life paid their respects at his home prior to his funeral which was held Sunday afternoon.

With Wilmington's smashing victory over Goldsboro high and Raleigh's loss to Durham, the class A football race in the east narrowed to Wilmington and Goldsboro. Both stand at the top with one loss each. However, Goldsboro is yet to play at Raleigh before the eastern title is decided. In the circuit Charlotte is out in front with no defeats and is expected to take the title.

Wilmington, winner of the state title in 1927 and 1928, lost its first conference start to Raleigh 7-6. It then turned about and defeated Fayetteville, Goldsboro and Durham to give it a lead over the other teams in the class. Raleigh dropped a game to Fayetteville and Friday lost to Durham 6-0.

Should Goldsboro defeat Raleigh another game would be necessary between Wilmington and Goldsboro for the title.

The standings of member schools in the class A conferences are as follows:

Class A western conference:

	W	L	T	Pct.
Charlotte	3	0	0	1.000
High Point	3	1	0	.750

Raleigh	1	2	0	.333

Conference games scheduled for the week in the eastern class A conference are: Fayetteville vs. Durham at Durham, November 22, and Raleigh vs. Goldsboro at Goldsboro, November 22.

Conference games scheduled for the week in the western class A conference are: Gastonia vs. Greensboro at Greensboro, November 22; High point vs. Charlotte at Charlotte, November 23, and Salisbury vs. Winston-Salem at Winston-Salem, November 23.

It is expected that the final game for the state football title of the class A high school conferences for this season will be played by the eastern and the western conference champions at Chapel Hill on Saturday, November 30.

Women's Athletic Program Outlined

The women's athletic association will definitely start on its year's program of activities when regular basketball practice begins on Monday night.

A large number of girls came out to the initial meeting on Thursday afternoon. Plans were made for the basketball and tennis seasons. Louise Weaver was elected president of the association and Penelope Alexander, manager.

Basketball practices will be held five nights a week. Games with other schools have not been arranged yet, but a number of neighboring high schools and colleges will be played. All girls interested in playing should come to the gym on Monday evening at 7 o'clock. Carl Farris will coach the team.

Sophomore Notice

Attention of the Sophomores is called to the fact that rows R S and T of the chapel seats are in the balcony of Gerrard hall.

CAROLINA HAS 5 WINS SINCE WAR

Virginia Holds Big Edge In Annual Thanksgiving Classic; Tar Heels Better Since 1919.

It's powerfully difficult to prognosticate about who's going to win when the football teams representing the universities of North Carolina and Virginia renew their 36-year rivalry in Kenan stadium here Thanksgiving day.

And no small wonder! For, believe it or not, neither team, save one time, was won a victory since the world war by a margin of more than 3 to 7 points. That exception was in 1920 when Virginia won 14 to 0.

Carolina holds the edge on the series since the war. The Tar Heels have won five times as compared to three for Virginia, and two games have been ties. Virginia, however, holds the edge on the victories for the 36-year series.

Five of the ten games played since the war have been on Cavalier territory, and Virginia has won three of the five. The Tar Heel victories on the road came when the undefeated South Atlantic champions of 1922 won by a 10 to 7 count and when the 1928 Tar Heels staged their thrilling last-minute finish for a 24-20 victory. Other games at Charlottesville have yielded victories for Virginia of 14 to 0 in 1920, 7 to 0 in 1924, and 3 to 0 in 1926.

It is another tale when you glance at the scores of games in North Carolina, for the Tar Heels have won three and tied two out of five starts.

The Tar Heels came back from the three year argument with the Germans and slipped a 6 to 0 licking over on Tony Campbell's Virginians here in 1919, and "Red" Johnson and Runt Lowe repeated the stunt 7 to 3 on Emerson field here in 1921. The 1923 and 1925 games were tied 0 to 0 and 3 to 3, but the Tar Heels decidated their new Kenan Memorial stadium here in 1927 with a 14 to 13 victory.

The Cavaliers have scored 70 points in the ten games, the Tar Heels 64, and the average difference between the scores has been just 4 points.

Chapel Hill High Romps Henderson

Chapel Hill high school swamped Henderson high 39 to 0 on Emerson field Friday.

Lawrence, local end, featured with four touchdowns after receiving passes. Upchurch and Council delivered one each.

The playing of Deshidds, Mc. Knight and Captain King was of stellar quality. Barber, sub for Council at quarter, looked good while Teague, Bob Ray and Pendergraph starred in the line. Henderson showed signs of good football but never threatened to score on the Hillians. Chapel Hill's next game is with Hillsboro at the county seat.

DUKE'S DEVILS BEAT WOLFPACK

Durham Team Keeps Pace With Tar Heels By Downing State In Sloppy Game 19 - 12.

Durham, Nov. 16.—(Special)—Duke beat N. C. State today, but that was about all. The final score was 19-12.

And the boys from West Durham didn't show any too much of their devilish and fiendish ferocity.

The Wolfpack backfield opened with an exhibition of "what the well coached football player doesn't do," just as "what the well dressed man doesn't wear."

Duke got the breaks—and two fumbles—and made two touchdowns.

Robeson, the incomparable, made a nifty catch of Sam Buie's 20-yard heave and added a 10-yard run for the first. Buie skirted and on a nice run for the second.

That was the first quarter.

Neither team could make concerted gains at the line—and right here is due a word of praise for the Duke line—it was on the whole mighty strong.

Half of Buie's heaves wound up in the arms of surprised Wolfies. Russ came in, and Russ can pass, but the Duke catchers were undetectable.

State got down the field once in the second half but Duke held. They exchanged fumbles and State got the better of the bargain, because Robeson's fumble was on Duke's 15-yard line. Duke and State were both surprised when "Flip" Edmondson, the big pass and run man, breezed through a wagon-hole at right tackle on the first play thereafter for a touchdown.

Beaver had replaced Dobeson, needless to say, when the Henderson boy broke the rules and fumbled on the 15-yard line.

Beaver got knocked looping on the kickoff, and P. O. Brewer came into the Duke backfield. This Winston-Salem lad packed the big punch of the day, and he is the principal man Carolina is going to have to watch. His driving was the principal reason Duke got the ball down to State's 13-yard line. Buie essayed to help him out here, and the ball went over.

Stout, State's center, spiraled the ball into the backfield and the Wolfies couldn't decide whose it was. Melton won the toss and recovered at the last minute—within inches of the goal. A poor kick and Duke had the ball on the 35-yard line and was tearing back again.

They weren't to be denied this time. Brewer assaulted the line a couple of times. The shifty Murray, who had just gotten going, made a nice spear of Buie's pass and it was first and ten on the five-yard line. Buie hit the line and Beaver plunged it over. Buie got the point.

Behind, 19 to 6, State pulled a fighting finish that the authors of "Sport Story would find it hard to equal.

Buie had a bad kickoff, and State returned to her own 46-yard line. Johnny Johnson retrieved his first-half errors with a beautiful catch of Edmondson's pass to move it to Duke's 30-yard line. Melton made six on another pass. Johnson leaped out of a mass of Devils to take another of Edmondson's heaves, and on a cutback and some nifty hip-moving got down to the 10-yard line.

Duke's line crumbled at this point. Johnson got nine yards on a first assault at left tackle, and crashed center for the touchdown.

UNIVERSITY TEAM PLAYS ONE MORE GAME IN STADIUM

Tar Heels Have Lost Only One To Georgia; Virginia and Duke Left.

With eight games behind it the University's football team is beginning its final drive for contests with Virginia and Duke. The climax of the season is usually the Virginia game, but with Duke showing a great deal of power now the game in Durham December 7 is expected to assume championship proportions and will share with the Cavalier contest the interest of football followers in the state.

The team's record to-date shows seven wins against one loss. Opening against Wake Forest the Tar Heels showed great strength in winning 48-0. Every available man was used in this contest. Continuing its great scoring power the team defeated Maryland at College Park 43-0. Picked to win over Georgia Tech, Carolina downed the Atlanta team 18-7. The Tar Heels returned from Atlanta and faced the University of Georgia on the following Saturday. Georgia was fresh from a 15-0 victory over Yale and rallied in the closing minutes of play to beat Carolina 19-12. Following the loss to Georgia the team began its scoring again and trampled V. P. I. 38-12 in Kenan Stadium. State College was next and fell 32-0. Yesterday the Tar Heels won from Davidson 26-7, the same score as last year. However, last year the team waited until the last part of the game to begin scoring. Yesterday it loosed its big guns in the first half of the contest.

Before the University of South Carolina's homecoming crowd the North Carolina team maintained its average of 32 points per game by trampling the Gamecocks 40-0.

The Cavaliers have played up and down football this season, but history shows that since the war all the Thanksgiving games have been close. Duke seems to have recovered from early season losses to eastern elevens and showed considerable scoring power against Louisiana State Saturday. The game December 7 between the neighboring institutions will close the season for both teams.

Wet Field and Davidson Fail To Halt Tar Heels; Ward Features 26-7 Win

Brock kicked to Branch on Carolina's 20 yard line. He returned to his own 35 yard line. Nash made one yard over left tackle. He lost a yard on the other side of the line. Ward added another yard through guard. Branch punted out of bounds on Davidson's 47 yard line. After a pass and two tries through the line, Brock was forced to kick. Branch received the ball on his own 20 yard line and brought it back 11 yards. Milton intercepted a Carolina pass on the third down. The ball lay on the Carolina 45 yard line.

Ward knocked down a Davidson pass. Spaulding accidentally tripped Parrish as he was running to catch another pass far out of his reach and the officials gave the ball to Davidson on Carolina's 28 yard line. Spaulding made good his error by intercepting Fraley's pass on his own 21 yard line.

Two consecutive five yard penalties advanced the ball to the 31 yard line for a first down after the Wildcat line had stiffened for three downs. Three first downs, aided by a 20 yard gain off tackle by Ward placed the ball on Davidson's three yard line. Nash carried the ball across for a touchdown. Carolina 26, Davidson 7. The third quarter ended with the ball in Davidson's possession in midfield. On every few plays, Coach Collins ran in substitutes. The crowd gave Lipscomb a hearty hand when he was removed to make way for Gilbreath. He had played an unbeatable game at center. The rain let up for a few moments and both teams exchanged the ball several times when they failed to gain. Davidson's fighting spirit was coming to the fore to stave off a rout. The line charged through the muck with undeniable pluck. Carolina plays were stopped before they reached the line of scrimmage.

The usual hopeless barrage was eliminated by the unwieldy ball which necessitated a cleaning every few minutes by the referee. The Tar Heels held on to the pigskin for most of the final period, relinquishing it only after the fourth down. A penalty for slugging was meted out to Fysal and Davidson was given the ball on Carolina's 20 yard line near the end of the contest. On the second down, Parrish skidded through right tackle for eight yards. It was Davidson's last and only chance to score.

The Carolina line stiffened. King lost two yards at left tackle. A pass Brohardt to Proctor was incomplete. Branch punted far down the field to Davidson's 40 yard line to ward off the last Wildcat threat. The game ended with the ball in Davidson's possession on their own 21 yard line.

But Only for Moment: Horace Williams Enjoys Joke on Himself

Horace Williams, professor of philosophy, went into a local food emporium Tuesday morning in search of some steak for lunch. He asked for a piece of tenderloin second-cut. There wasn't any.

Mr. Williams signified that he might accept canned tongue. The clerk brought out a strip of tongue thirteen or fourteen inches long, stating that it had once been canned but had recently been taken out.

"Then, I won't have to pay for the can," observed Mr. Williams playfully. "How much is the tongue?"

"Eighty cents a pound."

"How much would half of it be?" inquired the philosopher, eyeing an imaginary spot in the center of the strip of meat.

"Forty cents, Sir," he was told in the prompt, cheerful manner of food salesmen in this center of culture.

Chuckling over the joke on himself, Professor Williams left the store and wended his way to his classroom in the Alumni building.

High School Annual

Staff Completed With Rena Henry As Editor-in-Chief

Pupils at the Chapel Hill high school have already started working on their 1929-30 annual. If sufficient volume of advertising can be secured, the edition will be larger than last year's, covering the year's activities in the school as a whole, according to Claude Council, business manager of the publication.

The annual staff is complete, with advertising solicitors, assistants, artists and others. This year each class in the high school has one pupil representative on the staff, except the seniors, who have two representatives. Penelope Wilson and Harold Ernst are the senior representatives; Elsie Lawrence represents the juniors, Billy Weaver the sophomores and Lucille Bennett the freshman class.

Rena Henry is editor-in-chief, and Nathan Walker is assistant editor. Miss Susan Rose is faculty adviser for the staff of workers. The high school pupils are planning to stage an amateur circus soon to help raise money for the annual. The dramatic club will put on an entertainment and students will sell candy and otherwise attempt to supplement advertising revenue.

Don't Worry

Cornell University has applied for a patent for a new and inexpensive process of making milk sugar, a process discovered by Dr. Paul Sharp, professor of dairy chemistry at the University. The process is said to yield a milk sugar not formerly used on the market, which may be substitutel for ordinary table table sugar.

Survey Of Development Of State Universities Made By H. W. Chase

with the struggle over the charter of King's College in 1754."

In his review of this stage of transition, the speaker declared that all attempts, from the struggle involving King's College up until the climax reached in the Dartmouth College case, "failed, and their failure delayed for long periods of time or prevented altogether the foundation of state universities in the areas in which those older institutions were located. Of the colonial group only one (Rutgers) is now a state university by the standards of this association. Of the New England group, Vermont was the only state to provide in its early constitution for a single state university. In was, in short, by the creation of new institutions that the movement was destined to proceed . . .

"In two sections of the country the state university was to find its origins. In the South, the colonial tradition had involved the migration of students who desired college education to the North or to Europe, and the field was therefore for the most part clear for the formation of institutions representing the newer public sentiment; in the middle west all was plastic, and as settlement took place, public concern with education naturally reflected itself in the development of state universities."

Georgia, with a university chartered in 1784, holds the oldest charter of any Original state university serving throughout its whole history as a state institution, Of the state constitutions adopted before 1800, several, most prominent among which are those of Pennsylvania and North Carolina, provided for universities.

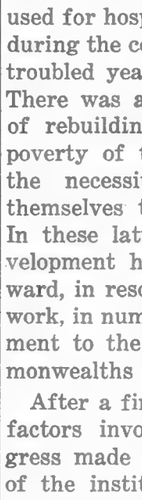
As for the part played by the Southern state universities in the antebellum South, Dr. Chase indicated that the striking progress of higher education in the South up to 1860 has never been adequately portrayed. He offered figures, statistics, and quotations from writers of the period to illustrate his point, referring often to the Universities of South Carolina and Virginia.

Of the Virginia School he said in part:

"Founded by Jefferson as the capstone of a state system of education it reflected both his conviction that the only salvation of democracy was the illumination of the darkness of ignorance, and his faith in freedom, with its independent schools, its a student body reaching nearly elective system, its faculty government and its early developed honor system. With a strong faculty and a student body reaching nearly a thousand toward the end of its ante-bellum career, it held a place of power and influence in the South."

"The Civil War, of course, brought ruin to the Southern universities. Their student bodies and faculties were dispersed, their resources disappeared, their buildings were destroyed, used for hospitals, or abandoned during the conflict or during the troubled years which followed. There was a long, slow process of rebuilding due both to the poverty of their states and to the necessity of readjusting themselves to new conditions. In these latter years their development has again gone forward, in resources, in quality of work, in numbers, and in adjustment to the needs of the commonwealths they serve."

After a final summary of the factors involved and the progress made in the development of the institutions the speaker turned to a discussion of the obligations of the forty nine universities as they have been established in the past century and a quarter. He said in part that "there is a very real sense in which all universities, however founded or maintained, are simply universities. "They are, universities in spirit and temper. But they are also universities with a peculiar obligation to the life of their commonwealths. Growing as they did out of the public concern in higher education, their traditions have inevitably been those of democracy and liberalism. This has been manifest in the point of view from which they have regarded their public duties."



"It is hoped etaoin to arh m

"It is to be hoped that these institutions will keep open permanently the door of opportunity."

In conclusion Dr. Crase turned to the future declaring that "Again, in the tradition of the modern state university is the conception of the direct responsibility to the state through extension work, service of its faculty on boards and commissions, the loan of its services for fact-finding, in other words, the conception of itself as not only a bulwark for the future, but a servant of the present.

"It seems fair to say that the state university of today still holds by those impulses of a democratic civilization that gave it birth. Here is both a satisfaction and a warning for the future. For I do not believe that, in the long run, there is anything that can replace in a state university that sense of obligation to its commonwealth as a whole on which it was founded. If the state university should lose that sense, then we may indeed expect to see once more repeated that struggle of a people to express its ideas in institutional form and the creation of other types of institutions adapted to the spirit of the age. The origin and development of state universities shows, if it shows anything at all, how any generation tends to create in some fashion the forms that it feels express its own necessities."

Town Begins Drive To Stop Parking In Congested Areas

New Regulations Issued By Board of Aldermen To Restrict Traffic in Chapel Hill.

A drive to eliminate parking in congested districts, especially on the campus, was launched this morning by the Safety Committee of the Chapel Hill board of Aldermen, according to P. L. Burch, chairman of the committee.

Traffic policemen will leave copies of the ordinance regulating parking in all cars parked in the restricted areas, and the license number of the car will be taken. In case of a second violation owners of the cars will be summoned to appear before Recorder's Court.

"No Parking" signs have been placed in the restricted areas for the benefit of the drivers.

To aid the enforcement of the ordinance a new parking space has been established back of Manning hall and in front of Emerson field.

The "No Parking" ordinance was made to apply to the campus by the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen at the request of University officials.

The ordinance reads as follows:

Ordinance Regulating Parking —Town of Chapel Hill—Passed June 13, 1927:

BE IT ORDAINED BY THE BOARD OF ALDERMEN OF THE TOWN OF CHAPEL HILL:

SECTION 1: That no motor vehicle shall be parked on the north side of Cameron Avenue from Columbia Street to Raleigh Street.

SECTION 2. That no motor vehicle shall be parked on any parkway area, or any space which has been planted with grass or shrubbery in any part of the Town.

SECTION 3. That no motor vehicle shall be parked in any other place or section where there is displayed an official sign of the Police Division, bearing the notice, "No Parking."

SECTION 4. That each person violating any section of this ordinance shall be subject to fine of $50.00 for each and every offense.

In commenting upon the drive, Chairman Burch stated to a representative of the Tar Heel yesterday afternoon that the heavy traffic congestion this fall has made necessary a concerted effort on the part of the town officials to enforce the parking ordinance.

ETHICS SUBJECT OF CHAPEL TALK BY DR. WILLIAMS

Professor Emphasizes Importance of Honesty As A Trait.

Professor Horace Williams spoke to the sophomores in their first chapel meeting in Gerrard hall Monday morning. Touching in a general way upon the subject of ethics, Professor Williams emphasized the importance of honesty as a trait of a noble character.

Professor Williams began his speech with a unique illustration. He wrote on a black board two figure 7's and then asked the sophomores what result he would obtain by bringing two together. He received the answers 49, 14, 1, and 0. Professor Williams admitted that any of the answers might be taken as correct, but he pointed out that this was the only possibility of variation in the process. The two figures must remain exactly the same.

Professor Williams deplored certain indications of the prevalent laxity in honesty. He mentioned the fact that in the last eight years five thousand banks in the United States have failed as a result of dishonesty. He said, also, that one of his classes had been willing to agree that there was not a single absolutely truthful man in the University. Professor Williams told men he had known who would not lie and lamented the lack of such strong individuals today.

Professor Williams holds that it is not enough for a man to be honest most of the time, Such a character is not dependable. Complete and persevering honesty is a necessary attribute of any character that stands out, and it is such individuals that the world of today needs.

Jean Gros Marionettes To Appear Here Soon

Second Student Entertainment Will Be Held Here Thursday In Tin Can.

The Jean Gros French Marionettes who are to appear at the Tin Can on Thursday, November 21, under the auspices of the student entertainment committee, represent the most complete marionette theatre in the world. Two performances are to be given, a special matinee for children ,and a regular night performance for adults. In the afternoon, "Uncle Wigley at the Circus," a play by Howard R. Garis, will be presented while "Skippy," by Percy Crosby, will be given at night.

Until a few years ago marionettes were presented on very small stages ranging from six to ten feet. The puppets were very small, generally about 12 to 18 inches high. The result was that for years the marionettes made appearances only in the vaudeville theatres where they were looked upon as a novelty that could be enjoyed for a period of a few minutes.

In the past seven or eight years a number of companies have attempted to enlarge the idea of presentation, but it was not until Jean Gros bravely started a tour with his stage that covers about 30 feet of space that the American public was able to realize that marionettes could be taken seriously as an integral part of the theatre and capable of presenting truly great plays with effectiveness.

Whereas other companies have carried up to two thousand pounds of baggage these French puppeteers have an equipment of over four thousand pounds, representing a complete miniature theatre, miniature, however, only in the fact that the equipment is set upon another stage. Intricate lighting effects, backdrops, wings, curtains of every description, famous transformation scenes and over 150 puppets are carried.

Phi Calendar

Phi calendar for tonight:

Resolved: That self-help is not to be encouraged except in cases where there are no other sources of income.

Resolved: That the state of North Carolina should repeal the law preventing vaudeville shows coming to Chapel Hill.

Resolved: That the Phi assembly does not agree with the recent action of the Baptist state convention in condemning such practices as dancing, card playing, and petting.

Charnley Speaks

William Charnley, C. P. A., president of the state board of accountants, lectured here Friday to the students of accounting at the University.

Mr. Charnley has been doing auditing work for 15 years, and it was said by all those who heard his talk on cotton mill auditing that his subject was an instructive one; as cotton and its milling represents a good portion of the state's industry.

COKER ATTENDS MEETING

Stray Collie Fails To Find Hospitality In Quadrangle

(By Stanley Weinberg)

A medium-sized white collie arrived on the campus last week. Large, dirty brown areas on his head and side proclaimed his collie blood, but the collie was evidently only one of many breeds that had flowered into this homeless specimen of Orange county doghood.

Perhaps the newcomer did not get on well with the other Carolina dogs; perhaps the others had neglected to plan an orientation program for him. Anyway, after two or three days on the campus, the collie had not yet made any dog friends or learned the ropes of Chapel Hill dogdom.

In the evenings he generally hung around the dorms in the easternmost quadrangle; he even tried to crash several rooms on the first floor of "I" dorm. The dog had to be pushed and dragged out of two rooms before he learned that "I" dorm, for some strange reason, would not lodge brown and white collie dogs of uncertain ancestry.

That discouraged him. Saturday evening he shook the dust of the unhospitable quad from his hind legs and headed for the main campus. No one knows where he got his supper, but at 8 o'clock he decided it was bedtime. So he trotted up the library steps, sniffed the mats lying before the doors, pondered, and finally decided the mat at the right was the most comfortable. He curled up on the mat, put his head where the light would not shine on it, and calmly went to sleep.

Students going to the library after supper found him there. As they came up the steps and saw the dog sleeping, many of them lowered their voices. Some, about to enter the library through the right door, saw that they would disturb him, and turned to go through one of the other doors. None of them woke the sleeping dog.

At 10 o'clock, when the library closed, the departing students saw the collie still there asleep. As they walked carefully by, they wished him a good night and pleasant dreams.

Tobacco Chewer Draws Ire Of Female When He Misses Mark

Week-end in Chapel Hill. No football games. No fires. No automobile accidents. No lightning and thunder storms. Nothing, nothing to break the dreadful monotony of an actionless Saturday and Sunday. But wait—late Sunday afternoon finds that Chapel Hill has not been utterly devoid of excitement.

Five students are sitting on the wall near Vance dormitory. They all hail from approximately the same remote section of the state, where the old-time recreation of tobacco-chewing has not been scrapped for these new-fangled cigarettes. And as is the wont of any group who have something common among them recall by-gone days whenever the opportunity presents itself, these five young men are soon recalling the "good old days" when they used to gleefully chew 'tobaccy" on their way to the district school. It isn't long before one of them, overcome by the pungent nostalgia that such conversation causes him, to suggest that some good, old-fashioned "chawing" wouldn't be at all amiss. Presently all are assiduously moving their upper and lower molars with evident gusto, in a more or less rythmical unison. Soon this, too, becomes boring. Finally, a contest is hit upon as a sure means to arouse life and luster in these jaded youths.

A lone, discarded matchbox, lying near the curb, is pressed into service as a target. And the group continues sitting on the wall, some ten or fifteen feet away from the mark. The object of the contest is, of course, to see who can most deftly arrange, and eject a, what is known to all devotees of the art, wad of thoroughly masticated

The Mexicans are evidently becoming more civilized. They held a presidential election Sunday and only 25 men were killed.

Uncle Andy Mellon has announced additional income tax reductions to "meet the emergency created by the stock market collapse." How're you gonna make up for the decreased revenue, Andy—raise the farmers' taxes?

Mrs. Ruth Dadourian, wife of Professor H. M. Dadourian, of Trinity College, charges that long skirts and tight waists will "produce a psychology adverse to the further progress of women." Not to mention that they'll take much of the joy out of life for the mere male.

A "Young Guard" has replaced the famed Republican Old Guard leadership in the Senate as the result of a new split, according to "our Washington correspondent." Judging from the length of time it has taken the Senate to get nowhere on the tariff question, the Old Guard was ripe for retirement.

Sarcastic Professors

College professors frequently characterize their students as intellectually lazy, lacking in initiative, indifferent toward the process of acquiring a real education. While these professorial allegations are generally based upon fact, the methods employed by the faculty men in bringing the undergraduates to a realization of their deficiences are often productive of more harmful than desirable effects.

Thinly-veiled contempt and biting sarcasm are the favorite weapons of attack of many instructors in their attempts to arouse their classes to greater scholastic achievement. From an undergraduate point of view the demands of the instructors are sometimes highly unreasonable, and if failure to comply with these demands invokes a flow of caustic invective, often personal, it is only natural that the recipients should be resentful. Instead of arousing them to greater efforts, such attacks incite the students to a sullen resentment, a discouraged attitude which is conducive to increased indifference.

In any event, we believe that the instructor who habitually derides his classes and subjects them to bitter denunciation is making a great mistake. Reasonable suggestions as to how the obvious deficiencies of the students may be overcome, unaccompanied by sarcasm or rancor, have a vastly more desirable effect than the violent outbursts of contemptuous scorn frequently indulged in by many professors.

Government's Position In Education

Functions of the federal government in education as defined by the national advisory committee on education, appointed last spring by Secretary Wilbur, are categorized as follows:

"Gather, compile, interpret, and disseminate adequate statistics of national scope at all levels of education.

"Conduct research on basic educational problems of national significance.

"Maintain an adequate library of education works and make it accessible to the public.

"Furnish experts on request to co-operate in state or community surveys in education.

"Maintain a legislative digest and information service to which state legislatures could look for information concerning the laws of other states and of foreign countries concerning education."

These functions are not fundamentally different from those which the government has been exercising for the past several years, since the federal bureau of education was established. However, it is to be expected that the role of government in education instead of remaining a practical nonentity as it has been to a great extent in the past, will assume in the future a more prominent position because of the increased co-operation being given it by the educational agencies of the country.

This co-operation is manifest in the recent appointment by the National Association of State Universities of a committee to work with the national advisory committee on education. Representatives of all cabinet members will also confer with the committee. Aside from these two groups, the committee itself is composed of fifty-one members representing national, state, and independent organizations interested in education in all sections. President Hoover has given his sanction to the program.

The work of this giant committee, if it is possible for a group of such proportions to accomplish anything at all, will consist in providing the government with "the proper chart to guide our educational course," to use the words of Secretary Wilbur. This chart, defining the relationship between government and education, was omitted by the framers of the Constitution in drawing up that document on account of a failure to reach a satisfactory compromise between those who advocated government regulation and those who desired a policy of hands-off. It is hoped by those who are back of this latest development in the government's program that the relation between government and education will be clarified.

An interesting speculation confronts us as we ponder over the situation: Will the committee's effort make possible a gradual gaining of control of education by the federal government, or will it cause government regulation in this sphere to become an absolute improbability? Indubitably much depends upon the attitude and spirit with which the members of the committee set about their task.

The fitful tracing of a portal;
But in the flesh it is immortal.

The body dies; the body's beauty lives.
So evenings die, in their green going,
A wave, interminably flowing.

So gardens die, their meek breath scenting
The cowl of winter, done repenting.
So maidens die, to the auroral
Celebration of a maiden's choral.

That night was fireworks
Out to Riverview—
Gold and red and purple
Bustin' over you.
"Beautiful!" you says then,
"That's how love should be!
Burn wild and die quick—
That's the love for me!"

Now you're gone for good . . . say,
Wasn't they no other way?

Readers' Opinions

A SUGGESTION CONCERNING THE MAGAZINE

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

May I make of your columns a medium to express the need of an improvement which I think might be made in your literary supplement, The Carolina Magazine?

In the recent issue of this publication I have found that an unusual number of typographical errors have been allowed to go uncorrected. For example, in one feature alone I discovered a large number of mistakes similar to these that I quote: "th ealready, marke, idd, see malmost, and approzimately."

Machine transportations and the errors of compositors have come to be more or less accepted in newspaper work in which writing, editing, and printing are necessarily matters of great haste; but it seems a mark of carelessness for so many mistakes to appear in a paper for which two weeks are allowed to assemble and publish material.

Furthermore, the articles which appear in the magazine are of the general type which one reads with a great deal of intellectual seriousness; therefore, the sudden obtrusion of an error in spelling, however slight, often serves to mar the mood into which the reader has fallen while trying to appreciate the story that he may be reading.

It is my opinion that the editor of the Magazine might improve the quality of his book, even though it be but slightly, by a bit more attention to this minor detail.

This is merely a suggestion from
AN APPRECIATIVE READER

JACKSON AND LEE YET ALIVE?

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

We read in history of Jackson and Lee, champions of the South in time of peace and conflict alike. Yet in Sunday's issue of this publication an alleged Jackson and Lee, gentlemen of unmistakable purpose employing a style which we've seen before, took issue with the present writer regarding his comments in an editorial of October 24 entitled The Stagnant South. Using a series of puns and affirmative citations bearing added negative accents, these alleged persons expressed themselves as being in utter disagreement with the recent work of this assistant editor which he chose to call The Progressive South. For purposes which they declare to be the edification of this writer, the aforementioned contributors to the enlightenment of the student body developed their written disagreement through the medium of that time-honored and very persuasive process which is commonly phrased "evading the issue." (Although the article to which a reply is now being made was signed by two alleged persons, the present writer observed—not without considerable amusement—that the style and attitude of Mr. X seemed to entirely overshadow the style and attitude of Mr. Y. Well, it may be that that is quite characteristic.

The criticism offered by "Jackson and Lee" was decidedly destructive and had a sophomoric tinge of finality second to none. Destructive criticism never did do any good. It is often the weapon of persons who habitually doubt everything and who have an exalted esteem for their own opinions.

What is the origin of this controversy which has included as yet nothing more than personal opinions variously expressed? The matter goes back to an editorial of October 24 which heaped no small amount of destructive criticism on the Southland, resorting even to alleged stagnation in what seemed to be an attempt to give the South a black eye. The writer of this original editorial and those two gentlemen who published a corroborating treatise in last Sunday's issue of this paper seem not to be fully aware of the denotations and connotations of the word stagnant. The term admits of no activity save that of retrogression. To refer to the South as the Stagnant South is, in effect, to say that nothing ever takes place within its bounds that is progressive, that admits of any change, or that represents any improvement. These things are utterly foreign to a condition of stagnancy. The contention that the South is not undergoing changes from time to time, or that she knows nothing of progress as a result of changes is so unreasonable as to warrant no further comment. Yet the gentleman who wrote the original object of this controversy and those who later substantiated his contentions say just this when they refer to the Southland as The Stagnant South. These writers undoubtedly chose the wrong word to convey their ideas. The thing seems to have been a bit too strongly expressed. Had the editorial contended that the South does not measure up to the standards of other sections of the country and had it borne a title commensurate with that idea, there would be no room now for controversy. The rapidly growing educational and industrial institutions of the South—to say nothing of her people—attest the fact that she is not a stagnant region.

Is there any reason why southerners should admire the same things that northerners or westerners do? Is there any reason why they should bow down to and worship the various artistic works of other sections of the country? Most certainly there is not. Is everything dependent upon appreciation of the "fine arts"? Is there nothing else that is ever worth consideration?

True it is that "some people do not consider roads and buildings evidences of intellectual culture." In fact, no such claim has been made. It is true, however, that the continuous construction of roads and buildings is utterly foreign to a circumstance of stagnancy. Such a condition is not even acquainted with advancement of any sort—whether it be artistic or not.

This writer's scribal adversaries dwelt at length upon the lamentably high percentage of illiteracy in the South. Without hesitation we admit that the percentage is too high. But does this add anything to the contention that the South is stagnant? Certainly not. Even if there were not one person in the whole section who could read and write, the South would not necessarily be stagnant. Is there no advancement outside of the realm of intellectual development as dictated by the dignitaries of other sections of the nation? Is there no activity save that of the mental man? Stagnancy, nevertheless, implies total inactivity in the direction of advancement and betterment of conditions. We recommend a more careful selection of words hereafter.

If the South is a stagnant region why is it that hundreds of students come from the North, East, and West to attend such institutions as the Universities of North Carolina, Virginia, and Georgia? Why is it that half of the student body of Davidson College is drawn from other sections of the country? Perhaps the aforementioned scribal adversaries could muster some first-hand information on this subject. Facts in this connection seem to indicate that stagnation is not confined to the Southland: Furthermore, if the South is stagnant, why is it that these students who come from other states stay down here after they get here, and why is it that the number of students who migrate to this and other southern universities in steadily increasings? One would think that modern means of communication would be effective in conveying the news of this stagnancy to other sections of the nation. It is hardly probable that all of these "foreign students" are doing missionary work in the South.

"We admit of the great traffic in boll weevils, fruit flies, and cotton fleas, but maintain that a one crop civilization is stagnant." Thus spake the critics in their learned work. These experts seem to have a flagrant disregard for common observation. They seem to look upon the great tobacco, cotton, and peach crops of North Carolina as one crop. This is most certainly something new in the realm of agrarian classification. If there is any advantage in such a grouping, it is negligible and not recognizable.

"Rather than chaotic the South was apathetic until a few years ago." These are the words of "Jackson and Lee." This statement implies that the South is no longer chaotic. In other words, she has advanced from a state of chaos to a condition which at any rate is not chaotic. Well, if this points to stagnancy there have been recent shifts in the English language of which the masses have not been advised as yet. How could the South advance steadily and still be stagnant, as the aforesaid persons suggest? We ask you.—J. C. W.

Tar Heel Coaches Begin Work For Virginia Game

Contest With Cavaliers Likely To Be Hard One; Scouts Report Old Dominion Team Has Good Air Defense.

PLAYERS IN GOOD SHAPE

Chuck Collins and his coaching partners, Bob Fetzer and Bill Cerney, today turned their attention to the approaching Thanksgiving Day classic with Virginia.

The 26 to 7 victory over Davidson gave the Tar Heels a record of seven wins in eight games to date and a total of 257 points scored, an average of 32 a game. This places the Tar Heels third in Conference scoring. Tulane which occupies second place, is only one point ahead of North Carolina.

Carolina came out of the Davidson battle in good shape. Halfback Magner and quarterback Wyrick who were on the injured list, weren't used abainst the Wildcats, and with another week's rest, should be in fine fettle. "Puny" Harper, gigantic tackle, was the only casualty of the Davidson game, and he should be in shape again soon.

Light workouts were the only order today, but Coach Collins inferred that the work would be heavy during the eight practice days left before the Virginia game.

Scouts who saw Virginia tie Washington and Lee at 13-13 Saturday reported today that the team looked a 100 percent improved over the week before and that Virginia can be counted on for a great fight.

Special points made were that the Cavaliers stopped the Generals' passing attack cold, while successfully launching an air game of their own; that the Virginia line averages better than 190 pounds and shows seven Seniors; and that Johnny Sloan heads a fine crew of Cavalier backs, averaging 180 pounds.

The seat sale for the Virginia game has picked up rapidly in recent days, but University Athletic Association officials stated tonight that plenty of good seats are available.

(By J. C. Eagles)

Saturday's games further served to narrow the field of undefeated contenders for the Southern Conference title. Tennessee eliminated Vanderbilt and pushed forward as perhaps the strongest aspirant to the championship. Tulane remained Tennessee's only rival by maintaining its clean slate with a comparatively easy victory over Sewanee. At present it looks as if both the Vols and the Green Wave will finish the season with perfect records. However, the unexpected can happen and quite often does in football. Tulane has only one more conference battle. They meet L. S. U. and statistics concede them a win. Nevertheless there is the possibility that they may fall. Tennessee meets Kentucky and South Carolina. While they are practically certain to defeat the Gamecocks, they will have strong opponents in the Kentucky eleven. In the event that they and Tulane should both slip and the Tar Heels should win over Virginia and Duke, then the crown would rest on Collin's charges. All this is mere speculation and very unlikely to happen. However, it does show that the Tar Heels still have a chance to cop the honors.

Only a few upsets occurred during the week-end. Perhaps the greatest was Maryland's unexpected rout of the V. P. I. cadets. Virginia and Washington and Lee played according to expectations, neither team having been considered far superior to the other, and the game ended in a 13-13 tie.

Tennessee and Vandy held the greatest interest for they were fighting for the conference crown. Hack and Mack ran wild. That tells the story. The Vols outplayed the Vandy eleven in all departments and scored a decisive two touchdown victory.

Alabama, as predicted, succeeded in keeping Georgia Tech down. Led by Tony Holm, Alabama marched to victory while holding Tech completely in check. Holm carried the ball more than half the time and was the big gun in the Tide attack. He established himself as the most outstanding fullback in the south and drove over both the Alabama touchdowns. Warner Mizell's excellent punting was the only outstanding point in Tech's play.

Duke maintained a clean conference slate by nosing out a win over North Carolina State. The Devils are playing their first season in the conference and a scarcity of conference foes precludes their having any claim on the title even though they win the remainder of their games, which seems unlikely.

Florida, slated as a big threat at the opening of the season, continued the mediocre football which has characterized her play this fall and defeated Clemson by one touchdown.

Thus it is seen that Saturday's slate provided very few games of more than sectional interest and that there were very few upsets. Games scheduled for Thanksgiving hold the center of the stage now.

Dr. Wilson, the University Librarian, spent last Friday and Saturday out of town. He was engaged in looking up material relative to the early history of Caldwell county.

High Scorer

JIM WARD LEADS STATE SCORERS

Tar Heels Have More Than Double Number of Points of Any Other North Carolina Team.

Jimmy Ward, veteran Tar Heel back, is leading the individual scoring in North Carolina with 54 points. The flashy back added 12 points to his total to gain on Yank Spaulding and to preserve his lead against the onslaught of Williams, Elon star. Ward's total represents nine touchdowns and no extra points.

He is followed by Williams with 47 points and Spaulding with 46 points. Spaulding made only one point of the Tar Heels' 26 against Davidson Saturday. He place-kicked a point after touchdown. He has now scored ten points, the largest number of any of the high scorers, via the extra point route.

Magner, Nash, Branch and Slusser have all scored more than 20 points during the current season.

The Tar Heels are far out in front in team scoring with a total of 257 points against Elon's 117 and Duke's 114. No other North Carolina team has as many as a hundred points this season.

FROSH DROP CLOSE GAME TO MARYLAND

The Tar Babies took an 18-12 licking from the Maryland freshmen Saturday. Although the Old Liners won on points, they were decisively outplayed by a fighting Tar Baby aggregation. It was a rough and tough scrap, packed full of thrills, with good playing by both teams.

The Tar Babies took the ball on the opening kickoff and, using a varied attack, drove through to Maryland's three yard line. McNeil hit the line for a touchdown. The try for extra point failed. Maryland received the kickoff but the frosh line held and Maryland kicked out of bounds on the two yard line. Carolina kicked back, but the wind caught the ball and carried it back to the seven yard line. In three plays Maryland scored a touchdown, but failed to make the extra point. Play was about even for the rest of the half.

Taking the opening kickoff of the second half, Carolina went down the field 85 yards, but there the Maryland defense tightened and on fourth down Chandler's pass grounded over the goal line. The Tar Babies came right back, however, and got inside the Maryland 20 yard line seven times. Each time Maryland held, passes grounding over the goal line five times. With five minutes left to play the Tar Baby center made a bad pass and the Old Liners recovered on the 40 yard line. Then, showing the only sustained drive of the game, they took it over for a touchdown, but failed to make the extra point. Then the apparently beaten Carolinians showed their famous "fight" and, getting possession of the ball, rushed it to Maryland's 40 yard line. Chandler tossed a 20 yard pass to Nichols, who ran 20 more for a touchdown. The Babies failed to make the extra point. Maryland took the kickoff and hopes were short-lived, for, with but a minute left to play, Palmero, an ex-marine, ran 65 yards from scrimmage for a touchdown. They failed to make the extra point.

The Tar Babies' stars were Chandler and McNeil on offense, and McDade, Sharkey, Collins and Philpot on defense. Palmero, rugged ex-marine, was the outstanding player for Maryland.

Cross Country Captain

Carolina supporters are hoping that Minor Barkley, captain of the Tar Heel harriers, will carry away first place honors in the Southern Conference meet here next Saturday in spite of Georgia's Bob Young and V. P. I's Miles and Farmer. The Statesville boy has been a consistent performer this year and has shown up exceptionally well in the past three dual meets, finishing fourth in the V. P. I. meet, among the first five Carolina men in the N. C. State meet, and first in the Duke meet.

This is Barkley's third year on the Tar Heel cross country team. In 1927 he finished seventh in the Southern Conference meet and last year came in third, following Young of Georgia and Penn of V. P. I. Close observers of the Tar Heel harriers have noted Barkley's steady improvement and expect him to come through in the meet next Saturday.

Class B Teams To Play Friday

The class B football championship games are to be played next Friday, November 22, in both the western and eastern divisions of the state.

In the east, Oxford will meet Ayden at Oxford. In the west, Concord will play Mount Airy at Concord. The winners of these games will play for the championship of the state in their class, which includes the majority of the high schools, in Kenan stadium here on Friday, November 29.

ESPERANTO CLUB MEETS TODAY IN MURPHY BUILDING

At the meeting of the Esperanto club which takes place this afternoon from 5 to 6 o'clock in the English assembly room in Murphey hall the foundation will be laid for the year's work. Students interested in learning the language should come to the meeting even though they did not attend the first one.

The students will soon start a correspondence with other clubs all over the world. In a very short time they will be able to write letters to members of clubs in France and Germany. Letters will also be written to people in this country.

Dr. E. C. Metzenthin, who has charge of the club here, says that it is absolutely necessary that the students who wish to join come to the meeting this afternoon; and that although a large number of people showed interest in the new language by coming to the last meeting, he is anxious that the attendance increase since any number of students are permitted to participate in the activities of the club.

Meyer And Graham Away Last Week

During the past week H. D. Meyer of the University faculty has been on a speaking tour in the western part of the state.

On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday he attended and addressed the state parent-teachers association meeting at Hendersonville.

Frank Graham, also of the University faculty, addressed the convention in Hendersonville. Mr. Meyer, who spoke at several other places on this trip, was back in his office in Alumni building yesterday.

Inn Filled

The expected crowds from all over the country which will be in Chapel Hill to see the Carolina-Virginia game on Thanksgiving day are increasing daily as may be seen from reports that all available space at the Carolina Inn has been reserved for that day. From the office of the graduate manager of athletics comes the statement that tickets to the game are selling fast, and that a capacity crowd is predicted.

U. S. C. GRID HEROES SUMMER ON MOVIE LOTS

Red Grange's idea of toting huge blocks of ice during the summer months, in order to prepare for the Fall football season, was all wrong. Eastern football stars who work on cement gangs and do other hard labor to condition themselves for the autumn gridiron session are making a mistake. They should enter the movies and sit around on sets playing cards with chorus girls between scenes, or just rest!

These are the views of Jeff Cravath, former All-American center, and now coach of Denver University, incidentally one of the finest football players the West ever produced.

Cravath spent the summer acting as technical adviser at the First National Studios in Burbank, where "The Forward Pass" was made with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Loretta Young in the featured roles.

Practically the entire 1929 football squad of the University of Southern California has been working all summer in football pictures. While this may sound as though they were playing football all summer, such is not the case. They worked in a few days' football scrimmage for the pictures, but the greater part of the time was spent on sets, as they played parts in the picture, as well as football.

Much of the time on the set was spent in waiting for the cameramen, the director or the Vitaphone experts to prepare a scene. The football heroes spent their time playing cards with other members of the cast, or with the beautiful chorus girls under contract to First National, for the girls rehearsed in the same stage that was used for many scenes of "The Forward Pass."

"After two or three months of picture work, these boys should be right in trim for their preliminary football training next fall. Of course, not many squads have the chance to work in pictures. If they did, I think it would be a good thing for all concerned."

"The Forward Pass," at the Carolina theatre today is a story of football and love on the campus, and is directed by Eddie Cline. The cast, in addition to Fairbanks, Miss Young and the U. S. C. football team includes Phyllis Crane, Dorothy Gulliver, Bert Rome, Lane Chandler and a host of other youngsters.

Five cases were tried before recorder's court yesterday morning.

C. T. Wright, white, charged with possessing intoxicating liquors for sale, was given six months on the chain gang.

Leo Merritt, white, charged with carrying a concealed weapon, was fined $50 and costs.

John Reavis, negro, charged with possessing intoxicating liquors for the purpose of sale, was given five months on the chain gang.

James Morrison, negro, charged with assault upon the person of Chaney Greer, negro woman, was given four months on the chain gang.

Jack Hargrave, negro, charged with assault with fists and abusive language, was fined $10 and costs and doctor's fee of $5.

Engineers To Meet Thursday Evening

The next meeting of the University student chapter of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, national electrical engineering society, will be held Thursday evening at 7:15 in Phillips hall.

At this meeting talks will be given by members of the senior electrical engineering class on the electric plants visited by the seniors when they attended the meetings of the North Carolina section of the A. I. E. E. held at Charlotte.

While in Charlotte on November 23 and 24 the group attended the banquet session of the North Carolina section and made an inspection of the Duke Power Company's development at River Bend and Mountain Island.

The seniors also inspected the development of the Carolina Light and Power Company at inum Company of America at Badin.

The talks Thursday evening will be descriptions of the plants visited while on this trip.

TOBACCO CHEWER DRAWS IRE OF FEMALE; HE MISSED

tobacco in such a manner that it will land squarely and surely upon the matchbox. Certain rules are hastily drawn up, such as no bounces are to be allowed nor can the neck be craned so far forward as to obtain an unfair advantage. "Red" is first. And many are the cries of exultation that arise from the bunch as the poor target is most rudely discolored, time and time, and time again. Thus it continues for fifteen minutes.

Attracted by the jubilant noises, five girls, who had, until now, been seated in a parked car farther up the street, walk down to see the contest. Arriving at the "field," they immediately get into the spirit of the game and it is not long before each has her own "entry." The enthusiasm runs high. Finally, one of them, unable to resist the temptation that so often attacks spectators, i. e., to enter the fray as an actor, not an observer, calls out to one of the players to try and hit a spot over which she is standing and that is directly between her shoes. The slayer singled out for this subtle compliment to his skill, takes a large bite of the plug, and with determination and the desire to win written upon his face, thoroughly chews the tobacco and gets into position for his shot.

He measures, with his eye, the distance from the spot to the probable position of his mouth. He carefully holds up a wetted index finger, so as to find which way the wind is blowing. Then he sways backwards, tilting his head back little by little, until he feels that he has the right position He aims with his right eye. A distant horn is heard, acting much like the flourish of trumpets for the climaxes of acrobatic feats, and then, with an almost imperceptible motion of the head, a dark brown mass flies through the air and lands—on the lower left hand side of a mauve dress. Purple and brown do not blend at all.

The girl who succumbed knows that she has "paid the piper" for her escapade, for the entry into a sport limited to men. She says nothing for a moment, unable to express all the words, expressions, phrases and clauses that clutter up her mouth in a wild desire to find release. But out they come. And many. And varied. And colorful. But none complimentary.

The others of the two groups quickly endeavor to ameliorate conditions. The maidens recommending methods of removing the odious spot, the youths iterating and reiterating that it was "all her fault."

Before any harm can come from this gregarious development, a smart lad suggests that perhaps over the clean, unblemished enamel of the tables in the University Cafeteria, an agreement, or understanding, can be attained which would aid in the continuance of the amicable relations between the sexes on the Hill. And as they wander in couples across the street the setting sun lends a proper touch of peace and repose to the Sabbath.

WARNING AGAINST ABSENCES ISSUED

Registrar Says That Usual Rule Of Class Attendance Will Apply To Thanksgiving Holidays.

The registrar's office desires to call the attention of the undergraduate student body to the long-standing regulation of the University with regard to absences incurred immediately before and after holiday periods.

Regulations require class attendance on the day before and the day after all holidays. Violation of this regulation is punishable by strict probation for the remainder of the quarter. Authorized leaves of absence are not and can not be granted covering such a period, regardless of the apparent urgency of the case. Those students living at a distance from Chapel Hill are in no wise exceptions to this rule.

Juniors and seniors taking freshman and sophomore classes are required to attend such courses; but attendance on junior and senior courses by juniors and seniors is optional for such periods just as at other times.

Y CABINETS HOLD WEEKLY MEETINGS

The three Y cabinets met last Monday night at the Y. M. C. A.

The freshman council opened its program with devotional exercises led by Archie Davis, after which H. F. Comer, general secretary of the Y, gave a talk on the Bible. Mr. Comer gave as the reason for the Bible's popularity that it was based on actual experience which had taken place during the life and growth of the world. He continued by saying that the sum of all the copies of the Bible sold would exceed the total number of sold copies of 500 of the best known books. After answering a few of the questions asked by the cabinet, Mr. Comer closed his program with a few reasons why the Bible was such a great book.

After the roll call it was announced that a scientist would be the speaker at the next meeting. Mr. Comer closed the program with a word of prayer.

Professor W. F. Ferger, of the economics department, talked to the sophomore cabinet on the "State Labor Situation." Professor Ferger stated that he was very much in favor of the present trade unions and collective bargaining. He admitted that the unions did not stand by their rules and regulations; "but," he continued, "the union organization is a step in the right direction. The merchants' and the manufacturers' associations can stick together, so why can't the labor unions?" In reference to the Gastonia disturbances he closed by stating that no man should be permitted to come in to the unions and demand higher wages and then stand back and let the laborers suffer from the strike. Professor Ferger seemed to be very optimistic as to the future labor conditions.

The program for the junior-senior cabinet was a general discussion.

Gros Marionettes Noted For Their Realism; Have Played Before Many Large Audiences

Performers Will Appear Here In Two Shows at Tin Can; "Uncle Wiggily" and "Skippy" To Be Shown.

Jean Gros

(By Edward French)

Marionettes are almost as old as the world. The puppet of yesteryear and the modern marionette differ simply in the many refinements of mechanism and ideas of presentation. In early ages people employed them to depict certain phases of their beliefs; now they have found a welcome place in the entertainment needs of all classes of people.

In the Jean Gros' French Marionettes, which will give two performances in the Tin Can tomorrow as a feature of the student entertainment program, is to be found every refinement of the puppet art. The marionettes appear on their own quaintly devised stage, before scenery made in proportion to their size, seating themselves on chairs by tables, drinking, smoking, talking, laughing, doing everything that a human being can do, and then performing a wealth of extra tricks that no human being can accomplish.

All this is made possible by a company of trained actors, musicians and puppeteers who have been associated with the art for countless seasons rehearsing week in and week out to attain the fine points of the manipulation. The art of working marionettes is perhaps the most difficult task in the theatre. Great skill is required to operate a puppet, sometimes necessitating as much as six months practice before a public performance can be given. Perfect balance must be obtained before the puppet can be made to walk and make gestures that are in rhythm with the spoken line. Mr. Gros' marionettes are noted for their realism, and the performances as a whole have been acclaimed in every section of the country.

During the past season the marionettes played to over six hundred and fifty thousand children and almost that many adults. Due to the influence of the French marionettes, schools have opened courses covering this art of the theatre. Educators have been quick to see that the puppet theatre gives unlimited scope to the imagination, also that it requires the use of every art: music, the drama, painting, sculpture, costuming, mechanics, etc. Gordon Craig, Maurice Maeterlinck, and other high luminaries of the literary field have always believed that marionettes had a very definite niche in the value of the drama, and consequently have spent years in studying the possibilities of the figures, and have contributed pieces of literature for their use.

Community Club Meets Wednesday

The music department of the Chapel Hill community club will hold its regular semi-monthly meeting Wednesday afternoon at 3:30 in room 9 of the music building. Mrs. T. S. McCorkle, chairman of this department, invites all who are interested to be present for this program.

Mrs. G. A. Harrer is program chairman for this meeting. The subject for study is French music since 1850. This music properly begins with the famous songs of the old French Troubadours which constitutes the field of real French folk music. Such composers as Cambert, Lully, Rameau, Couperin, Delibes and Berlioz will be studied —the last named really being well over the dividing line into modern music.

In addition to various recordings for illustrative purposes, the following program will be given:

French Folk Song—Charming Marguerite; Aria (Mrs. George Lawrence) — Rameau; Aria from "Faust"—Gounod; Aria from "Romeo and Juliet". (Mrs. G. R. Trot)—Gounod; Gavotte —Couperin; Gavotte (Mrs. A. S. Wheeler)—Gluck-Brahms.

The Show Off To Be Produced Soon By The Playmakers

"The Show Off" by George Kelly will be substituted for "The Trial of Mary Dugan" as the winter production of the Playmakers because rights for the play originally chosen could not be secured.

Copies of the new choice have been placed on reserve at the library for reference of those who wish to try out for a place in the cast. Final tryouts will be held in the Playmaker theatre on the afternoon of Monday, December 9.

Elmer Hall, technical director of the Playmakers, will have charge of the production.

RED CROSS ROLL CALL TO BE MADE ON CAMPUS SOON

Annual Drive To Be Made During Week; Great Benefits Received From Organization.

The annual Red Cross drive for the student body will start some time this week. One night this week each dormitory will be canvassed for contributions. The nation-wide Red Cross drive closed sometime last week, but as yet no drive has been made on the campus alone. Every student on the campus is eligible to the benefits of the national Red Cross. Each student has as much right to the help of the Red Cross as any citizen in the state.

For the past three years the state of North Carolina has raised, through collections, contributions and other ways, $45,000 for the Red Cross, but during these three years the state had drawn from the national Red Cross, funds amounting to $190,000 to meet all the emergency calls that arose. By this it may be easily seen that the state is still indebted to the Red Cross for $145,000.

During the late New Bern fire the Red Cross rendered various sorts of aid, such as getting food, clothing, homes, and other necessities for those people who were hurt by the fire. Then also during the Sanford coal mine disaster the Red Cross carried food and other necessities of life to all the injured. These are just two major deeds done by the Red Cross, not to speak of the thousands of daily services rendered.

To bring the work nearer home, last year a student of the University broke his arm. He was laid up in bed for quite a while without being able to get about and earn his board. Being a self-help student he was unable to pay his hospital bill. To help the student out the Red Cross paid all of his hospital bills and other expenses and helped him to get back on his feet again.

DIALECTIC SENATE CHOOSES DEBATERS

The debate tryout held Monday night in the Di hall resulted in the selection of J. C. Williams and C. A. Shreve, with Alexander Webb as alternate. Williams and Shreve will represent the Dialectic senate in the annual Mary D. Wright debate which will be held in Gerrard hall on the night of December 10. As yet the representatives of the Philanthropic assembly have not been selected.

The query which will be debated in the final contest is "Resolved, That the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill now pending before the special session of the seventy-first congress should be passed as introduced." The Dialectic senate and the Philanthropic assembly will attend the debate in a group.

Frank E. Wright, who gives the medal annually in honor of his illustrious ancestors, is expected to attend.

Dormitory Club To Meet Tonight

The Carolina dormitory club will hold a meeting tonight at 9:15 in the social room of F (Aycock) dormitory. All dormitory presidents and athletic managers are urged to come to the meeting.

The Chapel Hill Cops "Launch a Drive"

'Tis said that nobody loves a fat man, and there is some truth in the ancient adage. Since corpulency is the rule among cops, it is perhaps not unnatural that "the force" should not be overly popular with John Public. Be that as it may, it is certain that most people have no love for policemen in general, and very little for them as individuals.

It is rather annoying to find a little colored tag attached to one's steering wheel, conveying the imperious command to "tell it to the judge." That is just what happened to quite a few Chapel Hill motorists yesterday as the town board of aldermen initiated their drive to relieve traffic congestion in the village, particularly on the University campus. No little ire was occasioned by the unpleasant little tags, and the popularity of the logical "force" was at least not enhanced by their presence upon numerous steering wheels. But the Chapel Hill cops were merely performing an unpleasant duty made necessary by the remarkable increase in the number of automobiles in the village this fall and the thoughtlessness of the average motorist, who parks in the first available space without consideration as to whether or not his car will impede traffic. "No Parking" signs have been regarded but little, if at all, in Chapel Hill this fall.

The town officials and preservers of the peace should not be censured too severely for their efforts to enforce the parking ordinance. Traffic is increasing with great rapidity here, and enforcement of existing regulations is becoming more and more essential.

The Engineers' Charges Examined

Chief among the accomplishments of the professional student, especially the engineering, is his ability to "cuss" the A. B. student. Many are the times we have heard the courses, the grades, the professors, and the methods of the A. B. School derided for a whole afternoon. The favorite crack is "when a man flunks out of the Engineering school, he goes into the A. B. and makes Phi Beta Kappa."

After we have made allowances for the natural prejudices, jealousies, and hatreds between the schools, we may still find some of the attacks justifiable. The first charge made is that the students of the A. B. school do not work and do not have to work; in other words the A. B. course is a week-end extending over four years. Any one who has heard students brag about the small amount they study, realizes there is something in this accusation. The A. B. course is generally far easier than the professional courses. To acquire culture or the appearance of culture is not nearly so ardous or so strenuous a task as learning how to survey a straight line.

A large amount of the criticism is directed at the A. B. students because their school does not furnish anything different from the high schools. "Just a continuation of the mess we learned in high school" the professional student says, and dismisses the idea of ever entering the "college of culture." The reason so many students leave the A. B. school for the professional is that they find the work too vague, too indefinite, too much like the high school they attended.

When a man finishes the A. B. school, he is fitted for nothing except teaching; he supposedly has a cultural background with which to start in a professional school. When called upon to make a living, too often he is unable to furnish the goods; his knowledge is not of the kind that can be turned into dollars. Thus the engineers "cuss" the A. B. man because he cannot make money and can barely earn a livelihood.

Perhaps the engineers misunderstand the purpose of the A. B. school; it is not to teach a man how to build bridges or how to work hard or how to earn money. It purposes only to teach him how to enjoy his spare time and to appreciate the value of life.

Of course there are grevious errors in the way "culture" is administered to the students. The contemporary methods as a whole are too childish and too much like the eleven years of secondary schooling the student has undergone. The A. B. college will never achieve its real purpose until it can find a method that is different from the high school system, that will catch the imagination of the student and make him work for himself. Then it may fittingly prepare a student to enjoy his leisure and to enter some profession and earn a living.

The "Passing" Question

Of all the rules and regulations with which the student comes into contact while in college the academic credit deadline of 70 is without a doubt the most rigid. Although the passing mark should never be altered to meet the convenience of any student, there are certain factors preliminary to the giving of grades which warrant consideration.

Whenever a professor flunks a large number of the members of his class the outcome is naturally riling both to the fortunate and the unfortunate. Although such cases are the exception rather than the rule, instructors sometimes fail more than half of the members of their classes. From this extreme the cases vary on down to no failures at all. The writer feels that the same rule regarding passing and flunking should apply in its broad outlines both to students and to professors. If the student is required to make a grade of 70 in order to pass a given course, then the instructor should be required to make seventy per cent of his class pass. This thing of flunking students just for fun or in order to comply with some long established custom is highly harrassing.

Few students really expect to pass without living up to the requirements which are rewarded by the passing grade of seventy or better. Nobody can expect a teacher to pass him merely as a personal favor. In the case, however, that an instructor flunks more than thirty per cent of his pupils we contend that he fails in his job. Upon finding that less than seventy per cent of his pupils give promise of reaching the established attainments for the passing grade, the professor should alter his methods of instruction to such an extent that at least seventy per cent will pass. If the student is a failure who makes less than a grade of seventy, it is only logical to contend that any teacher who fails to equip seventy per cent of his pupils with the passing essentials is also a failure.

There is still another side of the question. The teachers who take even apparent pleasure in flunking their proteges are not the ones that stand out in one's college career. Those who either consciously or unconsciously take the "I'm going to flunk a bunch of you" attitude are not given a very exalted berth in the estimation of their classes. The ultimate result of such an attitude is almost invariably that of placing a damper on the amount of benefit designed to be derived from the course.

The professor who flunks his pupils for academic deficiencies but makes it appear that he is doing it for his own amusement never accomplishes anything worthy to be proclaimed on the housetops. The writer feels certain, moreover, that such persons are not confined to the realm of fiction.—J. C. W.

ENTERTAINMENT CHAIRMAN SPEAKS

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

The entertainment committee offers its second number of the year, the Gros Marionettes, Thursday afternoon and evening in the Tin Can. Nobody in the University, nobody on the committee, welcomes this change from Memorial hall to the athletic building. The change is made simply because an emergency has arisen and this appears the best way out. I am writing this letter hoping that the students and citizens who read it will recognize the pressure of this emergency and meet it with as sporting a spirit as the nature of the building seems to demand.

The University authorities have cooperated very generously with the entertainment committee to do everything in their power to make the building comfortable. A stage has been erected, dressing rooms have been put in shape, and a great number of seats have been placed in the building. In addition to this, a steam pipe line has been run to the building and, at considerable expense, blower fans have been introduced which, while they will not heat the building, are expected to keep the audience warm. For such entertainments as needed, particularly the lectures, loud speakers will be used. Our experience with the building so far indicates that the acoustics are better than we had dared to hope.

While I am writing this note, I might clear up a question which seems to be uncertain in the minds of the owners of season tickets. The coupon books are good for both the matinee and the evening performance. For the afternoon performance single admissions are twenty-five cents for children and fifty cents for adults. In the evening, all admissions are one dollar.

Once more, then, the entertainment committee asks for a fair test of the building and bespeaks the cooperation of students and citizens in the emergency for which the committee must disclaim any responsibility.

THIEVES AND THINKING

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I think that every one will admit that the influence of public opinion on the actions of individuals is stronger than any other factor, except possibly passion and hunger. Since this is true, why can we not direct public opinion against the wave of petty thieveries that is sweeping the campus?

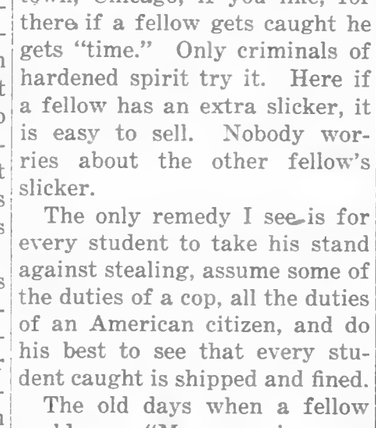
I know personally two fellows who have had two new suits stolen. I know several other fellows who have lost hats, shoes, shirts, ties, overcoats, slickers and jewelry. If you will notice the bays and girls in the library tomorrow, you will see that they sit on their coats—the hooks in the coat room are filled with notes demanding that their wearing apparel be returned.

Boys who room in dormitories say that they dare not go down the hall without first locking the door. Most of them have lost something already.

Last Friday night a watch was stolen off my desk in my room at a fraternity house between the hours of 7 and 10 o'clock! All the boys were away for about 20 minutes. It was a South Bend watch in an old gold case with a watch chain, pen knife, and glee club key attached. He at least should have been generous enough to have left the award key.

I have lost four slickers at various times but haven't raised any howl about it.

In a state university where grown men and women go to study, the present state of affairs should not be tolerated. I believe the thieves are not outsiders but in the student body. The danger is too great for an outsider to be caught prowling around in a dormitory, library, or fraternity house. A student, if interrupted, can always say, "This is where Sam rooms, is it not?" and get away with the loot.



Our things would be much safer in a city home in any old town, Chicago, if you like, for there if a fellow gets caught he gets "time." Only criminals of hardened spirit try it. Here if a fellow has an extra slicker, it is easy to sell. Nobody worries about the other fellow's slicker.

The only remedy I see is for every student to take his stand against stealing, assume some of the duties of a cop, all the duties of an American citizen, and do his best to see that every student caught is shipped and fined.

The old days when a fellow could say, "My room is never locked," seem to be over.

IN THE WAKE OF NEWS

J. E. Dungan

Still, the discussion continues on The Stagnant South, a term both unfair in its full implications and hardly exact for a situation peculiar to this section of the country. Far from being stagnant the south is at the present moment taking the biggest steps forward of any part of the country. No one denies that it will be years or even decades until the south will have "arrived," but no one can overlook its forward movement.

Speaking of education in connection with the recent Open Forum letters on southern culture the campus might be interested in knowing that the second largest city in the country—Chicago, the home of the School for Crime—has decided to cut two months off the current school year, due to lack of finances, despite having just pledged $100,000,000 for the purpose of financing the city's centennial celebration in 1933 which will depict the progress of that city. No one, however, accuses Chicago of a lack of interest in culture — whatever that last named something may be.

Keeping up with the times with the Daily Tar Heel is a fast and dizzy exercise. Under a date line of November 16, the paper told of a school for police chiefs held here August 14-24. Archiological methods of handling news have just about become passe except on the Durham Sun and the Duke Chronical—but we bow our head in shame over this one.

"Gate Crashing at the Marine Band Concerts" wasn't the only crashing. J. Langford Felton, conscientious door keeper, came in contact with some half a dozen rocks during the progress of the evening.

"Female Students Better Males In Education School" is the weird biological monstrosity brought to light in the headlines last week.

Over at State College the boys pulled a coup d'etat on the other schools of the state by inviting the chorus of "The Padlocks of 1929" to appear as guests at a dance given there recently. The social hounds of State College are stepping high, wide, and handsome this year.

The Di and Phi will assemble in joint session next Tuesday for the purpose of deciding whether the Daily Tar Heel is practical, and the members of the staff will spend a week of sleepless nights until the senators and representatives abolish or approve the sheet.

Some wit has written into the paper to find out if "The Dusky Politics" editorialized Editor Holder is the same man known as "dirty politics."

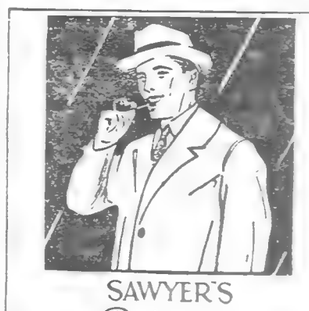
P. L. Burch, buildings manager, has done some very excellent work in connection with the rehabilitation of the Tin Can. The large crowd attending the Marine Band Concert last week were agreeably surprized to see a better stage than the one used in Memorial hall and a comfortable seating arrangement, as well as a heating system installed to make the frigidaire comfortable. Burch has served the University the past years in an altogether efficient and understanding manner, and Here's Hats Off to Burch!



Students On Deer Hunt For Week-end

Week-end trips call University of North Carolina students to many diversions but one of the most interesting was that taken last Saturday and Sunday by Charles Taylor and K. Creuser. They went deer hunting (spell it deer for sure. Mr. Linotypist).

But although their habits were perfect for slayers of venison although they had the best of rifles and shotguns, including a 30-30; and although they saw several big prongers, their quest was in vain.

However, these two students and pals, who last year attended Amherst college and played around with the recently married John Coolidge, Jr., were highly enthusiastic about the deer expedition and in between accounts of it this week they are recuperating.

Their journey of several hundred circuitous miles took them as far into the hill country as Brevard, N. C. A feature of the journey was 55 bumpy and slow miles on the rim.

Bryan Grant Defeats Ed Yeomans In Tennis Match

Atlanta Star Defeats Varsity Player 6-2, 6-2, 5-7, 6-3; Meets Hines Tomorrow.

Bryan Grant of Atlanta defeated Ed Yeomans of Washington, D. C., 6-2, 6-2, 5-7, 6-3, here yesterday afternoon in the semi-finals of the University tennis tournament. This victory gives Grant the right to meet Wilmer Hines in the finals Thursday.

Grant, who holds the Southern men's title, played a brilliant defensive game throughout the match, and his consistent returning of Yeomans' fore- and backhand drives drew repeated applause from the gallery. Jumping into the lead by winning Yeomans' first serve, the Atlanta youngster retained his advantage and was never in much danger of being overtaken.

Although rather weak on his service, Grant more than offset this handicap by his ability to return Yeomans' most difficult strokes, chopping them back until Yeomans made a misplacement. In the four sets Grant served a total of twelve double faults, as against six for his opponent, and at the same time failing to score a single service ace. Yeomans was not especially dangerous on his serve, but his placement was accurate and on three occasions he was able to serve aces.

The playing was close during the entire match, with only one love game. Grant held Yeomans pointless in the fifth game of the first set, during the latter's serve. Yeomans played an offensive game most of the time, with Grant chopping, lobbing and volleying them back with commendable persistence. The play was reminiscent of that engaged in last spring in the state intercollegiate finals between Yeomans and Grady Frank, diminutive Duke star. But Yeomans failed to break through Grant's defense as he did Frank's and as a result took the short end of the count. Yeomans pulled in his wild strokes and by close, conservative play was able to take the third set 7-5. The rest of the match was easily Grant's.

Wilmer Hines, whom Grant plays in the finals Thursday, is a player of swift serves and skill at the net. Hines, who hails from Columbia, S. C., won the southern amateur title last year and ranked fifth in the national junior lists before he passed the junior age limit. Both Hines and Grant are freshmen.

Sports Editor Of Atlanta Journal Lauds Tar Heels

The North Carolina Tar Heels have just come in for a nice piece of praise from Morgan Blake, sports editor of the Atlanta Journal.

Commenting on the Tar Heels' showing in general and the Georgia disaster, Blake wrote in his column, in part:

"North Carolina has looked like a million dollars in every game except the Georgia battle, and they faltered only in the fourth quarter of this contest.

"The writer believes that North Carolina, playing in top form, might be able to beat either Tulane or Tennessee. It seems, somehow or other, that fate played a strange prank on this great club, which may be the strongest team in Dixie."

Blake also paid a splendid tribute to the Tar Heel attitude after their defeat. He said:

"They took the defeat with splendid sportsmanship, made no alibis, and proceeded to carry on brilliantly against other opponents."

D. K. E. DEFEATS PI KAPPA PHIS

Meet Betas In Finals For Fraternity League Championship; Chatham Is Star of Game.

In the semi-finals of the fraternity league D. K. E. won from Pi Kappa Phi 13-0. This score does not represent the real difference in strength of the two teams as the Dekes presented a consistant, powerful attack and a strong defense, while the attack of the Pi Kappa Phis was extremely erratic.

D. K. E. threatened early in the first quarter, carrying the ball inside the 15 yard line, but at this point the Pi Kaps braced and the ball went over on downs. They were held for downs on the 12 yard line and the Dekes got the ball again on a poor punt. A long pass, Chatham to Dunn, put the ball on the eight yard line as the quarter ended. On the first play of the second quarter Chatham ran the ball across. His attempt to kick goal failed by inches.

Pi Kappa Phi began a drive after kick-off which was ended when Chatham intercepted a pass on his own 15 yard line. His pass to Dunn was good for 40 yards, but Pi Kappa Phi took revenge by intercepting another as the half ended.

The second half was marked by the number of intercepted passes by both teams with D. K. E. having a slight advantage over their opponents. Late in the third quarter McAllister intercepted a pass and was finally downed on the 15 yard line. Chatham passed to Lineberger for the touchdown. Chatham kicked goal. Little of interest occurred in the fourth quarter with Deke fighting to hold their lead and Pi Kappa Phi making a desperate attempt to score. The game ended with the ball in the possession of the Dekes on their own 40 yard line.

The play of Chatham, Gray and McAllister was outstanding for the Dekes, while Williams and Glenn were best for the Pi Kappa Phis.

The Dekes, by virtue of their victory in this game, will meet the Betas today to decide the championship of the fraternity league.

16 Qualifiers In Golf Tournament

In the qualifying round of the U. N. C. golf tournament yesterday, afternoon at Hope Valley country club 16 out of 22 candidates qualified.

Charlie Chatham turned in the lowest qualifying score of 82, while Paul Carter followed close behind with an 83. Bill Petty with an 85 took third honors but will be given second place as Carter will drop out.

The lowest score for nine holes was turned in by B. L. Goodes who shot a 38 coming in.

The first round of the tournament will be played this afternoon at Hope Valley country club. Each succeeding day the survivors will compete.

Out of the 16 men qualifying there were eight freshmen, six varsity and two transfers.

Those qualifying and their scores are as follows:

Charlie Chatham 82, Alex Brown 98; V. L. Goodes 86, R. J. Mebane 91; W. C. Crawford 85, E. G. Ballenger 90; Aubrey Brooks 87, Frank Sample 95; Bill Petty 85, C. V. Barkley 89; Meade Willis 86, J. A. Hudson 94; Luther Stuart 86, Billy Barnes 91; W. J. O'Brien 89, George Saunders 102.

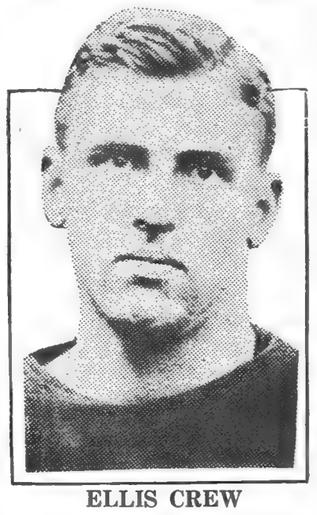
Four Good Reserves



THERON BROWN

GEORGE THOMPSON

"RED" PARSLEY

ELLIS CREW

During the past few games these Tar Heels have proved themselves of varsity calibre. George Thompson has been a valuable tackle while substituting for Koenig. Theron Brown has proven himself an able pass received. Ellis Crew has helped Captain Farris take good care of left Guard. Red Parsley has been looking very good at left end here of late.

BACKS GET HARD WORK YESTERDAY

Three Backfields Used By Coaches In Hard Drill; Magner and Wyrick Work.

Thinking in terms of the heavy lines of Virginia and Duke, the Tar Heel coaches concentrated attention yesterday on drilling their shifty stable of backs in new tricks at side-stepping, hip hoving, and last but not least, blocking.

It was the first day's work after the Davidson game, and there was plenty of it. Coach Cerney drilled the backs, while Coach Collins worked the linemen in another sector of the field on taking out opposing linemen, bucking, and so on.

Pete Wyrick, veteran quarter, was back on the full-time, hard-work list. Jim Magner, of eight-yard fame, had to be content again with only a light workout. Both have about recovered from injuries.

A new backfield combination appeared in the practice yesterday which puts together four of the flashiest stars in the Tar Heel camp and which might become permanent. Johnny Branch, the sophomore broken field ace, was quarterback, with Jimmy Maus, stellar passer, at left half; Chuck Erickson, broken field ace, at right half; and Henry House, hard driving plunger, at full.

Pete Wyrick was quarterback for the veteran outfit of Ward and Nash, halfbacks, and Spaulding, fullback. A third backfield showed Jimmy Moore, quarter; George Houston and Redfern, alternating at left half; Rip Slusser, right half; and Pap Harden, fullback.

The blocking looked good on the whole, but quite ragged in spots, and the Tar Heel mentors probably will be stressing this item on the training menu for the seven days left before the Virginia game.

Rip Slusser gave promise in the day's punting drill of taking over that duty for the Tar Heels. The stellar sophomore was getting long and high spirals down the field for an average of more than 40 yards.

Intramural Games

Zeta Psi won from Sigma Alpha Epsilon 7 to 0. Manly won over Ruffin 6 to 0. New Dorms won from Mangum 18 to 0. Sigma Nu won from Sigma Phi Sigma 1 to 0. Beta Theta Pi won from Phi Delta Theta 7 to 0.

Epsilon Phi Delta announces the initiation of the following members: E. R. Hamer, Beverly Moore, Clyde Dunn, T. B. Rector and Lawrence Hammond.

Membership in the Boy Scouts lost 10,000 last year.

"Heinie" Anderson

WITH eight games scratched from the 1929 schedule and only one of those lost the Tar Heels easily outclass other members of the Big Five. In addition to their probable receipt of the state title, the varsity is by no means entirely out of Southern Conference running.

TULANE and Tennessee are at present the leaders in the S. I. C., but they still have other games to play. Tulane plays its last conference game of the season with L. S. U. Sports writers predict a Tulane victory, but upsets are still in style. Tennessee has two conference games left on the schedule, and wins are predicted for the Vols over both South Carolina and Kentucky, but a slip in either game would cause a new deal.

CAROLINA is given the margin over both Virginia and Duke in her last two conference games. Although Duke has a clean slate in the S. I. C. and it is possible, but not probable, that she may finish the season with a 1.000 per cent average in the southern conference. Even if this should be the case it would not give the Blue Devils a very strong claim for a share in the title of the conference due to the small number of conference games played by the Durham aggregation.

THE Tar Heels will rest until the annual Turkey Day classic with Virginia. Perhaps this "rest" may show some good scrimmages between the varsity and the Tar Babies, and give onlookers a chance to size up next year's prospects from the frosh.

WAKE FOREST and Duke will settle their arguments when they meet in Durham this Saturday. The Demon Deacons are hoped to succumb to the wiles of the Blue Devils. The Deacons tamed the Wildcats but lost to the Wolfpack. The Wildcats clawed the Wolfpack for a victory, and which two games are to be taken in forecasting this game. Wake Forest is conceded as having a chance to win, but not much more.

A Correction

The Tar Heel wishes to correct an error in yesterday's write-up of the freshman game with Maryland. Abrams scored the first Carolina touchdown, and not McNeil, as was stated.

TENNIS at U. N. C. has some brilliant prospects for the coming season. The varsity has a good team, but the freshman team will be almost unbeatable. The semi-finals of the tennis tournament was between Grant and Yeomans, one of the varsity outstanding members, and showed the rank of this frosh with the varsity. Wilmer Hines, another freshman, plays the winner of the semi-finals in the finals. Other prominent freshman players are: Abels, Barnett, and Wright.

REPORTS FROM THE BOXRING show that another Southern Champion team is in the making. Led by Captain Archie Allen, Light Weight Southern Title holder, the mitmen are mixing things up in preparation for another hard season.

• THE SOUTHERN CONFERENCE CROSS COUNTRY MEET to be held in Chapel Hill this Saturday will bring the news spotlight to Chapel Hill in spite of the absence of football games here. In the meet this Saturday, some of the most outstanding Cross Country and distance runners in the South will compete. Young, of Georgia, and Barkley, of Carolina are expected to lead the field.

THE CAKE RACE this Friday will be one of the largest that has ever been held at Carolina. The number of entries so far has set a new Cake Race attendance record and no doubt several Cake Race records will be approached in the coming event.

Yesterday Wake Forest and P. C. played a tie game 0 - 0.

S. C. Harriers To Meet Here Saturday

On Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock more than 90 hill-and-dalers from all over the south will begin a five mile trek for the Southern Conference championship. These harriers will be representatives of more than 12 southern universities, who have already entered the meet.

The course, as announced by the local athletic officials, will begin and end in Kenan stadium. From the stadium it will wind up the Raleigh highway, to the Tin Can, past the home of President Chase, out Rosemary street through Carrboro, to the left of Sparrow's swimming pool, back to Cameron avenue, past the laundry, and back to the stadium.

S. B. TURPENTINE VISITS UNIVERSITY ON MONDAY

President S. B. Turrentine of Greensboro college, accompanied by Professor Hibbets, head of the department of music in that institution, visited the University last Monday, November 17, to confer with Dr. N. W. Walker, dean of the school of education, and Professor Harold Dyer, head of the University's music department, concerning standards and requirements for the bachelor of music degree.

President Turrentine, who is a Methodist minister, is a graduate of the University. He received his A. B. degree in 1884 and his A. M. degree in 1887.

Henry Johnston, Jr., of the bureau of vocational information, is loafing in Tarboro for a few days, according to an announcement from Dean Bradshaw's office.

Mrs. Hugo Giduz, who has been confined to her home for the past several weeks with illness, is now sufficiently recovered to be up and to get about.

List Of High-Grade Movies Is Issued By D. A. R. Committee

Mrs. W. S. Bernard, chairman of the better films committee of the Davie Poplar chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution which is conducting a campaign to interest people in high-grade movies, has received a list of the latest productions and their rating as given by the Hollywood chapter. She submits to the Tar Heel a list of the pictures given the highest mark: "Love, Live and Laugh"; "The Wagon Master"; "Taming of the Shrew"; "A Song of Kentucky"; "The Last of Mrs. Cheney"; "Good Medicine"; "The Argyle Case"; "Hollywood Review of 1929"; "Four Devils"; "She Goes to War"; "Four Feathers"; "Salute"; "Behind That Curtain"; "A Hint to Brides"; "Dynamite"; "The Viking"; "Disraeli"; "River of Romance," and "Wonder of Women."

Tar Heel Kickers Working For Game

Recalling that three of the last four Carolina - Virginia games have been settled by toe-work, Chuck Collins, head football coach at the University of North Carolina, had a veritable squad of placekickers at work today and served notice that there would be no let-up.

Since the Wake Forest game the Tar Heels have scored 33 touchdowns, but they have converted but 11 of 33 attempts into "Point No. 7." With history as it is, and the Virginians showing great improvement, Coach Collins doesn't want to take unnecessary chances.

Charlie Mackall, Bunn Hackney and Bo Morehead have been the big figures in the toe-work of the last four years.

Back in 1925 the rival elevens battled to a tie score on Emerson Field here, with each team registering a field goal for three points. Mackall, Virginia guard, booted a place-kick through the uprights for Virginia's markers, and Bunn Hackney retaliated with a drop-kick from the 15-yard line late in the game.

LUCK FOLLOWS FIRST YEAR MAN IN BRIDGE

Ted Newland, freshman from Pasadena, Calif., has had an extraordinary streak of luck in bridge the last two months. During rushing season while in a bridge game he drew a hand of 13 spades. He took the bid at four spades and, of course, made it.

And again last Saturday afternoon during a bridge game at the Phi Delta Theta house, Newland drew his second hand of 13 similar cards, again all spades. He again got the bid at four spades.

It is a very rare occurrence that a player draws a straight hand and it is still rarer when one gets two such hands within a period of two months. We might also add that at neither time was Newland dealer. This information is authentic and may be proven by any Phi Delta Theta man.

The mighty scoring Tar Heels, with a 26-7 victory over Davidson Saturday, stepped a notch higher on the nation's scoring ladder, and into a tie for eighth place.

Southern California leads with 301 points. Dartmouth, Colgate, Ohio Wesleyan, Tennessee, Tulane and Albright scale down in order, with Pittsburgh and North Carolina tied at 257.

CAKE RACE WINNER TO JOIN GROUP OF PROMINENT STARS

The winner of the cake race Friday will join a group of men who have been prominent in Carolina track athletics. Four of the five winners have been members of the varsity cross country and track teams. Harry Thach, winner of the first race in 1923, became a consistent 4:30 miler. Galen Elliott, winner in 1925, is holder of the Southern Conference record for the mile. He was twice winner of the Conference cross country meet and three times winner of the Conference mile. His best time for this event was 4:21. This time was made in 1926 and resulted in the selection of Elliott as the best collegiate miler of the year. Minor Barkley, winning the following year, became a member of both the track and cross country teams. He is captain of the latter this year. June Fisher, winner of the fifth race, was for two years a letter man in both cross country and track.

Elliott, Barkley and Fisher were members of the four-mile relay team which won the national championship at the Penn relays in 1928.

THANKSGIVING GAMES WILL BE IMPORTANT

Three Thanksgiving day battles may settle this year's Southern Conference football title—Tennessee at Kentucky, Tulane at L. S. U., and Virginia at North Carolina. Tennessee and Tulane are the only undefeated teams in the Conference, and North Carolina, with but one defeat, is runner-up. The scores from last year would seem to indicate three great battles—Tennessee 0, Kentucky 0; Tulane 0, L. S. U. 0; North Carolina 24, Virginia 20.

Freshmen Will Play Virginia Saturday

The Tar Babies will go to Charlottesville Saturday to play the Cavalier frosh. The squad returned from Maryland in a slightly battered condition, Zovesus, Robinson and Thompson suffering sprained ankles, while several others received minor injuries. In spite of this the Tar Babies are expected to come back with a good fight against Virginia. Little is known of Virginia's strength except that Maryland defeate dthem 13-6.

The frosh expect to pass their way to touchdowns Saturday. Yesterday the regulars took it easy while the reserves scrimmaged.

LAW SCHOOL NOW HAVING MID-TERM EXAMINATIONS

Mid-term in the law school begins today and lasts until the end of this week. The law school is operated on the semester system with two semesters instead of three quarters as the academic is divided. Mid-term continues this week and the examinations come in the latter part of January.

A recent census of the law school library shows that it now contains 21,300 volumes. Since last year the library has steadily gained in the number of books it contains. The gain of this year over the last is approximately 14 per cent.

G. M. Braune Goes To Boston For Meeting

G. M. Braune, dean of the school of engineering, has gone to Boston to observe a series of distortion tests on corrugated cast-iron pipe that are to be made at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology this week.

Dean Braune was invited to attend these tests as an observer because of the close relation between them and a series of similar tests that were conducted by the University engineering school on culvert pipes.

The tests conducted at the University of North Carolina were begun in 1923 and continued until 1927. A report of these tests, which were under the direction of Dean Braune, William Cain and Professor Janda, will be published in November by the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads.

Dean Braune stated yesterday that the tests will occupy several days and that he would return to Chapel Hill Friday.

PETTY THIEVERY AMONG STUDENTS GROWS SERIOUS

Sprinkle Discusses Epidemic of Pilfering; Suggestions for Remedy Invited.

According to T. W. Sprinkle, who spoke in chapel Wednesday morning, there is a distressing epidemic overspreading the University campus that cannot be met by the cures recommended in Tar Heel advertisements for "all skin diseases." This threatening affliction Mr. Sprinkle defined as palm itch, more commonly called petty thievery or pilfering.

Mr. Sprinkle declared that a remedy is needed for this unfathomable passion of some for filling their hands with the property of others. However, he admitted that in the present problem no new situation has arisen. It is one that has been met by the people of every place and age.

Mr. Sprinkle then reviewed briefly some steps taken by various people as a defense against the curse of thievery. These, ranging from more or less strenuous punishment of offenders to elaborate honor systems, were representative of the accomplishments of both primitive and civilized races.

In view of these facts, Mr. Sprinkle concluded: "It would appear that, living in an enlightened age and on a university campus, we could develop some scheme, moral or otherwise, for preventing the ravages that threaten us at present." He invites the suggestions and aid of everyone.

Season Tickets Left

A few season tickets for the remainder of the student entertainment programs are on sale in Dean Hibbard's office on the second floor of South. These tickets are offered at a reduction so that the cost of each entertainment averages only 25 cents whereas single admissions are a dollar or more.

Dean Hibbard

Dean Addison Hibbard of the liberal arts school, as chairman of the student entertainment committee, has secured many unusual and popular performances for the students. The A. B. and education students pay an entertainment fee of three dollars a year for which they receive more than a half dozen shows. This afternoon and tonight the Jean Gros French Marionettes will give performances under the auspices of the group.

Bruce's Book To Be Ready Last of Week

According to an announcement coming from the University Press, the first copies of The Virginia Plutarch by Philip Alexander Bruce will be received the last of the week. It is expected that the shipment will include the 167 copies of the special edition of the book, specially bound and signed by the author.

So much interest has been aroused in Mr. Bruce's work that almost the entire special edition has been subscribed for. These are being so rapidly taken that this group will doubtlessly be oversubscribed shotrly.

For those who are awaiting the regular edition of the book to appear, it might be said that copies will be placed on sale by the press and by leading book stores as soon as shipments are received form the publisher.

ESPERANTO CLUB HEARS TALK BY DR. METZENTHIN

Study Group Begins Work In Earnest; More Than Fifty Students Preparing to Learn International Language.

With a steadily mounting attendance, the Esperanto study group has proceeded from a discussion of the need for the new language and its history, to an actual study of the grammar and make-up of Esperanto.

Due to the fact that grammars are being ordered now, Dr. Metzenthin asks all those who are or will be interested in joining the group to be present at the next meeting, which will be held Tuesday, November 26, in Murphey hall. More than 50 students, including a number of co-eds, were present at the last meeting.

Dr. Metzenthin, in the course of his remarks, explained that the superfluous elements in English, such as double spellings, genders, and the complicated roots of the language, precluded it from any possibility of becoming an eventual international language. In addition, the rivalry of nations, particularly between France and England, complicated the choice of a means of expression acceptable to all parties. Esperanto does away with these troubles.

The Esperanto group, while serious in its purpose, is in no sense a class. Attendance is not required, nor are grades given. The work is based purely upon the interest of students here in Esperanto.

Sigma Xi Meetings

Sigma Xi, scientific society of the University, has inaugurated a series of monthly meetings which will be held the first Tuesday of each month. At each of these meetings some member of the scientific staff will be in charge of the program, giving a short symposium of the current research work of his department. After this there will be a general discussion of this work by the society. The next meeting will be presided over by a member of the physics department. Membership in Sigma Xi is open only to those who have proved themselves to be actively engaged in research work.

No applications for membership for the Thanksgiving dances received after seven o'clock tonight will be considered. Checks of ten dollars must accompany all applications; these will be returned of the applications are denied.

Dues are payable before Monday night at seven o'clock. Membership cards will be issued and cards for the Thanksgiving dances will be issued upon payment of dues. These are payable to Will Yarborough, treasurer of the club, at the S. A. E. house from 7 until 9 o'clock any evening before Monday.

TWO NEW ROUTES WILL BE OPENED

Road to Raleigh Will Be Ready For Use November 28; Greensboro Only 45 Miles.

Despite the big crowd expected, there will be no congestion at the Carolina-Virginia football game Thanksgiving, if plans now being perfected are carried out.

Two years ago, when the game was played here as the dedication of Kenan stadium and drew an attendance of 26,000, the town was cleared of all traffic in less than an hour, so well were automobiles routed and directed. And this year the town ought to be emptied much faster. For those in charge of arrangements have profited by the experiences of two years ago, and two new arteries for traffic have been opened up since the last Carolina-Virginia game.

Fans coming from the east now by way of Raleigh will not have to pass through Durham. Instead they can turn off at Nelson, take the new macadamized road that intersects the Raleigh-Durham highway at that point, and make the journey from Raleigh to Chapel Hill in a short time.

Over the new road Chapel Hill is but 28 miles from Raleigh, whereas by way of Durham, the former route, the distance is 38. The trip is made in from 40 to 45 minutes.

There is now a short cut from Greensboro to Chapel Hill, which reduces the distance between the two towns from 60 to 45 miles. The new highway is by way of Burlington and Graham, the short cut intersecting route No. 10 at Graham. This new road—from Graham to Chapel Hill—is in excellent shape, 10 miles being concrete and 13 being of sand and clay surface. This road places Chapel Hill within 150 miles of Charlotte by the northern route, as well as the southern route, and reduces the distance proportionately from other points west.

Buccaneer Notice

SOPHS TO CHOOSE VICE-PRESIDENT AT CHAPEL MONDAY

Election of vice-president of the sophomore class to fill the vacancy caused by the failure of George Buchan, who was regularly elected at the general election, to remain in school this year, will be held at the sophomore chapel next Monday, Ben Aycock, president of the class, announces. The decision to hold the election was reached at the recent meeting of the executive committee of the class.

The committee met with Dean Bradshaw for the purpose of discussing the nature of the sophomore chapel programs for the remainder of the school year. The committee, with the aid and advice of Dean Bradshaw, chairman of the faculty chapel committee, plans to secure speakers to discuss problems that confront the sophomore class.

The regular chapel exercises for next Monday will be used for a business meeting of the class, at which time regular class matters will be discussed and various reports heard in addition to the election of the vice-president.

Co-eds Visit Raleigh

Misses Beth Colley and Sydney Curry, seniors in the school of education and members of the observation class in the department of elementary extension of that school, will spend the day in the Raleigh schools, where they will observe the work and activity of the elementary grades. They will leave for Raleigh early this morning and will return this afternoon.

Senior Notice

All seniors who failed to write out their activites when they had their pictures taken, will please come to the Yackety Yack office between the hours of 2 and 3 p. m. today. There will be somebody at the office during that time every day.

Over One Thousand Strings In Use During Performance; Company Is Largest To Ever Tour the United States.

Due to the great amount of interest caused by the Jean Gros French Marionettes, which the student entertainment committee will present this afternoon and tonight in the Tin Can, Mr. Gros has promised to remove the large proscenium curtain and show the evening audience how the puppets are made to do their tricks. This will prove to be a great feature of the performance as the curiosity of the audience is always at a high pitch when the program is concluded. Mr. Gros brings to Chapel Hill the largest collection of marionettes in the world. Sixty puppets appear at the afternoon performance and an equal number are used at night. Over one thousand strings are in operation during the presentations, some of the marionettes having as large a collection as forty to accomplish the necessary action.

One of the startling features of the performance is the illusion that is caused by the figures with regard to size. After an audience has watched the marionettes for ten minutes, all sense of proportion is lost and the puppets appear almost life-sized. Hence when the performance is finished, and a puppeteer steps out among the figures, he seems to be about thirty feet tall. Strangely enough, no glasses are used to create this illusion; the eye is simply deceived by the fact that all the scenery and small properties such as chairs, tables, stools, etc., are made in proportion to the figure, and thus the human eye, having nothing to compare the marionettes with, all sense of size is lost.

Mr. Gros presents his company in two modern features. "Skippy," made famous by Percy L. Crosby, and the Illuminated Ballet, using four Aesop's fables with amplified music (a sort of marionette vitaphone),

Dyer Renews Acquaintanceship With Former German Prisoner

(Frank J. Manheim)

An organ—a $40,000 organ to be placed in the new busic building—was the cause of a trip to New York by Messrs. Dyer and Kennedy. And the trip was successful. It resulted in the purchase of one of the finest of American built organs by the University. But this was not the only result. While in New York Professor Dyer had been more than an "innocent bystander" in one of "life's little moments of interest."

Act one—The scene: the lobby of Hotel Pennsylvania. The time: late in the afternoon. The characters: Dr. Harold Dyer, waiting for Mr. Kennedy, and approximately a thousand other people, all presumably waiting for someone. The scene finds Dr. Dyer wandering about, more or less aimlessly, observing the myriad of faces and types of which the "melting pot" is so full. A man brushes by him. And as the well-dressed stranger hurries past, Professor Dyer notices a mark behind the stranger's ear. The professor realizes that such a peculiar mark could be carried by but one man, and he had known that man at some time in the past. He steps in front of the stranger and says, "Take a good look at me. I've seen you somewhere and you've seen me. Where was it?" After the first moment of complete surprise, the stranger carefully scrutinizes his interrogator, and finally emits an explosive "Sergeant Dyer."

Act two—Scene: the same. The time—two hours later. The characters—Harold Dyer, late captain in the intelligence service of the United States army, and August Muller, late corporal of the Prussian army. In the intervening two hours, an interesting reunion has taken place. And the men who once toiled energetically to aid in the other's destruction, shake hands warmly as they separate, with a promise to write to one another.

The curtain drops on this short drama, and without a sequel or explanatory note, the interest that this incident holds would be lost. Shortly after America's entry into the war, Professor Dyer was sent overseas. Due to his knowledge of several languages, particularly German, he was commissioned

University Professors Engage In Mad Scramble Over Airpump

(By J. P. Tyson)

Fights between students are commonplace, but when two learned men throw aside their cloaks of wisdom and resort to fisticuffs—well, that's news. The only fight recorded in the history of this institution between its faculty members happened in 1879. This fight, which created much amusement for the students and the townspeople, was between two professors.

At that time the University was so poor that the chemistry and physics department were in charge of one professor. This arrangement did not produce good results so the professor of pure mathematics was petitioned to take over the physics department. He consented and apparently everything was rosy.

Then the two pedagogues proceeded to divide up the equipment with harmonious and amicable feeling. The spoils were alotted in a very satisfactory way until the air pump was reached. A vigorous dispute arose over this implement, which was mounted upon a tripod for convenience during lectures.

Both participants wanted the pump and both had all good intentions of getting it. Words flew and their flight caused all discretion and temper to be lost. Mathematics, in spite of his scholarly build, rushed at Chemistry with a giant lunge. This great impetus floored Chemistry, causing him to be temporarily helpless. Meanwhile Mathematics, taking advantage of his colleague's condition, grabbed the much desired instrument and rushed to the door. Recovering from his painful inertia, Chemistry dived for the fast retreating pump and caught the tripod and held it triumphantly over his head while Mathematics thundered off to his den with the real prize.

This exhibition of scholarly anger was witnessed by three students and soon the incident was siezed by all wits and fractional wits. It caused much laughter on the campus and in town, and the next day nearly caused chapel to be closed as a disorderly meeting.

Soon this incident was forgotten and it was rumored that Mathematics and Chemistry smoked the weed of peace and brotherly love.

The Liquor Question On the College Campus

A liquor raid on the Gamma Eta Gamma fraternity house at the University of Illinois has resulted in the arrest of three students and the initiation of action against the 32 other members which may result in their expulsion and prosecution in the courts. Prohibition agents believe that the house was being utilized as headquarters for a ring of student bootleggers. Twelve gallons of alcohol, gin and whiskey were discovered in trunks in the rooms of the frat house.

The surprising thing about the case is not that a large amount of liquor was found in a college fraternity house, but that newspapers all over the country should give the story big headlines on the front page. Bootlegging by students is carried on to some extent at every college and university with which we are acquainted; in all probability 90 per cent of the students here know of at least one place where liquor may be procured within the boundaries of the campus. Everyone who has intimate knowledge of conditions on the average American university campus knows that bootlegging by students is by no means uncommon.

It is very doubtful that the selling of liquor can be eliminated upon or near the campuses of the large institutions of higher learning in this country. College students are notoriously fond of spirituous beverages, and it has been amply demonstrated that since prohibition was established in this country bootleggers have always been able to find means of evading the enforcement agents long enough to supply at least partially a demand for their wares, no matter where or under what conditions the demand might exist.

Very few men capable of clear reasoning deny that prohibition has proven itself a dismal failure in this country. Yet it is very unlikely that a change in the liquor laws or repeal of the 18th amendment will be possible within the next few years. Bootlegging by college students is just another of the numerous evil effects of prohibition. Modification of the laws to permit the sale of liquor under strict government supervision, with the purchaser not permitted to consume the beverage upon the premises where he secured it, would put an end to the ghastly mess in which prohibition has involved the country. Although it will probably be several years before drastic changes in the liquor laws or repeal of the 18th amendment will be possible, prohibition is doomed to eventual abolishment in this country, and the quicker the better.

Book Week In the South

Throughout the nation this week various organizations, schools, clubs, colleges, and associations of various sorts are observing book week. Special programs are being put on in many places emphasizing the value and necessity of books. We imagine the sales of the various book stores for the week will take a good jump; a renewed interest in books, stimulated by speeches, articles, and announcements, is bound to cause the buying and reading of books to increase.

So much has been written and spoken concerning the value of books, the enjoyment of books, the influence of books, and the interest in books that any further comment seems only a vague repetition. Yet it is only through constant reiteration of a thing that we can make people understand it. If through the observance of book week, the interest in literature can be increased momentarily or permanently in the South, then all effort expended is well worth while.

Over and over again we are told of the lack of interest in reading in general in the South; anything that can be done to increase the amount of reading, even if it is only the reading of newspapers and cheap magazines, should be encouraged. Only by slow degrees can a substantial interest in literary things be built up and maintained.—J. D. M.

Readers' Opinions

DOING THE "BOOM-BOOM"

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

On the evening of November 16, 1929, I was seated in my dormitory room reading William Beebe's Edge of the Jungle. At five minutes to eight I read on page 254: "One of my Indians, passing in his dugout, smiled at my peering down after the fish, and murmured, 'Boom-boom'." At the very moment that my eyes fell upon the last word, someone outside my door burst into song, shouting the popular number, "Doing the Boom-boom." Is it surprising that often ignorant minds are apt to become superstitious!

H. S. C.

"MORE THOUGHTLESS BUNK"

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

And now, dear reading public, we have been presented with another of those long columns of words concerning this too-often-discussed subject of "culture"—this time under the title of "Engineers Charges Examined."

I was unfortunate enough to miss the alleged paper of "engineer's charges" referred to, but believe that I can not miss the mark much farther than some of these other enterprising young would-be-cultured illiterates who are continually expounding their stores of wisdom to the confusion of all those unfortunates who happen not to have read a certain poem, seen a certain play, played a certain musical instrument, "surveyed a straight line," or learned to translate the stock-market page.

And, as is so often the case, the charges boil down to a question of culture—a good thing to have, but a thing that is, like morality and religion, always discussed most by those who have the least.

A wonderful thing, is this thing "culture"! The student of music acquires it when he learns to play Schubert's Serenade. The student of literature has it when he can read Baccachio, and explain to his admiring audience how true-to-life and realistic it is. The engineering freshman has obtained his just portion when he learns to run a traverse around Phillip's hall. And the economics reorganizer blossoms forth in about his second term in the commerce school.

Each of these call themselves "cultured," to the exclusion of all others. And because of his knowledge, each is privileged to damn all other forms of learning. And directly each of these is given the power to discuss off-hand, with understanding and wisdom, any and all matters that may attract what he fondly terms his attention; whether it be the league of nations, New York shows (that he has not seen or read about), art, international banking, Muscle Shoals, or what have you.

We have not yet "coined" a better term to apply to these young fellows than simply "conceited young asses." But when they grow a little older, we can say that they are "bigoted," or "eccentric," or simply "bags of hot air."

And all the time they do not even suspect the meaning of "culture." If they did, they would not find it always necessary to explain that they themselves have it. It never occurs to a cultured person that anyone will be so ignorant as to fail to see for himself, if indeed he thinks about himself as being "cultured." No one has to remind another of properties that are of sufficient value to deserve mention. Such qualities are self-evident.

Knowing how to read a poem, or wear a cane, or survey a line, or even to discuss a play that one has actually seen, does not make one "cultured." Nor is it a settled fact that professional men, even engineers, may not have some idea of good taste and the fitness of things.

"J" DORMITORY WHOOPS IT UP!

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Last night, the entertainment committee of "J" dormitory, the dormitory that lays claims to being the hardest studying, drinking, and playing house on the campus—and generally substantiates these claims at least once a week, provided for the world's censure the inanest piece of tomfoolery that has yet been seen on the campus.

The dormitory claims to be a "hot" bunch, and, pyromaniacally speaking, they are entirely correct. The chairman of the committee, who prefers to leave his glory to the estate of Herr Anonymous, of Limbo, lighted the overflowing trash receptacle on the first floor with a smouldering letter from the "girl friend" at N. C. C. W. The dormitory and the surrounding campus was soon permeated by a wealth of evil-smelling yellow smoke and a bunch of equally odorous nincompoops.

Some thought that the Pipe Smokers club was holding its quarterly meeting, but the whoops and yipes of the freshmen, which were interpolated with the tears and curses of we who are luckless to room on the first floor, soon convinced these few that the cry of "Fire!" was no false alarm.

It was noted that the entertainment committee failed to consider the fact that the wooden post office is inflammable. They should be severely reprimanded.

Betas And Dekes Play Scoreless Contest For Fraternity Tag Title

Championship Contest To Be Played Later; Race, Glenn, And Chatham Fling Many Passes.

A tense and exciting game between Beta Theta Pi and D. K. E. for the championship of the fraternity tag football league resulted in a scoreless tie yesterday. Each team had four first downs. The game was characteristic throughout by the close defenses of the teams. The game was well into the second quarter before either team registered a first down.

A pass from Chatham to Holderness was good for eleven yards and a first down, the first of the game. The Betas got the ball on downs, but McAllister intercepted a pass on the next play. Chatham passed to Craig who was run down on the Beta fifteen yard line by Anderson. This play gave the Dekes another first down and placed them in an excellent scoring position, but the threat was ended, when Dratler intercepted a pass.

With less than a minute to play, Glenn passed thirty-five yards to Anderson, who extracted himself from a swarm of Dekes to complete it. Another pass, Glenn to Fenker, was good for fifteen yards and the Betas second first down. The half ended with the Betas on the Deke twenty-five yard line.

The second half opened slowly, as far as ground gaining went. Pass after pass was incomplete or intercepted. The Dekes threatened again, placing the ball on the fourteen yard line by a pass from Chatham to Craig. On the next play Chatham passed to McAllister who was downed on the one-yard line, but the pass was not thrown until Chatham had been tagged behind the line. The ball went over on downs. Gray intercepted Race's pass and had an open field, but again the man had been tagged before the pass was thrown.

With the field rapidly growing too dark for play, Glenn passed forty-five yards to Anderson. Race's pass was intercepted, but the Betas came back when Race intercepted Chatham's pass on the first play. The game ended as a pass from Glenn was blocked.

Individual stars were overshadowed by team play. The passing of Race and Glenn for the Betas and Chatham for the Dekes was good as was the punting of McAllister for the Dekes and Race for the Betas. Anderson of the Betas completed several difficult passes and his work on the defense was good. Gray and Holderness of the Dekes and Bradham of the Betas played well on the defense.

The tie will be played off within a few days, the exact date to be announced later.

The finals in the University tennis tournament are to be played today at two-thirty. Wilmer Hines of Columbia, S. C., will meet Bryan Grant of Atlanta, Ga., for the championship.

ALL-TIME TEAM TO BE SELECTED

Old Grads Will Pick Team To Be Published In Thanksgiving Issue of Daily Tar Heel.

(By Crawford McKethan)

Once during each decade about the time of the annual Carolina-Virginia football classic, speculations seem to pass up and down the state, among both the alumni and the undergraduates of the University of North Carolina, as to the greatest gridiron stars who have gone out from that institution. Naturally such a discussion is rarely a peaceful one, and the task of attempting to select eleven men from the horde of athletes who have represented Carolina during the past 40 years is not one to be taken on hurriedly and without consideration of the possible results and after-effects. However, in the face of such a pessimistic outlook, the Tar Heel is going to make just such an attempt, realizing fearfully and meekly, that the results of this research will undoubtedly bring down a storm of criticism and disagreements.

In searching for the answer to this problem we have gone to the only source which to us seems proper — our alumni. About fifteen graduates of the University, representing every college generation since 1890, have been chosen for this task. These men were all prominent grid stars in their day, and have also closely watched the teams that followed them with keen interest. Therefore, we contend, if anybody is eligible to select an all-time University of North Carolina team, these men certainly are.

The teams that each of these men have picked will be published in the Thanksgiving number of the Tar Heel, along with other items of interest that these men have sent in along with their all-time teams. However, before this final result is published, the all-time teams as chosen in 1910 by Dr. Joel Whitaker and in 1923 by Dr. Lawson will be reviewed and finally compared with the 1929 selection.

University Golf Matches Underway

The first round of match play in the University golf tournament was played over the Hope Valley course yesterday. Match play will continue today and through the week until the championship is decided.

In the first round Barkley defeated Petty 2 and 1; O'Brien defeated Sanders 7 and 6; Willis defeated Hudson 5 and 4; Stewart defeated Barnes 5 and 4; Goodes defeated Mebane 7 and 6; Brooks defeated Sample 3 and 2; and Ballenger defeated Crawford one up.

Play will continue today with Ballenger meeting Brooks; Barkley meeting Willis; Stewart meeting O'Brien; and Goodes playing the winner of the Chatham-Brown match.

In the consolation round Petty plays Hudson, Barnes plays Sanders, Crawford plays Sample, and Mebane plays the loser of the Chatham-Brown match.

Now that Carolina and Duke have set the pace for the schools in this section of the matter of up-to-date stadia, there comes the announcement that State College has begun agitation for a suitable scene for its football games. Tal H. Stafford, director of the bureau of public information at the Raleigh institution and former graduate manager of athletics, has written an article which will appear in the forthcoming issue of the State College Alumni News, in which he sounds the call for the new stadium. Mentioning some of the disadvantages of the present seating facilities and stressing the fact that the present stands will become unfit and unsafe for use in less than a year, he urges that alumni look toward a new stadium as the solution of the problem which will confront the college when the east stands become useless. Citing the fact that both Duke and Carolina have recently completed stadia and that the increased crowds at the games show that people want comfort at games as well as the certainty of a clear view of the entire playing field, Mr. Stafford emphasizes the fact that the section of the campus west of the Frank Thompson gymnasium offers one of the best natural sites for a stadium in North Carolina. While he offers no direct plan for raising the $300,000 necessary for a stadium, he has awakened interest in the project and is to be commended on his idea. We sincerely hope that State will be successful in securing a stadium which will allow her to take a stand alongside Carolina and Duke among the more progressive schools in the south in modern facilities for handling the ever-increasing crowds of football enthusiasts.

Duke, entering the ranks of the Southern Conference late in the winter last year, was unable to arrange football games with other conference teams with the exception of Carolina, N. C. State and L. S. U. Seeing the advantage of meeting teams of local interest, the officials of that university have begun early to make up the schedule for next fall with the idea of booking games with some of the stronger members of the conference. To date they seem to have been quite successful, and, as it now stands, the Duke schedule will offer games much more interesting than that of this fall has so far done. Practically no enthusiasm can be aroused over a battle with Boston College or Pittsburgh. This fact has been proved. However, games with Virginia, Washington and Lee, and Kentucky will certainly draw crowds. Four teams met this year have been dropped. Mercer, L. S. U., Boston College and Pittsburgh do not appear on he tentative layout which shapes up as follows:

Oct. 4—Virginia at Durham.
Oct. 11—Davidson at Durham.
Oct. 18.—Navy at Annapolis.
Oct. 25—Villanova at Durham.
Nov. 8—Kentucky at Durham.
Nov. 15—N. C. State at Raleigh.
Nov. 22—Wake Forest at Wake Forest.
Nov. 27—W. and L. at Durham.
Dec. 6—N. C. at Chapel Hill.

There was much criticism of Jimmy Dehart for the 1929 schedule he laid out for the Blue Devils. It seems that there should be some praise given him for the well balanced slate he has compiled for next fall.

TAR BABIES TO MEET VIRGINIA FRESHMEN NEXT

Carolina Frosh Have Lost Two Out of Three Games; Offensive Strength Needed.

This Saturday the Tar Babies go to Charlottesville to play the Virginia freshmen as a prelude to the Thanksgiving day classic at Kenan stadium between the varsity football teams of the two institutions.

Last week the Carolina freshmen were defeated by one of the best frosh teams Maryland has turned out in a number of years. Saturday will find the Tar Babies fighting hard to get back in the win column. To date the freshmen have lost two games out of three. A practice game at the beginning of the season was won from Roanoke college. The Tar Babies have succumbed in two conference games, one to Duke by the slim margin of one point and the game last Saturday to the Terrapin frosh with a score of 12-19.

The game Saturday with the Cavaliers gives every indication of a lively scrap as they were defeated by the Old Line frosh by approximately the same score as the Carolina yearlings.

The biggest defect brought out in the Maryland game was the lack of a concerted and sustained offense. Particular attention has been paid to offensive work this week. If coaches Enright and Sapp succeed in their efforts to build up an offensive to match the already strong defensive, the Tar Babies should return home with the better side of the score.

The freshman coaches have been experimenting in search for new material this week and it is quite probable that several members of the squad that have not seen action so far this season will get in the Virginia game.

Yesterday a long scrimmage was held with the varsity and a new light was shed on the offense which should function well Saturday, according to indications.

CONFERENCE RUN TO BE HELD HERE

Southern Cross-Country Meet Here Saturday Will Attract Great Runners.

Entry blanks for participation in the Southern Conference cross country meet to be held here next Saturday have been received from nine universities, according to the local athletic officials. The schools which have entered besides Carolina are Florida, Clemson, Georgia, Sewanee, Washington and Lee, V. P. I., Duke, State, and Georgia Tech. Maryland, Virginia, Auburn and Vanderbilt have not yet sent in their entry blanks, although it is probable that one or more of these schools will enter.

The meet, which is scheduled to begin at 2:30, will be preceded by a freshman state championship meet in which teams representing Duke, State and Carolina are expected to take part.

A sprint run on Kenan field has been planned while the cross country meet is on, with Farmer, Smith, Case, and Marland participating. This run is expected to attract much attention, as all of these men are well known in local track circles, except Marland, who is a transfer from Purdue University. Farmer was last year an outstanding freshman sprinter and excelled especially in the 220 yard run. He came within one-fifth of a second of the Southern Conference record in this event last year. Case was also an outstanding freshman sprinter last year. Smith, who was a varsity letterman last year, is expected to be one of the stalwarts of Carolina's track team next spring.

An announcement has also been made that loud speakers in the stadium will be used to keep the stands well informed of the progress of the harriers at different stages of the race. This innovation will no doubt please the large number of spectators expected to be in attendance at the meet.

Outstanding among teams already announcing entries are V. P. I., with its Miles and Palmer; Duke, with Simons as its outstanding runner; Georgia, with Bob Young, individual winner of last year's run; and the home-town Tar Heels, defending champions, with Captain Barkley and Baucom as their best bets.

The Tar Heels have won the event for three years running, but season records would seem to favor Bob Young to win the individual honors again, and V. P. I. the team honors.

The V. P. I. harriers beat the Tar Heels in an early season meet, 24-33. Miles and Palmer took first and second places away from the Tar Heels for the first time in years of meets.

Simons, of Duke, is another outstanding contender. Simons broke the Navy course record this year, but Captain Barkley of Carolina led him home by a scant 60 yards in the Carolina-Duke dual meet. Baucom is another of the Tar Heels who rates as an outstanding contender.

PASSING ATTACK IS STRESSED IN GRID WORK-OUT

Tar Heel Mentors Devote Time To Improving Aerial Offense And Defense; Kickers Get Action.

The 32-point Tar Heels, priming for their Thanksgiving game with Virginia, concentrated today on improving their already vaunted passing attack.

Reports that Virginia stopped Washington and Lee's passing cold in the second half, while uncorking a counter-passing offensive for a 13-13 tie, may have been the cause.

Anyway the Tar Heel mentors alternately worked three backfield combines and a dozen ends on pass offense and pass defense. The squad needs more practice on both before the Virginia game, the coaches said.

The linemen worked again on fundamentals of blocking and on the bucking machine, with a short period at taking out freshman linemen for a varsity backfield composed of Jimmy Moore, quarter; Jimmy Maus and Rip Slusser, halfbacks; and Henry House, fullback. The first string line was intact. Everybody worked.

Bill Cerney, backfield coach, staged another punting practice following the regular workout, with Jimmy Maus and Rip Slusser breaking near even for kicking honors.

Henry House, fullback, was working with the veteran backfield of Wyrick, Ward and Nash, while Spaulding, fullback, worked with Jackson, quarter, and Maus and Erickson, halfbacks.

PHI ASSEMBLY TO CHOOSE DEBATERS

The Phi Assembly held its regular weekly meeting Tuesday night in its hall in New East building. Representative Wilkinson reported that the tryouts for the Phi debaters in the Mary D. Wright debate will be held Tuesday night, November 26th, in the Phi hall, immediately after the adjournment of the joint meeting of the Di and Phi societies.

The assembly, after a brief discussion, accepted the invitation of the Di Senate to meet with them in a joint session at the time of the next regular meeting. The suggestion of the Di Senate that the topic of discussion for the joint meeting be "Resolved, that the Daily Tar Heel in the University is basicly sound and practical," was approved by the Assembly.

Upon motion that a committee be appointed to look into the matter of publishing a register of the roll of the Phi Assembly since 1887, the time of the issuance of the last register, Speaker Allbright named Representatives Yarborough, chairman, Hobgood, and Baldwin, a committee to investigate the practicality of publishing such a register. He asked that the committee report its findings at the next meeting.

The resolution "that self-help is not to be encouraged except in cases where there are no other sources of income" was defeated by vote of the Assembly. Representatives Baldwin, Brown, and Wilkinson spoke in favor of the resolution, and Representatives James, Lang, Haywood, and Greer led the opposition to it.

Chemical Society Meets In Raleigh

The North Carolina section of the American Chemistry Society was held Monday at State College. Dr. Cameron of the University presided. Among the members present was Dr. J. E. Mills, formerly of the University chemistry department and now member of the chemistry section of the National Research Council.

The purpose of this meeting was to ascertain what investigations were going on, who was working on them, and what was considered to support in a productive way the research possibilities in both the academic schools and the industrial plants of North Carolina. There were about 55 chemists present, seven of whom described briefly the investigations which they were conducting. All the chief educational institutions of the state were represented, and also several of the large industrial plants. It was brought out that the library facilities for research at the University were remarkably good and that Duke has a fine and rapidly growing technical library.

A committee consisting of Dr. Edmister of Carolina, Dr. Halverson of State, and Dr. Wilson of Duke was appointed to investigate the requirements of the high and secondary schools' science departments, especially those applying to teachers of chemistry.

MISS BEUST TO ADDRESS RALEIGH WOMAN'S CLUB

Miss Nora Beust, librarian of the school of education, will address the Woman's Club of Raleigh today on the subject of children's books. This meeting of the club is to be held in celebration of "Children's Book Week," which is being observed in elementary schools throughout the nation.

Miss Beust will take to Raleigh with her, books which illustrate recent developments in literary production for young readers, and will develop her lecture with the display of these books before the club.

"Children's Book Week," is held the third week of November every year, for the purpose of encouraging the reading of good literature among boys and girls. It is sponsored by the Booksellers' League of America, which has the cooperation of librarians and elementary grade teachers throughout the country. Some of its objects are to direct the attention of parents to better books for boys and girls which encourage publishers to publish books for boys and girls which have greater literary value.

Boxers Work

A large squad of boxers is working out daily and some of the workouts turn into hot battles, especially when overzealous freshmen get a chance to "make good." Several promising freshmen are trying out, and Coach Rowe expects more after football season is over. Indications point to a successful season for both freshmen and varsity.

Intramural Games

Phi Delta Theta won over Sigma Alpha Epsilon 1 to 0. Sigma Nu won over Pi Kappa Alpha three first downs to two. Beta Theta Pi and Delta Kappa Epsilon tied 4-4. Kappa Sigma won over Theta Chi 6 to 0. Zeta Psi won over Theta Chi 20 to 0. Manly won over Steele 24 to 0.

There are only three more scheduled games. The 4:30 period today will be devoted to the playing off of ties or postponed games.

DI SENATE HOLDS LENGTHY SESSION

The meeting of the Dialectic senate Tuesday night in New West building was the longest of the quarter thus far, this being occasioned by the fact of a full calendar and the need for transaction of business.

Making his final report for the committee on the Mary D. Wright debate, Senator Simpson announced the selection of Senators Williams and Shreve as the personnel of the Di team which will meet representatives of the Phi in the annual debate on the night of December 10 in Gerrard hall.

Reporting for the dance committee, Senator McPherson called attention to the fact that the annual dance would be given in the Di hall on the night of December 6. The senator reminded the senate that rules of eligibility for the affair demand that all dues and fees be paid before participation; that is, all regular dues plus the special fee of one dollar for the dance itself.

The following men were initiated after having been granted membership by a vote of the senate: Yarborough, Maybank, Patterson, Brooks, Shepherd, Rose and Hammand.

Representative Carr, of the Phi assembly, informed the senate that the Phi in accordance with the invitation of the Di would meet with the senate in joint session in the Di hall on Tuesday night, November 26. It was decided that the following measure would come up for debate at that time: "Resolved, that the issuance of the Daily Tar Heel at the University of North Carolina is basically sound and practical."

Late in the course of the meeting a heated discussion arose over the following resolution: "Resolved, that the Dialectic senate go on record as stating that the practice of catching rides on highway is detrimental to the students of the University." Senator McIver opened the discussion in opposition to the measure. He was assisted by Senators Rector, Moore, Herkimer, Hammond and Dratler. Senators Shreve and Webb opposed the measure. The bill was defeated.

Mrs. N. W. Walker will entertain at her home today, at 1:30 p. m., the wives of the members of the faculty of the school of education.

Audience To Be Shown How Marionettes Are Operated

will be given tonight at 8:30. The special children's matinee at 3:30 is Howard O. Garis' play, "Uncle Wiggily at the Circus," being a staged version of the adventures of the famous rabbit gentleman. The company is the largest that has ever toured the United States and is so full of originality that comparisons are impossible. The Pittsburgh Sun said, "It differs from other marionette shows as dawn from night." Student coupon books are good for both performances. For the afternoon program single admissions are 25 cents for children and 50 cents for adults. In the evening all admissions are one dollar.

to interview some of the many prisoners and elicit from them, if possible, information which would be of value to the Allied forces. One of the many whom he interviewed was August Muller, who showed himself to be above the ordinary in intelligence. Mr. Dyer, who was at that time a sergeant, had many talks with Muller and they became good friends. But due to the vagaries of war, the German and American officers soon separated and did not see one another until their chance meeting in the Hotel Pensylvnania. In ten years which have elapsed since their last meeting, much had happened to both officers. Professor Dyer studied and taught at a few of the major universities in this country, finally becoming director of music here this quarter. Mr. Muller came to America, soon after the armistice, opened a small shop in a suburb of New York and then with the money he earned there, entered the fur trade.

PRESS PRAISING PRESENTATIONS OF PLAYMAKERS

Receive Ovation After Performance In Petersburg, Va.; In New York Today.

According to reviews and newspaper criticisms the Carolina Playmakers have met with success on the northern tour, which began last Saturday, and continues through November 30.

Presenting Paul Green's negro comedy "The No 'Count Boy," Gertrude Wilson Coffin's mountain comedy "Magnolia's Man," and the one-act version of Loretto Carroll Bailey's mill play "Job's Kinfolks," the Playmakers appeared in Petersburg for the first performance of the tour Saturday.

One-act plays were something of an innovation in Petersburg, and the Playmakers, performing there for the first time, were given considerable publicity. They played at the Petersburg high school under the auspices of the Parent-Teacher Association. Of the coming of the troupe the Progress-Index said, "Their appearance here is something distinctive in the theatrical life of the city."

Reviewing the performance, the same paper said: "To adequately review three such plays would require much space and a paragraph to each of the actors, one of the stage staff, and another to the directors.

"Artistry, combined with good taste, excellent acting, sincerity, a well-trained cast, and an appreciative audience made the production one which will linger long in the memories of those who saw it."

The work of Holmes Bryson as the No 'Count Boy was given high praise.

"It is believe that this change," the Progress-Index stated, "will improve the program, in as much as 'Job's Kinfolks' received perhaps more enthusiastic criticism than any play offered by the Playmakers last year."

For several days preceding the appearance of the troupe the Progress-Index carried numerous stories about the Playmakers, ranging from descriptions of the "famous show-bus, which carries both players and all stage equipment," to an article on Elmer Hall, the technical director of the group. Gros Marionettes Give Two Performances Here

"Skippy" and "Uncle Wiggily At The Circus" Given by Jean Gros' Company; Shows In Tin Can.

The Jean Gros French Marionettes lived up to every expectation in their performance before an enthusiastic audience in the Tin Can last night. The program was versatile in the extreme, for besides Percy L. Crosby's "Skippy", an illuminated ballet, the newest things in the marionette field, using four Aesop's fables with amplified music by the marionettephone (a diminutive vitaphone), was presented as a distinct novelty. The ballet was presented against a dark background and different colored lights were thrown on the puppets who were in this case manipulated without strings. The illusion was quite startling and effective.

The character of "Skippy" is one of the most popular in modern fiction. Almost everyone has seen Crosby's cartoons of the little ragged urchin in Life and other magazines, while many have read the book called, "Skippy". The marionettes made the unique little fellow funny, wistful, charming and pathetic in their presentation which was so uncanny that it seemed almost human. So cleverly staged was the entire performance including settings, lighting, music and other essentials of the complete theatre, that it was difficult to realize that the whole thing was in minature and that a competent controlling everything from above and behind scenes.

The marionettes offered a very unusual entertainment—one which was appreciated by adults as well as children. "Uncle Wiggily at the Circus", the matinee presentation, was attended by a large group of children.

Graduate Club Is Active On Campus

The recent reception and dance given by the graduate club bring again before the eyes of the campus the existence of this organization about which, as a club, little seems to be known.

The graduate club is named after Shirley Graves, distinguished teacher at the University, who died in 1925. Professor Graves was an authority on the Restoration drama, and at the time of his death occupied a position equal to that of Dr. Taylor, the authority on Elizabethan literature, and Dr. Greenlaw, formerly professor of English here. When the renovation of the Smith building was completed the trustees of the University gave it over to the graduate students, many of them instructors on the faculty, as their own dormitory. These students decided to form an organized club naming it after the first graduate student to obtain a degree here. The records, however, indicated that many of the earlier advanced degrees were honorary, and there could be no definite certainty about the first student to receive a degree. As a result the club decided to use the name of Shirley Graves, in memory of the noted scholar.

The Smith building is easily the most modern and best equipped dormitory on the campus with its spacious living rooms, its excellent boarding facilities, and its large and comfortably furnished lobby, fitted up for social and recreational purposes.

It is in this lounge the social life of the club takes place. Coffee is served every evening, and on Sundays there are afternoon teas. The club gives a reception, followed by dancing, every fall and spring. At least once a year a faculty smoker is given. There are departmental dinners, and dinners for meetings of various scholastic and honorary organizations. Finally, there is the Cotillion club, composed of graduate students and the younger faculty members, which gives occasional dances.

The present officers of the Graduate club are the following: M. D. Whitaker, president; J. Glenn Edwards, secretary; and George Metz, treasurer.

RED CROSS DRIVE BEGINS NEXT WEEK

The student Red Cross drive will be staged the first part of next week. Next Monday night from 9:15 to 10:15 each dormitory and fraternity house on the campus will be convassed for Red Cross membership.

Ray Farris will have charge of the canvassing of the dormitories, and he will be helped by all of the dormitory officers. Each set of dormitory officers will, of course, canvas their own building.

"Red" Green will manage the fraternity canvassing, and from each fraternity there will be two representatives who will work in their separate houses. This drive has been put over big each year so far, and it is hoped by the local Red Cross chapter that as many students as possible will join.

Dr. Parry Borgstron of the Naval Research Laboratories spent the past week in Chapel Hill visiting Dr. Cameron and Dr. Bost.

Warning To Public

The public is warned not to buy student football tickets to the Carolina-Virginia game. All student tickets will be carefully checked at the gates and when found in the hands of other than U. N. C. students they will be declared void. Officers will be instructed to arrest those offering to sell student tickets.

Proceeds From Show Saturday To Go For Thanksgiving Dinner

A special morning picture show has been arranged for Saturday at 10:30 a. m. at the Carolina Theatre by local organizations interested in social service. The proceeds are to be given to the county's unfortunate people in the form of baskets of food on Thanksgiving Day.

The special show, George Bancroft in "The Mighty," is being sponsored jointly by the Carolina Theatre, the U. D. C., and the Chapel Hill Rotary club.

Children of school age will be admitted free if they bring a gift of food. Manager E. C. Smith of the Carolina Theatre urges that the food be of the non-perishable kind if possible. "Bring a ham and see the show and know that you are helping to feed the poor of Chapel Hill and vicinity on Turkey Day," said Mr. Smith.

Bronze Names For New Library Rooms

The purpose of these is to indicate plainly the names of the various rooms. Each name is made up of individual letters, which are driven into the transoms. The letters are of severe Roman style.

Chief Foister Says Fire Department Not Allowed To Go Beyond City Limits

Chief Foister in an interview with a representative of the Tar Heel yesterday afternoon in regard to the Kenfield fire of Wednesday said: "The call came in to the station and the department was informed that the fire was sounded through Box 47, which is the last fire box in that section of the town. The truck went out to the city limits and stopped there. Our instructions are not to go beyond the city limits except under special orders. Townspeople do not realize that, were the apparatus to go past the city limits, the town proper would have no protection in case of another fire at the same time. To go beyond the city limits requires a conference of the city manager, the fire commissioner, and the fire chief. This is, as it is plainly seen, practically impossible on short notice."

Mrs. Kenfield is reported to have offered to pay the cost of the use of the apparatus, but according to Chief Foister, the offer was not made to the proper authorities until too late to save the house.

"It is not a matter of payment," continued Chief Foister, "as the cost is practically negligible, but the underwriters' law, based as it is on the amount of equipment of the fire department and the extent of the fire jurisdiction, would prevent us from going in most cases.

"The nine men who went out with me were ordered off the truck to do what they could in saving the house next door, owned by Mr. Sawyer of the buildings department.

"According to Mr. Sawyer the work done by the firemen saved his home from catching fire from the Kenfield house. The firemen sprinkled the Sawyer house with chemicals to save it, knowing that they could not save the Kenfield dwelling with chemicals as the fire had too much headway for the chemicals to do any good.

There are no water plugs near the Kenfield home, and there is not enough hose to reach from the nearest plug to the house.

"After taking the truck to the edge of town," continued Chief Foister, "I left the men to do what they could on the Sawyer house and drove back to the station.

"P. L. Burch, fire commissioner, came to the station and said that probably chemicals would prevent the fire from spreading.

Unique Decorations To Feature Coming Dances

Jack Crawford's Orchestra Will Furnish Music; Five Dances Will Be Given.

As a co-feature of the annual Carolina-Virginia game, the Fall dances are to be held the two days following Thanksgiving. Jack Crawford, better known as the "Clown Prince of Jazz," and his famous orchestra will furnish the music.

Elaborate preparations are now underway for the decorating of Swain hall. The scheme of decorating the hall is unique and different from any previous manner of covering up its bareness. As planned, the hall will be in the design of an Arabian tent. The ceiling will be fixed so that the ballroom will have the appearance of an enormous tent. The orchestra box will likewise be arranged in the same manner, as will the chaperones' boxes at each end of the room.

The first dance will take place Friday afternoon from four until six o'clock. This dance will be followed by a dance that night from nine-thirty until one. Three dances are on tap for Saturday. The first of these will be held from eleven a. m. until one p. m., the second from four until six that afternoon, and the final ball that night from nine-thirty until twelve.

Tickets for the dances are now on sale to all members of the German Club. Will Yarborough, treasurer, has these. The fee for the dances is five dollars plus the yearly dues of twelve dollars. Yarborough announces that all members must secure their tickets before Monday night at nine o'clock. Tickets may be gotten from him at the S. A. E. house in the evenings between seven and nine.

REPRESENTATIVE RED CROSS TALKS HERE IN CHAPEL

Mrs. Elise Mulliken Tells Advantages of Movement; To Drive for 500 Student Members.

Mrs. Elise Mulliken, national field representative of the Red Cross from Washington, discussed in chapel Thursday the drive for membership in the Red Cross to take place here Monday. The speaker was introduced by H. F. Comer, who also made a few explanatory remarks concerning the drive. It is to be conducted by the Student Council. From 9:15 to 10:15 Monday night every person on the campus will be given an opportunity to subscribe the price of membership of one dollar to the cause.

In her talk Mrs. Mulliken presented a colorful appeal for the cause. Speaking of the type of work of the Red Cross, Mrs. Mulliken said that it included work from aid to individuals to prominent service in disasters such as tornadoes. She pointed out the tremendous benefit to mankind of this service, mentioning especially its help in the time of war.

An interesting part of Mrs. Mulliken's speech was a brief tracing of the history of the Red Cross. She told of its beginning in Switzerland in the desire of a few people to alleviate suffering in war. From this small beginning has grown the tremendous movement in which 59 nations are taking part. Of these nations Mrs. Mulliken said the United States has one of the greatest organizations. She explained the strength of the American Red Cross by pointing to the support given it by the government.

The Red Cross worker appealed to the students to support this cause by showing its benefits. She declared that it was a helpful force in each community as well as in the nation as a whole. She urged the students to respond in the work of the local chapter, which is headed by Col. Joseph Hyde Pratt. Col. Pratt expects to enlist at least 500 of the citizens of the town and as many more students in the move.

Captain Farmer Will Handle Traffic Here

Announcement last night by Graduate Manager Woollen that Captain Farmer and a number of his deputies of the state highway patrol will be in charge of traffic at the Carolina-Virginia game Thanksgiving gave assurance that fans will get in and out of Chapel Hill with a minimum of time and inconvenience.

Captain Farmer's force will be supplemented by special squads of traffic police from nearby towns.

Ample parking room has been provided, three athletic fields, and other space having been set aside.

All seniors in the college of liberal arts whose names begin with "J" through "L," please report to Dean Hibbard's office, 203 South building, between 9 and 12 and 2 and 4 o'clock.

Civil Engineers To Make Traffic Count

Members of the senior class in civil engineering will make a traffic count in Chapel Hill all day Friday. This work will be done as a part of the course in city planning, and will be directed by R. M. Trimble, instructor of the course.

Nine traffic stations have been selected as points where the counts will be made, and the two men assigned to each stati will work in shifts to obtain an all-day count of traffic passing the station.

The stations selected are all at corners, and from the data obtained street intersection studies will be made for Chapel Hill on an average day.

In addition to obtaining the traffic count of Chapel Hill for an average day, the class may take a similar count on Thanksgiving day to determine the maximum traffic on Chapel Hill streets.

SMALL FIRE YESTERDAY

The Fire Department responded to a call at the home of Rufus Weaver in the Windy Hill section of town yesterday morning at 11:00 o'clock.

The blaze was caused by a spark from the chimney on the roof and did a little damage. Neighbors had extinguished the blaze before the firemen arrived.

The fire was outside the city limits but Fire Commissioner Burch gave Chief Foister permission to go.

Music Appreciation?

Last week the Marine Band, probably the finest musical organization of its type in the United States, presented two concerts here under the auspices of the University Y.M.C.A. Approximately $2,000 was expended in bringing the band to Chapel Hill; the Y officials expected to incur a small deficit on the concerts, reasoning that the financial loss would be compensated for by the fact that the undergraduates would be given an opportunity to hear some really worthwhile music.

Audiences of perhaps 500 persons were in attendance at each of the two concerts. Composed almost entirely of townspeople and faculty members, these audiences were much smaller than the most pessimistic of predictions had estimated. As a result the Y lost a very large proportion of the sum represented by the total expenses incurred in bringing the band to Chapel Hill.

Many persons capable of appreciating good music look with disfavor upon band concerts, it is true. The socially-minded are likely to regard bands with disdain. In their estimation symphony orchestras are much more "fashionable" than bands; they regard band concerts as rather declasse. This attitude is especially prevalent within the University faculty circles, among the professors and their wives. But even these disdainers of band music must admit that it is vastly superior to the hideous jazz that reigns supreme among the undergraduates. Although the more complicated of symphonies and operas cannot be easily comprehended by the novice, there is something lacking in the makeup of the person who is not attracted by good music, who does not respond to the elements of the divine represented by it—one of the few things within the range of human perception which really deserves the adjective divine.

An excellent music appreciation course (Music 3) is offered by the University. If the reception accorded the Marine Band is any indication, the average student here is utterly indifferent to good music, if not lacking in the capacity to appreciate it. A survey made here four years ago by the ill-fated Faun, a publication devoted to undergraduate opinion, disclosed that classical records were practically unknown in most of the frat houses on the local campus; since that time jazz and its equally disreputable ally, the cheaply sentimental music that has been composed in tremendous quantities during the past year, have certainly not decreased in popularity. Probably a compulsory course in music appreciation would be more productive of real benefit to the undergraduate than any other curricular change that might be made at the University.

Censorship

One would think that in this land of the free the question of censorship should be handled with gloves so that it would not be made evident as an infringement on the inalienable rights of citizenship. But there is no opportunity of handling the problem delicately; censorship is brought before our eyes constantly as a very real and objectionable form of American bigotry and narrow-minded prudery. The most representative city for this virulent expression of the restriction of liberty is of course Boston, notorious for its municipal censor who regularly gains publicity by his efforts to safeguard the morals of the Hub City residents. But Boston's reputation for bigoted censorship, like Chicago's crime record, is familiar because of the wide notoriety obtained through newspapers and periodicals.

The censorship evil, unfortunately, extends far wider; it assumes universal proportions. Custom officials ban Joyce's Ulysses, the unexpurgated Arabian Nights, and dozens of others; the library in Julia Peterkin's home town refuses to place Scarlet Sister Mary on the shelves; Desire Under the Elms was banned in Los Angeles and the entire cast placed under arrest. To return to Boston any number of examples can be mentioned: Hemmingway's Farewell to Arms, Remarque's All Quiet on the Western Front, O'Neill's Strange Interlude. Periodically the censor, with apparently no protest from the citizenry, investigates libraries and bookstores, and anything considered lewd that falls under his careful observation, regardless of its reputation or literary merit, is officially censored, and the smirking Bostonians must rush pell mell elsewhere to obtain or to see this most obscene object of the censor's disapproval.

This evil extends to other fields besides literature. It is well known that many moving pictures are "cut" when they come from a liberal to a blue-law state. Picture after picture comes south mangled beyond any hope of unity and logical order or devoid of some scenes that the smug censor considers too "hot" for the passionate southerner. This often extends to ludicrous limits. When the German production Variety, with Emil Jannings, was first imported it was screened here as abroad. But when it traveled south (the cutting usually begins in Pennsylvania) the first two reels were taken out, all because they portrayed the hero as an adulterer. The innocent southerner enjoyed the feature, placidly seeing it under the delusion that Janning's mistress was his wife. And then they went home to read in the newspapers about the infamous Gray-Snyder triangle! When will the upright censor begin doing his work on the newspapers?

Censorship, besides narrowing down personal liberty to a perilously thin edge, accomplishes nothing besides the making evident of a smugly rotten hypocrisy. The way this evil is practiced defeats its own purpose. The minute something is banned the purient ones, who in all probability would never have heard of the novel or the play or the poem otherwise, move heaven and earth to satisfy themselves as to the content. Occasionally the practice of censorship brings before the public a work of true literary value which would otherwise have remained obscure and unknown. But usually the ones who profit by the wretched performance are the authors, who chuckle with glee to see the shekels roll in. To be the author of a banned book puts one in the moneyed class,—and the lustful ones leer, the playwright tears his hair in rage, the audiences curse impotently at the cut photoplay,—and the vulgar burlesque, the daring reviews, the smutty magazines go merrily on under the shadow of this absurdly grotesque hydre, hypocritical censorship.—R. H.

Firemen Who Can't Save the Child

(H. J. G.)

Much criticism has been expressed recently due to the action of the Chapel Hill Fire Department. The fire at the rubbish dump last week occasioned the first remarks, and the Kenfield fire this week has reawakened the inquiring individuals who want to know "Why?"

According to witnesses, the fire department arrived at the Kenfield fire, looked over the ground, found the house to be burning merrily, and watched it without further action. Further, this is more or less what happened.

Chief Foister, after answering the alarm in double-quick time, found the fire was just beyond the town lines. He was powerless to do anything about it. Chapel Hill is underwritten in Class B. A Fire Department is maintained for property-holders who pay taxes within the boundaries of the town. It is the duty of the department to protect the town and the town alone. If an alarm is answered outside the limits, the hose in unrolled and the fire fought, then the risk is run that a fire will break out within the town lines. In such a case, it is clear that the firemen must be ready at all times to attend the fires in the town.

When, as was the case with the rubbish fire last week, it is found that there is not sufficient hose to cover the fire and leave a surplus in case of another call, the Durham department is called on. Chief Foister ment is called on. Chief Foister, after looking over the fire last week, sent Durham a call. They responded with a thousand feet of hose and six men, who were stationed in the fire house to take care of local calls while the local force was fighting the rubbish fire. This accounted for the men and the apparatus seen in the fire house while a fire was raging in the vicinity of the town..

Orders are officially given Chief Foister, and he is forced to carry them out. His force, with the exception of two men, is entirely voluntary and receives no pay. They are always ready and have proved their worth many times. For them, and for the Chief, who is following orders, there is no criticism. The fault lies in the inflexibility of the orders given, and in the failure of the property-owners outside of the town lines to pay taxes and insist that they be included in the jurisdiction of the local fire force. Until this is done, we will have such scenes as the Kenfield fire—Chapel Hill firemen, with their equipment, watching a Chapel Hill blaze, and powerless to get into action.

JUST BEFORE THE BATTLE MOTHER

Tune: Unnecessary

To be sung at two o'clock in the morning from a third story dormitory window.

I'll poke my head from the window
And howl at the moon and the sky.
I'm only a poor little freshman—
O, how I wish I could die!
(loud and mournful)
Or maybe the title of Soph.
I loudly and strenuously claim,
(weaker)
But still I'm sad and lonely,
And what's the difference in a name?
(high and very mournful)
The dorms and the campus are silent.
The mid-night oil has burned low.
I'm a child of bright lights and noise;
This silence gives my heart woe.
(howlingly)
I came to old Carolina
Much pleasure expecting to find,
But why must there be that long interval
From one a. m. until nine?
(sad and questioningly)
Spirit. Is there none in Carolina
That coincides with my own?
Oh, Why am I left at this time
Through these long silent hours to moan? (hopelessly)
Oh joy! I see through a window
O'er yonder a light is turned on Silhouetting in its radiance a head
With hair all tousled and torn.

The song ends with a triumphant burst as the garbage cans of the English language are emptied from several dormitory windows.

A SLEEPYHEAD.

WEINES COMING DOWN!

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I am, in common with a few hundred others, a student in the University of North Carolina. That fact seems sufficient to numerous friends outside for me to perform miracles possible only to Moses and a selected group of Biblical prophets. My names is not Moses.

I have been requested, at this late date, to get tickets for the Carolina-Virginia game "on the fifty-yard line," "at least on the thirty-yard line" and (actually) two in the Governor's box. How this is to be accomplished I for one don't know, and certainly Mr. Woollen, who is doing a man's-sized job, doesn't know either. I have, however, a little idea.

Do you think it would be possible to suspend a swinging box on cables directly over the center of the field? Friends, alumni, visitors and others who request tickets and expect to get them on the fifty-yard line at the last minute could then have their wishes granted. Nor is this the best feature of the plan. At a suitable moment, it would be possible to cut the cables, and thus solve another campus problem. But, Mr. Editor, I reserve the right to do the cutting.

WOOTTEN - MOULTON

The Campus

By Joe Jones

Said President Kemp Battle to Governor Jarvis on the rostrum of an overcrowded Garrard hall during the commencement exercises of 1883, "Governor, if you will promise that next year we will have a building to accommodate everybody, I will show you where the money will come from." "Agreed," answered the Governor; whereupon from the audience came great applause, especially loud and long from the large number of spectators who were of necessity standing outside looking in through windows and doors. And that was the beginning of Memorial Hall.

Dr. Battle at once appointed a committee to obtain subscriptions, while Governor Jarvis went straight back to Raleigh and ordered a supply of favorably priced bricks from the State Prison brick kiln. Sam Sloan, a Philadelphia architect, was engaged. He submitted his plans, named $20,000 as the cost, and began to build. But the $20,000 was extremely slow in appearing.

However, there was at the time a movement on foot in Raleigh to erect a cenotaph to President Swain on the University campus, so the architect said, "A cenotaph isn't very practical, so why not use that money to help with the auditorium." All agreed, and the work went forward.

Soon, however, Mr. Sloan restated the cost as $25,000, which was $5,000 more than he had at first expected. More subscriptions were pledged, and the work went forward. In a short while Mr. Sloan said he was sorry but that it was going to cost $30,000. President Battle said, "All right, we'll turn the building into a general memorial hall. We'll put in marble tablets commemorating prominent alumni and officers of the University, and collect funds for the tablets from the friends and descendants of these men. We'll use the surplus for the building." This they did, and the work went forward.

In two weeks Mr. Sloan begged pardon and said it would cost $40,000. Dr. Battle and Professor Winston, after a long hard struggle, collected $10,000 on the tablets, and the work again went forward.

When the time came to raise the great wooden supporting arches a celebration was planned. Speeches were made, formalities were gone through with, and the arches were raised high in air. But the tackle jammed, the ropes broke, the arches crashed to the ground, the crowd scattered, and the meeting was broken up.

"Now," said Mr. Sloan, "it's going to cost $45,000. A loan was made by Paul C. Cameron, but before the structure could be finished Mr. Sloan died from sunstroke. Then his two assistants, A. G. Bauer and John Richards, proceeded to carry on the work. They at last completed Memorial hall, and then both of them committed suicide.

CONN HOLDS FELLOWSHIP

The American Petroleum Institute yearly awards to Yale, Johns Hopkins, North Western, Princeton, Illinois, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and other large institutions a fellowship for fundamental research paying a thousand dollars. It has been awarded this year to only two southern universities, The Universities of Texas and North Carolina. This is considered a signal honor for the University to have. Miller Conn holds this fellowship and is working under the direction of Dr. Bost, now assistant professor of chemistry of the University. His project is the investigation of the preparation and propertiea of the Thiophenes, a type of sulphur compounds about which very little is known. Mr. Conn is a graduate of Mississippi.

Ted Lewis' New Record Leads Columbia Releases

"Aha, Stick Around a While! It's Ted Lewis, singing "Lady Luck" a-top of the pile of new Columbia record this week, under his own blac kand silver seal. His trick-of-the-week is to make rowdy with this music-box tune, and then on the other side sail right off in "My Little Dream Boat" with sweet little curlycues, both styles done as only Ted can.

Five dollars was the cost of the first cable message to England.

HINES LEADING BRYAN GRANT IN TENNIS FINALS

Columbia Youth Wins First Two Sets, 7-5 and 6-4; Grant Rallies to Take Third 8-6.

The finals of the University tennis tournament yesterday between Wilmer Hines and Bryan Grant were postponed until this afternoon on account of darkness, after three sets had been played. The first two sets went to Hines, 7-5, 6-4, and the third to Grant, 8-6.

As the scores indicate, the players were well matched, with neither having any distinct advantage. Both Hines and Grant played a faultless, conservative game, and the ball was kept seesawing back and forth on almost every play. Grant showed unusual ability in returning apparently impossible shots, while Hines excelled in net work and service.

Grant made a spectacular come-back in the third set when, after it had been set-and-match-point against him two times with the score 5-3, he rallied to win the set 8-6. Grant had the edge on love games taken, with three compared to two for Hines. In the service, only two double faults were served one by each player, while Hines completed the only service ace of the match.

The play-off will take place this afternoon at 3:15 on the varsity courts.

VARSITY SHOWS MUCH PUNCH IN PRACTICE GAME

Run Up Five Touchdowns Against Freshmen; Fail To Kick Extra Points.

A scrimmage-hungry Carolina varsity today got its first taste of real battle since the Davidson game, with results that bode ill for Virginia, if the Tar Heels can approach the same fast pace.

The varsity ran up five touchdowns in rapid fire succession on an average freshman club. Jimmy Ward, high-scoring left halfback, was running hard, as he ran against South Carolina and Davidson, and carried three of the five across. Strud Nash, right half, and Don Holt, left end, carried one apiece across the goal on long passes and runs.

The "point number 7" attack, however, was still sadly lacking. The Tar Heel kickers failed on four of five attempts. And Coach Collins closed yesterday's workout with a long practice in which the Tar Heels showed fair skill in gaining the extra points by methods other than kicking.

Two other clubs concentrated on dummy scrimmage, to get the hang of the Virginia plays.

The varsity was intact. There was not an injury, and the whole squad was in high spirits.

The lineup against the freshmen showed Holt and Fenner, ends; Koenig and Adkins, tackles; Captain Farris, Fysal and Eskew, guards; Lipscomb, center; Wyrick, quarterback; Ward and Nash, halfbacks; and Spaulding, fullback.

STATE RACE FOR FROSH HARRIERS TO BE SATURDAY

The freshman cross country teams of Duke, State and Carolina will meet each other next Saturday afternoon at 2:30 at Kenan stadium in a run for the state championship. In previous meets Carolina has beaten both Duke and State by fairly large margins. In the dual meet between the Duke and State frosh, Duke emerged victorious over the Techmen.

The Tar Babies are taking strenuous workouts in preparation for the meet Saturday, and are not any too over-confident because of their previous victories over both of their opponents.

Semi-Finals In Golf

The second day of match play in the University golf tournament at Hope Valley narrowed the field to five contestants. Results of yesterday's play were as follows: Bellenger defeated Brooks one up on the 19th hole; Willis defeated Barkley 3 and 2; Stewart defeated O'Brien 3 and 2; and Chatham defeated Brown one up.

Today's play is as follows: Chatham plays Goodes with the winner meeting Ballenger in the semi-finals; Willis and Stewart play in the semi-finals.

In the consolation round Hudson defeated Petty 4 and 3 and Crawford defeated Sample 7 and 6.

Braune Returns Today

G. M. Braune, dean of the school of engineering, who has been in Boston attending a series of distortion tests made upon corrugated cast-iron pipe at the materials testing laboratory of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, will return to Chapel Hill late Friday evening, and will be at his office Saturday morning.

("Heinie")

ACCORDING to the dispatches from the Associated Press, written by Eddie Brietz, Captain Ray Farris, Tar Heel, will be among the first rank southern contenders for all-American honors. Captain Farris was the only one mentioned from the Tar Heel eleven for this mythical All-American team. He was lined up with six or seven other outstanding southern football leaders, most of whom were back field men.

NEARLY all of the leading southern teams are being given the rest cure in preparation for the Thanksgiving tilts. The Collinsmen, although not having any games scheduled for this week-end, don't seem to be paying much attention to the order of "rest." Hard work has featured the workouts for the Tar Heels this week and the daily grind doesn't seem to have let up much.

MINOR sports are taking the limelight at U. N. C. this week. The southern conference cross-country meet here Saturday is the most outstanding, while the tennis and golf tournaments have been taking the headlines for the middle of the week. The headliner for today is the cake race, while yesterday afternoon the finals in the fraternity tag football league shared the spotlight with the finals in the tennis tournament.

THE SOUTHERN conference cross-country meet will draw the interest of about 10 of the southern colleges and universities to the "Hill" this Saturday. About 9 teams have already entered in the meet tomorrow and so close competition is expected. Although V. P. I. is favored to win the meet, it is not likely that the Tar Heels will let the southern title slip by without a hard struggle. The U. N. C. harriers will probably be represented by Captain Barkley, Cliff Baucom, Phoenix, Pierce, Farris, Rhodes, Brown, Cohen, Wrenn, and others.

THE FRESHMAN tennis team seems to outclass the varsity completely this year. In the tennis tournament which has been held for the past week or so, many of the varsity were eliminated by freshmen. In the finals two freshmen, Grant and Hines, are fighting it out for individual honors.

HEADLINES in recent newspaper articles indicate that "200 dark horses will compete in the annual Intramural cake race here. Although nearly all of these 200 (more or less) entries in the cake race are of uncertain ability it is expected that many of the "dark horses" will come through with record or near record time for the 2-mile course. Many of the entrants can truly say, "I don't know my own strength" in this case.

THE GOLF tournament that was started this week has encouraged quite a bit of speculation as to the probable winner. Charlie Chatham, the low score man in the qualifying round, is yet to play his first match. Bill Petty, in number two position, lost to C. V. Barkley in the first round, while Luther Stewart and Meade Willis, prominent members of last year's varsity have both come through in the first round.

In the year before the war, 17,202 Swedish immigrants came to the U. S.

ALL-TIME TEAM PICKED IN 1910 SPEEDY ELEVEN

Dr. Whitaker's Star Outfit Ran Hundred Under Eleven Seconds; Averaged 173 Pounds.

(By Crawford MacKethan)

Dr. Joel Whitaker in 1910 chose an all-time University of North Carolina football team for the News and Observer. The results of his labor appeared in the December 25 number of that paper and the following material has been taken from his article. It will be of interest to compare this team as chosen two decades ago with the one that will appear in the Tar Heel next Thursday morning as the 1929 selection.

The following team was the one that Dr. Whitaker chose from a mass of data sent in to him from a number of the alumni:

Pos.	Name	Wt.
L.E.	Gregory	160
L.G.	Guion	182
C.	Cunningham	148
R.G.	Collier	205
R.T.	Story	185
R.E.	Koehler	160
Q.B.	Jacocks	142
L.H.	Stephens	174
F.B.	Belden	175
R.H.	Carpenter	192

"This eleven with Gregory as captain, Jacocks for the drop kicking, Belden for the punting, and with the two ends going down on each side of the field, and Cunningham going straight down on kicks would make a most difficult team to beat. The team as a whole could easily run a hundred yards under eleven seconds and average 173 pounds.—Joel Whitaker."

The following are snatches taken from Dr. Whitaker's writeup:

"The present rules necessitate leaving off probably the best line plunger that has ever been seen in North Carolina, Roy Abernethy."

"At center there are four men who stand out most prominently: "Pete" Murphy of the teams of 1892 and 1893; Herbert Cunningham of 1896 and 1897; Council of 1900; Stewart, captain, in 1904. Howell's great run in 1898 was greatly due to the brilliancy of Cunningham. Murphy and Stewart with their great strength and massive forms plugged up the center of the line so tightly that it was difficult to get as much as a foot over them. Later, Council went to Virginia and developed into the greatest tackle in her history."

Dr. Whitaker mentioned a long list of flankmen whose brilliancy have marked them in the University football history. "Away back in 1891 and 1892 the names of Gibbs and Biggs were familiar to every college man in the south. Next came Merritt and Gregory. Then in 1898 came Koehler and in 1900-01-02 was Albert Cox. "Slip" Brown, 1905, while at Lafayette the year before, was mentioned for all-American end. "Nat" Townsend of the teams of 1902-03-04-05 was good but a little too light."

Additional snatches taken from Dr. Whitaker's article will be published in tomorrow's issue of the Tar Heel.

No Student Tickets Issued After Today

Betas Cop Fraternity Title On First Downs From Dekes

Teams Battle Four Periods Without Scoring; Race, Anderson, and Glenn Star For Winners; Chatham For Dekes.

A fighting D. K. E. team went down in defeat yesterday before a smoothly functioning Beta team in the deciding game of the fraternity league, the final score being six first downs to two. The Dekes failed to display the form they have shown in past games this season and only their grim fight against a superior attack kept the Betas from scoring.

McAllister kicked off for the Dekes, Race returning the ball to his own twenty-two yard line. Two short passes from Glenn to Bradham and H. Anderson and a four yard run by Race gave the Betas their first first-down. Three passes failing, Dressler punted to Chatham on the Beta forty-five yard line. They were held by the Betas and McAllister punted to Race on the twenty yard line. Glenn's pass to H. Anderson was good for thirty-five yards and another first down. The quarter ended as Race's pass to Waugh was broken up.

Dressler punted to the Deke forty yard line to open the second quarter. Chatham passed to McAllister for seven yards and followed it with another to Craig for four yards and a first down. The Dekes were unable to gain and McAllister punted to Race on his own ten yard line. A pass failed and Race punted. The Betas got the ball again on the next play when Race intercepted Chatham's pass on the twelve yard line. Two passes from Glenn to Anderson gained sixteen yards and the third first down. Glenn's pass to Race for six yards was completed as the half ended.

Glenn kicked off to McAllister who returned the ball twenty yards to the thirty-five yard line. Neither team was able to gain and resorted to punting. McAllister punted to Waugh who fumbled, Gray recovering for the Dekes on the Beta forty-five yard line. Chatham gained three, H. Anderson intercepted a pass on his own twenty-two yard line. Glenn passed to J. Anderson for twenty-five yards and a first down and followed it with another to H. Anderson for thirty-one yards. Chatham intercepted one on his own five-yard line and ran thirty-five yards before being downed. Race intercepted a pass on the next play, but the Betas were unable to gain and punted to Chatham. He passed thirty-five yards to Holderness, giving the Dekes their second first down. The ball went over on the thirty-yard line. A pass failed and Race ran twelve yards for a first down as the game ended.

The Betas in winning, presented a smooth attack centered around Glenn and Race. The whole team played an excellent defensive game, with Race and the Anderson brothers outstanding. The Dekes, badly off their usual form, could not get their passing attack to function. Chatham was their best bet on the offensive. The defense, starring Gordon Gray and Dale Holderness, fought hard and managed to prevent the Betas from scoring.

The Betas, as champions of the fraternity league, will meet the New Dorms next week to decide the campus title.

Aldermen Adopt Ordinance to End Nuisance of Peddlers on Streets

In consequence of an ordinance passed by the board of aldermen Wednesday evening, the people who come to the Thanksgiving Day football game will be spared the annoyance that has been inflicted upon other football crowds here by the invading army of hucksters and peddlers. At the Carolina-Georgia and other games the strangers selling colors, canes, unauthorized programs, and various novelties have made a nuisance of themselves by their aggressiveness and insufferable manners.

The following petition was submitted to the aldermen by citizens of the village:

"We, the undersigned, wish to express our approval of a city police ordinance forbidding the soliciting and selling of the various and sundry football colors, canes, programs, and novelties on the streets of Chapel Hill, particularly on the days when major football games are played in Chapel Hill. It is our earnest belief that the numerous such peddlers as are seen on the streets are not only undesirable and serve no useful purpose to the community when such articles can still be sold in the private stores and on private property (with the permission of the owner thereof), but we believe they are a hindrance to the business interests of the town and a harm to the general welfare of the community. It is our further belief that the situation will continue to grow even worse. Thus we are asking that some step be made to curb it."

The petition was signed by J. O. Harmon, Jack Lipman, L. A. Koontz, George Livas, J. L. Durham, W. B. Neal, R. A. Eubanks, G. H. Ray, F. J. Diab, R. L. Fowler, Pope Crowder Co., D. O. Tatum, W. M. Adams, S. H. Thomas, S. Berman, Harry Stern, Gus Thomas, Patterson Bros., Pritchard-Patterson, W. O. Lacock, Stetson "D," G. H. Paulsen, O. C. Marsh, Jr., W. J. Hardesty, V. L. Pendergraft, Campus Bootery, Moore-Johnson Co., Gooch's Cafe, J. S. Sparrow, T. S. Howard, Andrews-Henninger, R. C. Andrews, E. P. Cate, Carolina Barber Shop, Carolina Theatre, M. System Store, John McCauley, O'Kelly Tailoring Co., J. E. Burroughs, Bruce Strowd, W. B. Thompson, J. L. Sutton, Louis Graves, and Ione Cates.

Here is the ordinance adopted by a unanimous vote of the board:

"Be it ordained by the Board of Aldermen: That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to sell or offer for sale any goods, wares, or merchandise of any description on the streets or sidewalks of the town of Chapel Hill. Provided, that this ordinance shall not prevent the above-mentioned articles from being sold or offered for sale in any private building or upon any vacant lot in said town, and that this ordinance shall not apply to or prohibit the sale of such articles on the private property of the University of North Carolina and shall not prohibit the sale of food products produced on the farm of the person offering the products for sale. Any person, firm or corporation violating this ordinance shall be fined not exceeding the sum of fifty dollars ($50) or imprisoned for a term not exceeding thirty (30) days."

Seniors Lead Scorers

The "solid seniors" have it all over the "sensational sophomores" in the Tar Heel backfield in the matter of scoring. Jimmy Ward, third-year halfback, is leading the Carolina point-getters with nine touchdowns and 54 points, and Yank Spaulding, third-year fullback, is a close second with six touchdowns and 11 extra points, for a total of 47. The two "solid seniors" have been running a close race all season.

Tar Heels May Lead

The North Carolina Tar Heels have five victories out of six Conference starts and have other Conference games left with Virginia and Duke. Georgia Tech was the only other team in the South that scheduled as many as eight Conference games. If the Tar Heels can come out on top Thanksgiving and December 7, they will probably lead the South in number of Southern Conference victories registered.

POLE VAULT EXHIBITION TO BE GIVEN AT CAKE RACE

Immediately after the start of the cake race today several pole vaulters who have been working under Vernon Cowper, former Carolina star and holder of the state record for this event, will give an exhibition. Daily practices have been held for some time and some good material has been uncovered, both for freshman and varsity teams.

The men who will vault today are Wick Smith, Bill Dry, Dave Neiman and B. D. Arnold.

DER DEUTSCHE VEREIN TO MEET THIS EVENING

Der Deutsche Verein will hold its next meeting this evening at 8:00 on the second floor of the Methodist church. Paul Green, who has just returned from a period of study and investigation of the drama in Germany and other parts of Europe, has consented to make a short talk on some phase of his recent experience. Preceding this will be a short musical programme which promises to be very enjoyable. Visitors are cordially invited.

Press Praising Playmakers' Presentations

carried a picture of the Playmakers at work in their shop on settings for their production.

One article stated, "The question is often asked how can so much be accomplished by these players? The answer, it is believed, is that the work is under the control and directorship of a dramatic genius, Frederick H. Koch. There might be added to this, however, the fact that the Carolina Playmakers have also been gifted with the presence of several writers of unusual natural talent, including especially Paul Green, nationally famous playwright, and Mrs. Loretto Carroll Bailey, noted as an actress of unusual ability as well as for her playwriting."

"The Playmakers are in themselves a little theatre league which writes, produces, and plays its own plays," another account stated.

An announcement of the coming of the Playmakers was broadcast from WLBG, the Petersburg radio station.

Since playing Petersburg, the Playmakers have appeared in Baltimore, where they gave the full length version of "Job's Kinfolks"; at the Hedgerow Theatre, Rose Valley, Philadelphia; and at other places in Pennsylvania.

Tomorrow afternoon and night they present "Job's Kinfolks" at the McMillin Theatre, Columbia University, New York City. The author, Loretto Carroll Bailey will take the leading role of Kizzie, the grandmother.

University students and passing motorists attracted by the blaze formed a bucket brigade and attempted to remove the furniture.

The house and furniture were insured.

BOOK PUBLISHED BY UNIVERSITY PRESS RELEASED

"The Virginia Plutarch", By Philip Bruce, Attracts Much Favorable Comment.

First copies of "The Virginia Plutarch," a book of biography and history by Philip Alexander Bruce, were released by the University Press yesterday. Officials of the Press were greatly pleased with the appearance of the exterior book itself, declaring it to be probably the most beautiful of the volumes that they have published thus far, in addition to being one of the best book values of the year. The work, in two volumes, is excellently bound, illustrated, and packaged.

The author is a Virginian and has for many years been one of the leading authorities in his field of colonial, and particularly Virginia, history and institutions. Hes research work has been of much aid to historians.

Of the man himself we learn from various sources that he is known most widely for his authorship of numerous volumes of history, biography, and social research. He was born at Staunton Hill, Carlotte County, Virginia, March 7, 1856. Concerning hs ancestry: he was the son of Charles Bruce, a Virginia planter. His grandfather was a captain in the Revolutionary Army, and his father held a command in the Confederate Army. His wife was a sister of James A. Seddon, Confederate Secretary of war. He served in the Virginia Senate for many years.

At the University of Virginia, where he received his higher education, he was prominent in a great many activities, being a debate medallist, a member of several forensic societies, an editor of the University Magazine, and a member of the D. K. E. Fraternity. He was also a member of the mother chapter of Phi Beta Kappa at William and Mary College.

Following his career at Virginia he was made a bachelor of laws at Harvard in 1879. He has lived for many years at Richmond, Norfolk, and in Europe, where he was engaged in journalism and other activities. He holds the degree of LL.D. from Washington and Lee University and from William and Mary College, and is a member of many historical societies. One of his accomplishments in the latter field was the establishment of the Virginia Magazine of History and Biography.

He married Mrs. George H. Newton, daughter of Captain J. Saunders Taylor of the United States Navy. They have one daughter Philippa Alexander Bruce. The family now lives at the University of Vrginia, with which Mr. Bruce is connected.

Special Matinee

Manager E. Carrington Smith of the Carolina theatre announces that a special matinee will be held this morning of George Bancroft in "The Mighty." The proceeds of the show are to be given to the poor of the county in the form of Thanksgiving baskets. Children of school age will be admitted free if they bring a gift of food. Mr. Smith asks that the food be of the non-perishable kind if possible.

Sophomore Election

President Ben Aycock of the sophomore class announces that the election of the vice-president of the sophomore class will take place at the business meeting of the class in chapel Monday. George Buchan, regularly elected vice-president, did not continue in school this year. The class meeting will comprise the chapel exercises for that day, and all sophomores must take their assigned seats.

UNIVERSITY MEN ATTEND MEETING

Professors King and Adams Address District Education Conference.

The annual session of the Northeastern District teachers of the North Carolina Education Association, which was held in Elizabeth City yesterday was attended by Professors A. K. King of the school of education, R. W. Adams of the English department, and I. C. Griffin, executive secretary of the University summer school.

Both Professors King and Adams addressed departmental groups of the gathering. The subject of Mr. King's address, which was given before the history teachers' group, was "Proposals for Revising the Present Course of Study in Social Study in North Carolina." Dr. Adams' talk was made before the council of English teachers.

This session brings to a close the seventh annual series of district meetings of the North Carolina Education Association, association, which have been held throughout the state this fall in such centers as Wilmington, Asheville and Raleigh, preparatory to the general meeting of the association next spring. The meeting of the Raleigh district, which includes Chapel Hill, was attended by practically the entire staff of professors in the school of education, as well as by several other members of the the University's faculty, and by the teachers of Chapel Hill high school. The statewide extent of the work and influence of the University's school of education is attested by the fact that members of its staff took part on the programs of all of these meetings.

RECORD CROWD TO BE HERE FOR GAME

With approximately 20,000 seats already sold, and the Thanksgiving game still about a week off, predictions are that the largest crowd ever to attend a football contest in North Carolina will be on hand Thursday. Telegrams from alumni and other fans requesting seats are steadily pouring into Mr. Woollen's office in South building. If the remaining 4,000 tickets go as fast as is expected, bleachers will be erected behind the goal posts to accommodate enthusiasts who are unable to secure seats in the stadium.

The state highway patrol has been commissioned to handle the traffic, and if things are managed as well as in the past, there should be no great delay nor congestion. The new state highway No. 54 from Raleigh to Greensboro via Chapel Hill and Graham will divert many cars from going around by Durham.

A. I. E. E. AWARD TO BE PRESENTED

Will Be Given To Freshman In Engineering School For Excellent Work.

At the last meeting of the University student chapter of the A. I. E. E., national electrical engineering organization, four talks on electrical plants were given by seniors in the department of electrical engineering.

D. A. Nims spoke on "The Mountain Island Hydro-electric Station," F. D. Kuykyndal on "The River Bend Steam Plant," F. R. Toms on "The Badin Aluminum Works," and J. S. Kirk on "The Norwood Hydro-electric Station."

These talks were reports of the plants visited by the members of the class in electrical engineering on October 24 when they returned from the state meeting of the A. I. E. E., which was held in Charlotte.

At the meeting Thursday evening announcement was made of an award to be given to the freshman student in electrical engineering who has at the beginning of the spring quarter the best record in scholastic and extra-curricular activities.

A committee consisting of James Duls, sophomore; F. E. Drake and F. D. Kuykendal, seniors, and G. W. Smith, member of the faculty, will select the winner of the award, which is to be a slide rule.

No Mass December 1

Mass will not be held the Sunday after Thanksgiving for members of the Roman Catholic church of the University and of Chapel Hill. However, after that the regular arrangement of holding Mass the first and third Sundays of each month in Gerrard hall will still be followed.

CITY MANAGER PLAN EXPLAINED

Professor Woodhouse Talks On City Government To Asheville Club.

Advocating the city manager plan as a cure for many of the ills of present day municipal government, Professor Edward James Woodhouse, professor of government and director of the municipal and county government research bureau at the University, Wednesday spoke before the Asheville Civitan club at the George Vanderbilt hotel.

"Although the city manager plan is the best form of municipal government that we have today," Professor Woodhouse said, "there is one difficulty about it. That is that comparatively few men have been found very well fitted for the job of city manager.

"As President Wilson so aptly said, government is a government of men and not of laws. That is, if the officials are efficient, honest and qualified, we will have that kind of government for they will make a good government. It is the man rather than the machine that counts. No government is any worse than the voters permit it to be. One of our greatest needs is the education of voters to want better government."

Tells Methods of Changing

Explaining the methods by which a city or town may revise its old charter to adopt a new one simply by a majority vote at an election which may be initiated by the governing body or by a 25 per cent majority of voters, Mr. Woodhouse continued:

"The city manager plan, as it is generally called though it is more accurately described as the commission-manager plan,

Even Wasps Occasionally Get Drunk And Engage In Whoopee

(By J. P. Tyson)

How would you like to devote the greater part of your spare time, for six month, in studying the wheres and wherefores of the wasp kingdom, living with them, petting them, and inviting their barbarous stingers to feast upon your tender flesh? The average reader may shudder but one University man has done this. He is E. G. Boysworth, a senior in the school of pharmacy last year. These researches were not an idle whim but were efforts to discover the secretions of the wasp clan.

At first thought this seems a very dry and uninteresting field, but closer investigation shows it to be very lively and interesting.

The wasps are well equipped by Dame Nature to protect themselves. The female has a very sharp stinger to protect her baby wasplets with. This stinger is absent in the male, he having only a pair of claws which are not very effective.

The degree of effect in the female sting is determined by the type of food eaten. Some foods produce a very painful sting while others a practically harmless one. Ripe peaches and brown sugar cause intense pain while cane sugar, being too complex to be digested, causes practically no harm.

Mr. Boysworth fed female wasps different foods and then allowed them to sting him on his arm. This was not done for just a few times but many times. Wasps are supposed to be very fond of fish but Mr. Boysworth's investigation revealed that they were too discriminating to indulge in it. It is especially interesting to notice the attitude of the older wasps to the young. They are enslaved and are made to perform all the menial tasks.

And now we come to the part which demands collegiate attention. Wasps get drunk—and how! Alcohol reacts on the wasp very much in the same way that it does the human. They are very funny while under its influence. They stagger, play and roll around like a typical drunk collegian. The main difference is that the wasp dies within six hours after taking his dram, while the "collich boy" gets over his with a slight hangover and lives to pull another.

The male odor is very nauseating while the female has a chemical odor similar to that of solol. The outstanding characteristics of the male and female are: the male has no stinger; it has seven segments and the female six; they are colored differently and have a different odor; and females have formic acid and males do not.

Since the average individual cannot distinguish between the potent and the non-potent wasp, the experimentor's advice is to leave the wasp alone.

Conference Harriers To Run Here This Afternoon

RESPONSIBILITY TOPIC OF TALK

Bradshaw Speaks In Chapel To Freshmen About Student Problems.

Dean F. F. Bradshaw spoke briefly in chapel Friday on the way in which the students should meet certain problems with which they must contend. These problems concern the breaking of dormitory regulations, stealing, walking on the grass, etc. —things which, as Dean Bradshaw explained, have been more or less widely discussed in the Daily Tar Heel and elsewhere.

Dean Bradshaw attempted to impress the freshmen with the fact that questions of student conduct are matters of concern both to the individual and also to the whole. He stressed particularly the point that it is by the control of such matters that students are to develop the ability of self-government and to display the growth and advancement they should have attained.

The dean of students voiced the caution that college students should not regard school affairs as having a vague connection with life.

Students for years have solved their own problems of corporate living, he said by way of encouragement. Dean Bradshaw said the present student body might face its problems by doing nothing, by unauthorized or mob action, or by due process of law. He advised the latter as the better plan. He urged each man to accept his responsibilities and not in parasitic fashion to pass them on to someone else.

Dr. Wager Attends Chicago Conference

Paul W. Wager, professor of sociology at the University, attended the conference on improving government, which was held in Chicago last week. Mr. Wager presented an address on the manager plan adaptable to county government. He was appointed chairman of a committee of the national Municipal League for the study of the county manager plan, and has recently completed a survey to determine the need and prospect for county managers throughout the United States. He found a demand for a strong county executive in practically every state in the Union, and in 32 states a sentiment favorable to this plan. At present there are only six county managers in the country. Four in Alamance, Davidson, Guilford and Robinson counties are in North Carolina. The committee is engaged in drafting a model county manager law system for the guidance of legislatures interested in adopting this plan. The national Municipal League is made up largely of government teachers, city managers, and a directory of municipal research. Professor Wager took his doctor's degree at this University in 1927 and is the author of County Government in North Carolina, one of the few books written on this subject.

R. C. Green, president of the senior class, announces the appointment of J. C. (Red) Williams to fill the vacancy on the class executive committee occasioned by Ned Giles' withdrawal from the University.

Southern Championship In Balance as More Than Hundred Runners Prepare For Race.

V. P. I. FAVORED

The day of the Southern Conference cross country meet finds more than a hundred harriers from all parts of the South anxiously awaiting the whistle which will send them on their five mile trek for the conference championship. The V. P. I. Gobblers are being named as favorites, because of their victory over the title-holding Tar Heels earlier in the season.

In the dual meet in the early part of the season, the Tech harriers administered a beating to the Tar Heels by a score of 24-28. Miles and Farmer, who are counted on to place among the leaders, led both Barkley and Baucom, the Tar Heel's best men. Young of Georgia and Simmons of Duke are also being named among the leaders, with the former favored to win inidividual honors.

According to latest reports ten schools, including Carolina, will take part in tomorrow's meet. These are: V. P. I., Clemson, Georgia, Florida, Sewanee, Washington and Lee, Georgia Tech, N. C. State, Duke, and North Carolina.

Many of these teams arrived on the campus yesterday morning and were shown the course late in the afternoon.

The teams which arrived late last night will be taken around the course at 10 o'clock this morning.

The run, which will be over a five mile course, will begin at 2:30 this afternoon at Kenan stadium and will finish at the stadium about 25 minutes later. Loud speakers in the stadium will be used to keep the stands informed of the progress of the race.

As a preliminary to the Conference run there will be a meet between the Duke, N. C. State, and Carolina frosh harriers for the state championship. Davidson will also have a lone contestant in this meet. Indications point to a Carolina victory, since the Tar Babies have already beaten Duke and State in previous meets.

While the Conference run is on, there will be various sprint events on the field, in which Farmer, Smith, Case, and Marland will take part.

COMMUNITY CLUB IN BUSINESS MEETING

The Community club held a general business meeting yesterday afternoon in the parish house of the Episcopal church.

The program schedule has been rearranged so that there will be no meetings during the Thanksgiving week. The club is planning some programs for the near future which should be of special interest to all.

South Carolinian Wants Reformers Whipped

The very Reverend D. B. Hahn, pastor of the Pendleton street Baptist church of Greenville, S. C., speaking before the Collegiate Press Association of South Carolina, meeting at Greenville this week-end is reported as saying that "Northern reformers who think they are called upon to reform conditions in textile mill villages here should be whipped at public whipping posts."

The reformer always had an unwelcome position in society, and men like Montaigne have come to realize (not until they felt the weight of years, to be sure) that after all the struggle of reforming, the result is very often more disturbing and evil than the condition reformed. But the outstanding point in Montaigne's philosophy was his unwillingness to force his ideas or opinions upon others. The human mind is so constructed that it is incapable of being in absolute accord with all the opinions of every other man. Life would be a drear and unexciting proposition if there were no difference of opinion. However this witch burning, this utter disregard of others' opinions, this genuine bigotry exhibited by the Rev. Hahn, supposedly a disciple of the Great Moral Teacher, who is frequently quoted as saying—"Forgive them for they know not what they do. Let him who is without sin cast the first stone," and who exhibited throughout all of his own life an extraordinary tolerance toward all those who were opposed to him are diametrically opposed to that teaching.

Rev. Hahn, like the witch doctors of Africa, fearing lest his own position may become insecure with the advance of time, seeks to hold his post by appeals to racial hatreds, sectional differences, and sentiments and emotions easily evoked and less easily controlled. Ministers like the Rev. Hahn appeal to man's lowest nature and deny the precepts of the Christian religion.

Not satisfied with his whipping post campaign, Hahn sees in the wide publicity given the Carolina strikers machinations on the part of the northern papers, who says the omniscient Hahn "are conducting campaigns of propaganda against the southern textile mills lest the textile power of the north be transferred to the south." Freedom of the press to say what it desires is a fundamental principle of our government, as tolerance is of the Christian religion. The north, as an integral part of the United States, has a perfect right to editorialize on any phase of the south's activity without being accused of propagandizing.

The transferring of the textile center from the north to the south is practically completed anyway and Hahn should be cognizant of this fact.

It is full time for southern sons to relegate to history the defeatist attitude and the persecution complex, and to stop rationalizing. The south does not need to rationalize, is not persecuted, and is fast taking its place as the most active section of the country.—J. E. D.

Joint Session To Aid Paper

The joint session of the Di and Phi Tuesday night, November 26, in the Di hall is designed to secure a representative student and faculty opinion of the merits of the Daily Tar Heel in its present form. The meeting was not called with a view to probable abolition of the sheet.

In consideration of the fact that the daily publication is as yet in an experimental stage, the staff feels that the discussion Tuesday night will point out defects which have escaped their notice thus far. To abolish the daily aspect of the paper at this stage in the game would be out of the question, because it was changed from a tri-weekly to a daily upon the condition that it be tried for one year or more. The staff of the Daily Tar Heel feels that a joint session of the Di and Phi, to which all faculty members and students who are not affiliated with either society are invited, is the best method to employ in an attempt to get a representative opinion regarding the merits and demerits of the publication.

Although the decision reached at the joint meeting Tuesday night will undoubtedly have an appreciable influence upon campus sentiment relevant to the Daily Tar Heel, no definite action looking in the direction of abolition of the sheet could be taken without a student body vote. The staff, however, feels that the student body does not desire to sponsor any movement to abolish the daily aspect of the publication. General sentiment seems to show that students and faculty alike consider the Daily Tar Heel a remarkable success in consideration of the fact that it has been issued for less than a collegiate quarter.

The editor and his staff will welcome helpful suggestions at any time and expect to get an ear full of constructive criticism at the joint meeting Tuesday night.—J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

J. D.'s BLACK CHARACTER REVEALED

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

We, being dwellers in "J" dormitory, feel that we owe to the campus as a whole a heartfelt apology for the inane washing of dirty linen which another inhabitant of the dormitory saw fit to bring before you in Thursday's Tar Heel.

We would like to advise the campus that this same J. D. is a stranger from foreign parts, that is Far Fockaway, Long Island, and for this reason it may be that he does not know that it is not considered good taste to brag about one's drinking and general exploits in public. For J. D. is certainly guilty of every vice he attributes to "J" as a whole with the possible exception of studying, for he considers himself to be quite a "Gay Caballero" tho he is not from "Rio de Janero."

It never seems to have occurred to him that even though some admittedly small minded person was guilty of setting fire to the trash can, that this is in no way indicative of the general level of intelligence in "J". In fact, gentlemen, we thank God that what we saw J. D. do not later than yesterday also is not an indication of the type of men in "J". In short, it would seem to us that any person who is addicted to rolling iron automobile rims down the halls for the noise the inevetable crash would make has no more room to point his finger at the members of "J" dormitory and say "Nincompoop" than the pot has to say to the kettle, "Black".

We think that J. D, owes to the gentlemen of "J" dormitory a public apology for some of his statements and until that is forth-coming we shall feel as though there is a pariah in our midst.

Respectfully,
C. R. M.

THESE GODLESS UNDERGRADUATES

Editor of the Daily Tar Heel:

There has been quite a controversy lately over the fact that many students of the University leave the Hill on week-ends for the questionable pleasures of the surrounding towns. The faculty seem to be opposed to this running away of the students from their school work and there is no doubt but that the work of the students that leave the campus on week-ends suffers materially. But the real work of preventing this bad practice of leaving the Hill should, in my opinion, be left to the Y. M. C. A. and the churches of Chapel Hill.

The boys who continually leave the campus, especially those who are away on Sunday, must undoubtedly miss church and the splendid influence that church and religion will have upon them.

A truly Christian spirit can not prevail on a campus where the students who are really in need of church leave school and forget the Sabbath in pleasurable and worldly pursuits.

Were these students to stay on the Hill they would find that their school work would improve and their minds be made much happier.

I can think of no better idea than that these exodusing students study on Saturday, and on Sunday go to the church of their choice, and in the afternoon read their Bibles.

Probably many of them do not know the Bible, do not know the wisdom it contains, and the peacefulness that comes after reading it. Some of the most beautiful passages in all literature are contained in the Bible, and some of the most consoling also.

I only offer this letter as a plea to those among us who seem to have forgotten God while they are young: a plea to read the Bible and go to church. The good that they will derive from these things is beyoud compare.

A Freshman

"I" AFTER NOISE RECORD

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Much has been written and spoken recently about the "carrying ons" over at "J" dormitory. And rightly, too, have those people complained about the actions of a group of people complained about the actions of a group of people who continue their most objectionable manners without a thought to the convenience of others.

The denizens of "J" have in all probability a right to their protest. But there reigns a deathlike stillness over that dormitory when compared to the conditions now prevailing in "I" dormitory.

Excepting Saturday night, 8:30 was decided upon as the latest hour that phonographs and loud talking and boisterous actions would be permitted. But to the "I" dormitory, such a simple ruling is pure "bunk." And if the fellows over there feel like talking loudly, as they do normally, or playing some sort of annoying game in the corridor, or having the latest record played, as late as 11 or 12 at night, consideration of other men, who are sleeping or studying, does not cause them to hesitate. How often have they been asked to desist from some objectionable action! But they start anew, practically every night.

It would be interesting for some statistician to tabulate the number of people who moved in and, soon moved out, of "I" dormitory because of the incessant annoyances created by a group who continually turn a deaf ear to polite demands for reform and who must have some sort of authority over them to curb their actions. Actions that clearly bespeak the lack of the right kind of training or education heretofore.

It will be interesting to note, however, the effect that this letter will have upon the future behavior of this misplaced number of men. That is, if they read the Tar Heel. They have been heard to offer criticisms, of the most destructive nature, not only of the publications but of the entire University. But that is not surprising. Persons who discard the most essential characteristic of gentlemanly conduct; i. e., consideration of others, can hardly be expected to have any affection for such an "impersonal" thing as their university.

This letter is in all probability very futule. It will not improve the frightful conditions at "I" but it may serve to have the correspondent of "J" realize that there be many worse off than he is.

Treat 'Em All Alike!

There's nothing like a rule that works both ways. From this it follows that profs who fail to give good checks at midterm ought to be speedily dealt with by the "Bad Check Committee" just as any other offender. A bad check in any form is a grave offense.

Press Convention

We are unshakable in our belief that press conventions are almost indispensable institutions. Numerous things happen at such gatherings that editors and columnists would enjoy talking about, were they not afraid to do so because of their respective business managers. Business managers have an unfair advantage, since they handle the funds . . . and pay all "necessary expenses" of editors when they attend press conventions. Strange as it may seem, editors often have difficulty in interpreting this term correctly. The "check up" system employed by the business manager tends to thwart the editor's inclination to splurge. Well, there's no use bucking about it because it's "King Lear's" order. We venture to say that the editor is well acquainted with the mandatory attitude of the aforesaid party.

Let's Be There

According to this paper the Di and the Phi are to assemble in joint session Tuesday night, November 26, in the Di Hall to debate as to the merits of the Daily Tar Heel. Rumor has it that the Senators and the Representatives are going to completely "thrash out" the matter before the adjourn. Anyway, let's be there and see.

Perpetual Romance

It has been suggested that the University of North Carolina add to its curriculum a course in the romance of psychology. If we could persuade ourself that the co-eds are attractive enough to furnish the romance, we would have no objection to offer. Having failed thus far to arrive at any such conviction, we don't believe that such an addition to the curriculum would help matters any.

Chapel Hill—Great Big City!

Where is the man who dares now to call Chapel Hill a wee country village? If there be such a one, let him be admonished by what is to follow. Chapel Hill has passed far beyond infancy stage; now the day of the Great city has dawned. Soon massive structures will appear above the horizon. Even a complicated system of subways and elevated railroads is in no wise an impossibility. What, you ask, is the token of this mighty transformation? Is there proof that these things will come to pass? Why, already a very appreciable start has been made. Stop-and-go signals have been installed on our main thoroughfare, and traffic has become so great that there is no longer any room for bummers in the street. The town aldermen have actually said so. In addition to this, it is rumored that certain signals are being devised for use in the arboretum—traffic jams having become rather commonplace in that region of the campus. Great City, all hail!

Get Yourself Examined

We understand that all participants in the annual cake race are advised to have Dr Lawson examine them before participating in the race. This test will probably be administered in order to determine whether the runners will be capable of eating the cakes which are to be given to the winners, certain traditional expectations having grown up revelant to the palatibility of these cakes.

Since we have no desire to add to the "stagnancy of the South," we'll call it a day with this.

Freshmen Leave For Virginia With Many Injured Regulars

A badly crippled freshman outfit left here last night for Charlottesville, where they will play the Cavalier frosh today. Chances for a Tar Baby victory seemed slim today, because of the many injuries suffered by the squad during the last ten days. Coach Enright announced that Robinson and Davis, regular guards; Thompson, regular left halfback; Redding, Zovesus and Henry, substitute linemen, and Abrams, Jackson and Sickler, sub backs, would be left behind because of injuries. All of these men saw service in last week's Maryland game. In addition to these, McNeil, fullback; Nichols, left end, and McDade, star tackle, are slightly injured and cannot be used much. McDade probably will not start the game. The loss of all these men is a serious blow to the Tar Baby hopes, for they were counting on a win over the Cavalier frosh to redeem their losses to Maryland and Duke.

Virginia has a strong team, with Beury, speedy former Woodberry Forest flash, as their main ground-gainer. He is a ten-second man, adept at wide end runs. The game should develop into a strilling duel between him and Stuart Chandler, brillians Tar Baby quartet.

The 29 men who made the trip were Modges, Allen and Grier, centers; Philpot, Newcombe, Petree, Margolis and Oliverio, guards; McDade, Collins, Smith, Adkins and Sharkey, tackles; Walker, Beale, Stone, Nichols, Cole and Peacock, ends; Chandler and Peres, quarters; Donnell, Croom, Ferebee, Daniels, Warnom and Riggs, halves, and Landis and McNeil, fullbacks.

All-State Pickers Watch Annual Game

The All-State pickers will be pivoting ther eyes on a stellar quintet of Tar Heel tackles when North Carolina stages its annual classic with Virginia in Kenan Stadium here Thanksgiving day.

Bill Koenig, 190-pound left tackle, made virtually all the mythical selections last year. After an even better season this year, he seems a sure bet.

Fenton Adkins, his 239-pound running mate on the other side of the line, has pushed Koenig a close second for tackle honors all season, and rose to even greater brilliance in the gruelling Georgia Tech game. "Old No. 90" turned in perhaps the most outstanding line play of that Tar Heel victory—Georgia Tech's first Southern Conference defeat since 1926.

A bunch of youngsters, with breaks, might be very much in the running, too.

Gavin Dortch and George Thompson, 190-pounders, played great ball in Koenig's place when the veteran was injured in the Tech battle. "Puny" Harper, giant 6 feet 6, 214 pound discuss heaver, is a human giant who can't be ignored.

And it is remembered that Koenig made All State last year after breaking into the Tar Heel lineup at mid-season.

Adkins has played the great bulk of every game this season and has steered remarkably clear of injuries. Koenig was out of a couple of games after the Georgia Tech battle, but is in great shape now, as also the three fine reserves—Dortch, Thompson and Harper.

Virginia has a fine, big array of tackles too. Fuller and Day carry exactly 400 pounds between them and are both fine linemen. Bill Williams, principal reserve, is a 191-pounder and a close second to the other two.

GUION WAS BEST CAROLINA GUARD

Old Grid Stars Discussed By Dr. Whitaker; Carpenter Was Expert Brokenfield Runner.

(By "Hot Keys" MacKethan)

Yesterday's Tar Heel included Dr. Joel Whitaker's 1910 selection of an All-University football team and also comments on the famous varsity players of the first 20 years of this sport at the University of North Carolina. The article yesterday gave Dr. Whitaker's team and also a discussion of some of the men who in his estimation were outstanding at the pivot and flank positions. This article will hit the high spots of his rather lengthy summary, covering the remaining positions, with comments on a few of the great players, who, in the eyes of this eminent sportsman, should be given honorable mention if not a place on the team.

"One of the best guards who was ever at the University was Louis Guion of 1893 and 1894. "Bear" Collier, who played right guard in 1894 and 1895, and later was captain and tackle on Virginia's 1898 team was the next best guard. He weighed 205 pounds and could run a hundred yards in close to ten and one-fifth seconds. Rankin, who played in 1899 and 1900, was probably the next best guard, but could hardly be considered the equal of the first two. Gardner of 1905 was also a much better man than people from the sidelines would think. "Bully" Jones, captain in 1903, was a good guard. Phifer of 1898 was picked by Dr. Lawson and Dr. Mangum.

"There have been more good tackles at the University than guards. Roscoe Little of the 1892 and 1893 teams; Jim Baird of the 1894 and 1895 teams; Bob Wright of 1895 and 1896; Frank Foust of 1900-01-02; Frank Bennett of 1896 to 1900; Romey Story of 1903-04-05; and Abernethy of 1910. Wright's long arms would reach over and a hand on a canvas jacket was a sure tackle when it was Wright's fingers that closed upon it. I have never seen him smile in a game; he was too busy for that. Rhomey Story, like Wright, made football and tackle, his position, a study. He was a quiet, unassuming country boy when he first went to the University without a friend on the Hill, but when, as captain of 1896 he died, there was not a man at the University who was not proud to be called his friend.

"The quarterbacks did not show up as well as did the ends. The best were Barnard in 1892 and 1893; Frank Rogers in 1898; Louis Graves for the next three years; Jacocks in 1903, and Tom Sadler in 1905. Sadler would be the best of these were the game as it was five years ago, as he gave more assistance to the runner than did any other quarter. Rogers, captain in 1898, ran his team beau-

Wyrick Injures Ankle In Workout

The injury jinx continues to follow the Tar Heels and their veteran quarterback Pete Wyrick.

The heady little field general was just recuperating from his second back injury, both of which kept him on the bench for two games or more.

Trainer Quinlan thought he had Wyrick patched up and in fine shape for the Thanksgiving day battle with Virginia.

Wyrick participated in his first hard scrimmage Thursday, and turned up yesterday with a sprained ankle that makes it speculative whether the Tar Heels will have the services of their star against Virginia.

No other developments marked the day's work. Sleet and a biting cold spell sent the Tar Heels to a warm class room for extended lectures by Tar Heel scouts on Virginia plays.

NOTICE

All men in the cake race yesterday who failed to receive their prizes will please call by the Intra-mural office at once and get them.

CHANGES MADE IN FRESHMAN LINEUP

Coaches Dissatisfied With Showing Made Against Maryland Frosh.

The Tar Baby lineup to face the Virginia Frosh at Charlottesville this afternoon will undoubtedly show a number of new faces.

Coaches Enright, Pritchard and Sapp were far from pleased with the showing of the freshmen backs in the 19-12 loss to to the Maryland Frosh last Saturday.

Several new men have been showing well in this week's intensive work, and with other of the former first stringers on the injured list, new faces seem a certainty.

Daniels and Croom have both been showing well at halfback and will probably replace Thompson and McNeil.

McNeil is also on the injured list, but will probably be shifted to fullback if he is in shape, to fill the gap left by the injury to Sickler.

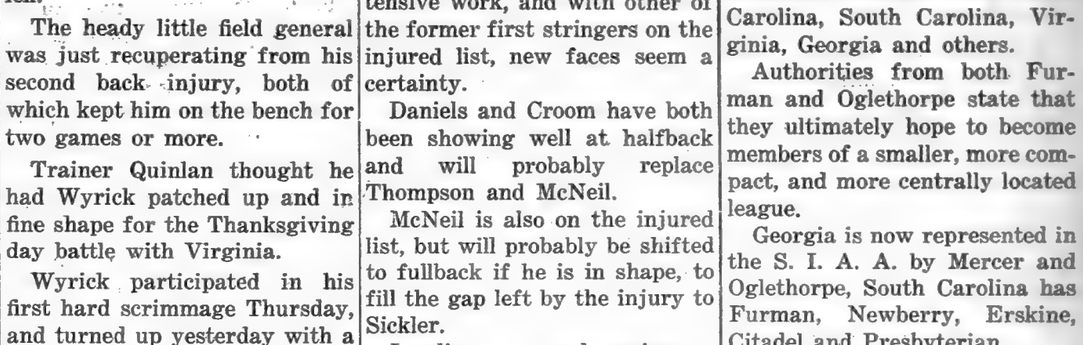
Landis, an up and coming reserve, has been showing well also, and might get the call at the fullback post.

The freshmen coaches are fairly well satisfied with their line, which is both heavy and powerful.

Nearly 53 per cent of the new paper currency is in dollar bills.

NEW CONFERENCE MAY TAKE PLACE OF OLD LEAGUE

Smaller and More Compact Association Desired by Many Southern Universities.



The prospective withdrawal of Oglethorpe and Furman Universities from the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Association has started rumors concerning the formation of a new athletic conference. In addition to the announcement made by Furman and Oglethorpe concerning their withdrawal from the S. I. A. A. is the likely withdrawal of several other colleges or universities from this conference.

It is thought that these withdrawals are merely advance notices of withdrawals of many other southern schools in an attempt to form a smaller league. Rumors of the new league to be established center around North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Georgia and others.

Authorities from both Furman and Oglethorpe state that they ultimately hope to become members of a smaller, more compact, and more centrally located league.

Georgia is now represented in the S. I. A. A. by Mercer and Oglethorpe, South Carolina has Furman, Newberry, Erskine, Citadel and Presbyterian.

No schools in North Carolina or Virginia belong to the present group, but North Carolina has both Davidson and Wake Forest unattached. Virginia schools would be available for a new conference including the University of Richmond, Lynchburg College, Roanoke College, and William and Mary.

Literary Taste Of Students Coincides With That Of The Average Person Survey Shows

Investigation of Local Book Stores Reveals Tendency Of Carolina Men Towards Better Periodicals.

That the reading of students at the University coincide pretty largely with those of the nation was disclosed yesterday by an investigation at the Carolina Smoke Shop and the University Book and Stationery Store, chief purveyors of periodicals to the University.

Among the hundred-odd magazines on hand at both places, Colliers, Liberty and the Saturday Evening Post, leading magazines of the country, are by far the favorites of Carolina men, with the Post somewhat in the lead at both stores. Among the more expensive periodicals, College Humor and the American, which specialize in "success stories," go best.

Strangely enough, Life and Judge, weekly humorous magazines, do not sell as well as the more expensive College Humor, which is a monthly publication.

The Carolina Buccaneer sells in fairly large numbers, perhaps because a great many men do not get their copies.

Movie magazines, such as Photo Play, Motion Pictures and Film Fun, are very popular, which is not astonishing in view of the crowds which every night throng the Carolina theatre. Equally popular among the undergraduates are the "confession" magazines.

Surprisingly few "wild and wooly" magazines of the type of Action Stories and Western Stories are sold at the Stationery Store, but they are quite popular at the Smoke Shop, which keeps about 15 on hand. Air Stories and Ace High Stories are among the leading magazines of this type.

Few weeklies sell well except the Post, Collier's and Liberty. The Smoke Shop takes in six Nations and sells them all, but generally to the same people each week. Magazines like Time, the Literary Digest and the New Republic the students hardly read at all; "maybe because they get much more reading matter out of Liberty for a nickel than they could get out of any of the 15-cent weeklies," as the gentleman at the Smoke Shop suggested.

For a town which is overwhelmingly male, Chapel Hill buys a large number of women's magazines. The Ladies' Home Journal and the Woman's Home Companion are very popular; they are read, no doubt, by the co-eds and the ladies of the faculty and the town. Or perhaps the seniors revel over them in secret in the attics of their fraternity houses.

The better type monthlies like Harper's and the Atlantic Monthly are among the hardest to sell at the University. They are "not so hot" at the Smoke Shop, and the Stationery Store sells hardly two a month, and the faculty buys those.

REGISTRATION AT DUKE DOUBLES IN PAST SEVEN YEARS

According to figures issued by the dean's office of Duke University, the registration at what was formerly Trinity College has doubled during the past seven years.

At present there are 2,027 students registered there, and they hail from 35 states and five foreign countries. In the college of liberal arts 1,721 are enrolled, of which 350 are women. These figures represent a growth not only in the liberal arts school but also in the other departments.

Famous Author To Spend Winter Here

Mrs. Wilbur Daniel Steele, wife of the celebrated writer, was in Chapel Hill Tuesday and arranged to take the Greenlaw house for the winter. Mr. Steele and she and their two boys will be here week after next to take possession.

She went on from Chapel Hill to New Bedford, Massachusetts, to get some of her furniture to send to Chapel Hill in a truck. Mr. Steele is in New York. When they come South together the boys will come from Charleston, South Carolina, to join them here.

The oldest son, 15, is a trap drummer. The younger son, 11, is a collector of antique firearms.

State Cancels Game

ANOTHER LOCAL BLAZE

The local fire department answered the call of a fire yesterday morning at the home of Mr. Bill Stewart on Pritchett avenue. A blaze began around the furnace but the fire was easily stopped before any damage could ensue.

Guion Was Best

tifully. I think Jacocks would be the most valuable man because he was, with the exception of Graves, the best dropkicker yet on the team, and was the fastest man in college.

"The best halfbacks since 1890 are Mike Hoke, who is still regarded as the best captain; George Stephens in 1893-94-95; Jim MacRae in 1897-98-99 and Hunter Carpenter in 1904. The best of these were Carpenter ran with a short stride, almost started at full speed, took every advantage of his interference but when in a broken field was at his best. He would have shone most brilliantly in the open style play of today. George Stephens had more strength than Carpenter and was with the exception of Roy Abernethy the best line plunger. For tearing up interference he did not have an equal.

"The fullbacks to be mentioned are: Charles Baskerville of 1892-93-94; George Butler of 1895; Arthur Belden of 1896-97; Ernest Graves of 1898-99-00-01; Earl Holt of 1902 and Roy Abernethy of 1895 and Porter of this year. Roy Abernethy was the strongest one of these men physically and were the rules the same now as when he was playing he would be preeminently the best fullback. Belden, in my opinion, is the best man for fullback with the rules as they are now. With the exception of Jim MacRae, he was the best man for backing-up the line on defensive; he could average 60 yards in punting."

SENIOR NOTICE

All seniors are requested to have their photographs made before Thanksgiving, if possible. Please cooperate.

WOOTTEN - MOULTON

Book Is Released By The University Press

In his work, the author has endeavored to give his readers history according to Carlyle's conception; that is, the lives of great men who have made it.

"Biography and history have lately devoted themselves so much to idol-shattering, it is both a relief and a pleasure to find at least one good historian who can still see men in Plutarchian proportions." So goes one of the descriptions of the book. It continues: "Nor is it anything but natural that, confronted with such an array of great figures, he should believe that history may often, if not always, be the essence of innumerable biographies. Certainly no recent book so ably demonstrates both these attitudes. For "The Virginia Plutarch," written to present not a series of detached characters, but a continuous narrative of deeds from the Colonial era to our own times, gives full amazing sweep of American history as it was shaped by thirty-three eminent Virginians. The procession from century to century is a splendid one as it passes before us."

The procession to which the writer refers includes many of the Colonial period and also those in the national era. It is "an impressive array, surely, representing every stage in the winning and keeping of America. They are all Virginians, but not Virginians alone, for they belong to America and in many instances to the world. They have often and in many places been given their separate stories, but no one has before brought all these great figures together as Mr. Bruce does here—with a full sense of their individual and national importance, and written out of a profound knowledge of American history."

carries one step further the application of business methods to municipal administration. It concentrates in the hands of one man, the city manager, the administering of policies determined upon by the commissioners or the mayor and council, as they are called in Plan D, that is by the political or policy-determining part of the city government.

City managers generally, Mr. Woodhouse continued, have taken serious cognizance of social problems. "So far," he said, "city managers have developed much business efficiency, especially in the lines of engineering, law, accounting, and various other business directions in which they happen to be experts but few of them have developed great social efficiency. That is, they have given their cities better streets, better water service, better fire and police protection, and at somewhat less cost in proportion to what is attained in such municipal services, but they have generally devoted their energies chiefly to developing the parts of their cities already most highly developed and done little to abolish the slums. City governments with city managers generally undertake much more in the way of public works, and, of course, that means higher taxes. The poor, as well as the rich and well-to-do, pay these taxes indirectly in the form of increased rents and higher prices. if not directly in taxes. But the money is largely expended generally on the already most highly improved parts of the cities."

Mr. Woodhouse, while now a professor at the University, has been a lawyer and a city official. He now is a member of the Virginia bar, though he has given up practice. In 1923, he was elected mayor of Northampton, Mass., home of former President Coolidge, despite the fact that Mr. Woodhouse is a southern Democrat. He is widely known as an authority on municipal governmental affairs and particularly on the city manager form of government.

He was introduced at the meeting by W. W. Dodge, program chairman for the meeting.

Library Is Recipient Of Peace Conference Diary Of David Hunter Miller

Only Southern University To Receive Copy of Diary Sponsored by Carnegie Peace Endowment.

The Library of the University of North Carolina has received recently a privately printed work by David Hunter Miller entitled "My Diary at the Conference of Paris, with Documents." Mr. Miller was legal advisor to the American Commission to Negotiate Peace, and with Sir Cecil Hurst, of the British Foreign Office, drew up the final draft of the Covenant of the League of Nations. The Diary, with documents and maps, has been published in a very limited edition of forty copies only, in twenty-two volumes. It was presented to the University Library through the courtesy of Mr. Miller and the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

The Library of the University of North Carolina is the only Southern university library to which a set of this Diary has been presented. Because of its great value to students of the work of the Peace Conference, copies of the Diary have been presented by the Carnegie Endowment to the following libraries: Department of State; Library of Congress; University of California; University of Chicago; Columbia University; Harvard University; Princeton University; Yale University; University of Michigan; University of North Carolina; University of Berlin; Bibliotheque Royale de Belgique, Brussels; Bibliotheque du Palais de la Paix, The Hague; League of Nations; British Museum; Bibliotheque Nationale, Paris; Biblioteca Nazionale Centrale Vittorio Emanuele, Rome; and the Public Library of New South Wales, Sydney.

In a letter to Dr. L. R. Wilson, Librarian of the University of North Carolina, Nicholas Murray Butler, Director of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, describes the Diary as follows:

"Although much has been written regarding the Conference of Paris that followed the Armistice which concluded the Great War and although the available material regarding the work of the Conference is much, it is still incomplete. The complete story of the Conference of Paris is not to be found in any one place. Several of the participating governments have

DR. LYONS WILL CONDUCT FRENCH TOUR NEXT YEAR

The annual residential tour to France will be under the direction of Dr. J. C. Lyons of the French department, according to an announcement from the University extension division.

The tour provides a comprehensive program of travel in addition to a period of residence at Grenoble. Those who desire, may take courses at Grenoble under the sprevision of Dr. Lyons, for which the University will give credit.

Special trips to the French riviera, the chateau country, and cities of interest in southern France will also be arranged. The tour begins on June 14th, and continues until September 1st. Special sailings are being arranged for those who find it difficult to join the tour as early as June 14th. A daily program has been laid out so that each day will have its special attraction.

Successful North Carolina tours to France have been conducted in 1927, 1928, and 1929. Each has been under the direction of Dr. Lyons, who knows the ground thoroughly. Further information may be obtained from Dr. Lyons at his office in Murphey hall.

CLASSICS LEAD IN GERMAN ART STATES AUTHOR

Paul Green Says Modern Writers Are Noticeably Lacking in Germany.

After an absence of seventeen months, Paul Green, assistant professor of philosophy and noted playwright, made his first public appearance in Chapel Hill before the Deutsche Verein, which held its second meeting of the year Friday night in the Methodist church.

Dr. R. S. Matthews of the German department, presided and led the club in singing of several old German songs, such as "Die Wacht am Rhine" and "O, Du Liebe Augustine." Dodd Linker rendered a solo selection entitled "Sehnsucht."

Mr. Green then talked. He explained to the members that one of the greatest impressions of Germany that he received during his ten-months stay there was one of order and thoroughness. He cited numerous examples of famed German efficiency and stated that in his opinion Germany seems to be recovering from the effects of the war better than any other nation. He also told, in brief, of the peculiar situation that the German drama now finds itself. Due to the lack of excellent modern playwrights, the old classics are still given but, in contrast to former times, the actor or the author is not the predominant feature in the production but the director now controls it.

In response to a question as to whether or not American plays are well received over there, Mr. Green replied that our dramatic offerings do not succeed. Many American plays have been attempted but they fail to achieve the popularity over there as they did here. Such outstanding successes as "Broadway" and "The Front Page" and some of Eugene O'Neil's plays have had very cold receptions in Germany. Nevertheless, as Mr. Green stated, the German people admire Americans and American methods tremendously.

NORTHERN TOUR OF PLAYMAKERS DRAWS COMMENT

Newspaper Praise Work of Directors and Actors; To Continue Tour.

As the Carolina Playmakers proceed on their northern tour, advance notices have announced their coming with a good deal of interest, particularly in those cities where they are known from previous performances.

Their bill of plays, headed by "The No[illegible]t Boy," creation of the nationally known Paul Green, whose play "In Abraham's Bosom" received the Pulitzer prize, and supported by productions by Loretto Carroll Bailey, and Gertrude Wilson Coffin, has attracted wide attention.

Announcing their appearance at Morristown, N. J., the Morristown Record said in regard to Paul Green's play, "Those who had the pleasure of seeing these plays last year know that a treat awaits them in this tale of a shiftless, imaginative young negro boy who entrances the fiancee of another more practical boy, with his tales of far-off countries, all drawn from his imagination, and his ability as a mouth organ artist. The play is rich in characterization and poetic quality.

Speaking of the work of Professor Koch, the creator and director of the Playmakers, the Globe-Times of Bethlehem, Pa., says, "Professor Frederick Koch, after a promising beginning at the University of North Dakota, came to the University of North Carolina several years ago to build out of the mountaineer life of the Appalachian region the most promising native folk drama in America. His student actors confine their talent on tour to original plays written in Professor Koch's courses.

The Playmakers appeared at Morristown Friday, coming under the auspices of the Women's Community Club. Yesterday afternoon and night they played at the McMillin Academic Theatre, Columbia University, New York city.

King Boreas Reasserts Authority Over Vicinity

"Whereof there cometh, with sandals fleet,
The North-West flying viewlessly,
With a sword to sheer, and untameable feet,
And the Gorgon-head of winter shown
To stiffen the gazing Earth as stone."

The bucolic autumn days, sopped with Bacchic splendor three weeks ago, must have made King Boreas envious of the rubicund glory at North Carolina's halcyon vegetation.

At any rate, either for revenge or to reassert his age-old sway, this cruel God of the Northwind has proved that he was still King of Chapel Hill and vicinity.

By a vicious attack with one of his most powerful weapons—sleet—he yesterday placed all nature under his bondage again: a tyrannical sway that has been undisputed for eons upon eons.

In the wake of that all-inclusive and decisive attack there were casualties: cold feet, stinging ears, vacillating spinal columns, and broken branches and trees.

But a co-pardner with the havoc wrought by the sleet storm is the unreal beauty of its terribleness. In this wise it is Sphinx-like.

Sphinx-like? Yes, because unwitting twigs, branches and bushes were attracted by the beauty of the coats of glass with which Boreas offered to clothe them. More and more they piled on these crystal vestments until the weight of them broke their backs and hearts at the same time that their pride cracked.

A great moral lesson is taught to those who might be inclined to listen, by an oak and a cedar tree near the tennis courts. The proud oak defied the inroads of the King of Winter with a staunchness of iron-will that is inherent in his character. He stood rigid as the King of the North Wind layered him with cold rain and changed it momentarily to ice. The brave oak stood unflinching as the weight and severity of the attack increased, until—. With a resounding crash like the last yell of a lost soul, the heart of the oak broke and the largest limb thundered, defeated, to the ground, 50 feet below.

Tar Heel Harriers Capture Annual Conference Run With Georgia Ace Winning First

V. P. I. Takes Second With Florida Third; Lowry Leads Carolina Runners to Tape Behind Young, Simon, and Miles.

RUNNERS MAKE FAST TIME

The University cross country team outpaced the south's best distance runners here yesterday to win its fourth consecutive Southern Conference title.

The Tar Heels finished with the team score of 56, V. P. I. coming second with 72 and Florida third with 102.

Bob Young, Georgia ace, set the fast time of 26:58.2 over the slushy course to repeat his individual win of last year.

Ten southern institutions had 65 harriers competing, the largest field in the six years the title run has been held. Georgia Tech finished fourth, followed in order by Georgia, N. C. State, Duke, Tennessee, Washington and Lee, and Clemson.

Walter Lowry led the Tar Heel brigade in fourth place, behind Young of Georgia, Simon of Duke and Miles of V. P. I. It was the first time he had done the trick in three year's Tar Heel running.

Cliff Baucom was sixth, Captain Minor Barkley eleventh, Clarence Phoenix seventeenth, and Pierce eighteenth to account for the Tar Heel team score.

Miles, Palmer, Weaver, Overstreet and Elder set the pace for the second-place V. P. I. club, conceded favorites before the meet.

Florida's third place was won by the first cross-country team ever turned out there.

Lowry, first Tar Heel to cross the line, was 30 seconds behind Young.

A large loving cup went to the winning Carolina team and gold track shoes to the seven individual members—Lowry, Baucom, Barkley, Phoenix, Pierce, G. M. Cohen and J. J. Cohen.

Sophomore Notice

Election of the vice-president of the sophomore class will be held Monday morning at Chapel period in Gerrard hall at the business meeting of the class. The class meeting will comprise the chapel exercises for Monday, and all sophomores must be there and take their assigned seats.

Officers for this year are Ben Aycock, president; Royal Brown, treasurer; and J. E. Miller, secretary.

RED CROSS TO STAGE STUDENT DRIVE MONDAY

Campaign for Funds to Cover All Fraternities and Dormitories.

The annual student Red Cross drive will be staged Monday night between the hours of 9:15 and 10:15 in all the dormitories and fraternity houses.

The dormitory drives will be in charge of Ray Farris with the assistance of the dormitory officers and councilors. Each dormitory organization will canvass its own building. Red Green will manage the fraternity houses' canvasses, and he will be assisted by two representatives from each fraternity.

The canvass is being staged all over the campus in one hour's time so as not to allow the interest in the drive to drop. Many drives that are drawn out cause the interest of the public to lag and thus make the canvass tiresome.

During the past three years the state of North Carolina has collected for the Red Cross sums amounting to $45,000, but at the same time the state has drawn out for special emergency cases, $190,000. "This should be an incentive," says Mr. Comer in chapel, "for all the students in the University to dig in their pockets and do their share of giving. Do not give with the idea of repaying, but contribute with the feeling of a desire to help a good cause as well as to do your share."

Every student on the campus is eligible for help from the Red Cross. Last year a self-help student broke his arm while doing work. He was incapacitated for quite a time, and the Red Cross paid all his hospital and doctors' bills.

"When the Red Cross canvasser comes to your room Monday night," says Mr. Comer in his chapel talk, "pat him on his back, and don't let him leave your room without a dollar for your membership."

There will be no English spoken. Students who can speak the language but are not taking courses in it are also invited.

Dr. and Mrs. Metzenthin hold open house once every month on a Tuesday afternoon for students who are able and willing to speak German for two hours. Refreshments are served, but must be earned in a unique manner. Each guest receives a slip of paper with such instructions as "Gehen Sie in die Kuche. Auf dem Tische sehen Sie Tellar. Nehmen Sie einen!" or "Im Wohnzimmer findet sich etwas, das unshuldig und ungefahrlich ist, zum Trinken, nicht 'Verboten.'"

Besides the conversation and refreshments, Dr. and Mrs. Metzenthin announce that there will be games and light singing to keep the guests busy. English will not only be forbidden, but will not be understood. All students interested in the speaking of German are invited this afternoon.

Ford the Modern Prometheus

The benefactor of the American civilization, Henry Ford, now comes forth with his own prescription for improving business conditions, which prescription is the immediate general increase of wages of his several thousand employees.

The great economist goes even farther, saying, "Nearly everything in this country is too highly priced. The only thing that should be high priced in this country is the man who works. Even the raising of wages is not sufficient in itself—we must see to it that increased wages are not taken away from our people by increased prices."

Excellent! But like so many idealists who believe that they have a panacea for the country's ills, the gentleman from Michigan overlooks the fact that as fast as wages are raised the wholesalers and retailers, not bothered with any very strong altruistic motives, will raise their prices correspondingly. There is no power, including the august one of the United States congress, which is strong enough to regulate wage levels.

No matter how much Henry Ford increases his employees' salaries, however, he will never be able to pay them adequately. Mr. Ford was the first important manufacturer to introduce mass production to this country, and as such should receive no praise whatsoever for any attempts of his to increase wages. Mass production and its many attendant evils is slowly but inevitably causing the stultifying of the American soul and its appreciation of the artistic. There is little incentive to be individual. The false god worshipped in modern industrialism is Efficiency. It matters not how good; how many and how fast are the chief considerations. And in this process the struggling individual fits like a cog in a machine which soon wears out.

Each man is inately proud of his ego—his self—his individuality. He would strive to be different were he left to himself. This he cannot do in modern industrialism. Working for Mr. Ford, he bends a fender in a certain way year in and year out, or perhaps he screws three bolts into place in exactly the same way for twenty years. We are personally acquainted with a man reared upon a farm, in Berrien county, Michigan, who, being attracted to Detroit by the miraculous wages offered by Ford, has worked for him for fifteen years putting fan belts upon the machines as they come down the assembly line. All day long for five days a week he works in perfect clock-like order which is splendid from the viewpoint of the employer, but when his working day is over he finds himself incapable of getting back to normal. He even eats in a mechanical manner. He little appreciates or notices any change in the seasons, or his family's appearance, and has little joy whatsoever in living. Accustomed to a comparatively happy life on a farm he has become another atomaton, marching in the service of His Majesty Henry Ford, the benefactor of American civilization.—J. E. D.

Let There Be Light!

(H. J. G.)

A crying need of this town has received little notice from the city fathers, and some action should be forthcoming before they become city grandfathers. It is a matter of light, and light on any subject is, or should be, welcome.

Fraternity men whose houses are situated on Rosemary street, Tar Heel men whose work takes them to the print shop daily, and numerous others whose business is in the alley in back of the drug stores on Franklin street, stumble and curse, and stumble and curse again, every night.

Two lights, placed at strategic points in this alley, would alleviate the trouble. The expense is not great, and at least one member of the Board of Aldermen has realized the need and promises to cooperate.

The weather the past few days has made the alley a treacherous place. Just now, it is more than ordinarily dangerous at night. At the cost of a few dollars, Mayor Council and Manager Foushee would, if they installed the lights in the alley where needed, find themselves blessed by many citizens of Chapel Hill, and mentioned in the prayers of not a few students. And even aside from that, it would be worth it!

Chicago Undertakes An Experiment

Among the seven major objectives outlined by President Hutchins of the University of Chicago in his recent inaugural address is the reform of the undergraduate school so that the more intelligent pupils will not be retarded in their work by the "dumber" or more mediocre ones. We may suppose that his plan will be in the form of an experiment, along the lines of those now being carried out at Wisconsin, Swarthmore, Princeton, Harvard and various other institutions.

Classification of students as to ability to go forward in their work has been tried to some extent in this and other universities, but as a whole has not been successful. The chaos created by having to make schedules for three different sections of each subject at different hours of the day is more than can be handled. The only solution of the problem seems to be complete segregation of the brighter and slower students into different colleges.

Nothing is more disheartening to one who is really in earnest about his work and able to go ahead than to be with a class, the majority of which are slower, duller, and less enthusiastic than he. While the "dumb" student may gain from his association with the brighter, the bright one is the loser in time and energy wasted.

We wish President Hutchins every success in the solution of this problem. Chicago being a private institution can afford to conduct experiments, while the state universities must cater to the average student, and the modern university satisfies the average student.—J. D. M.

Religion Unbothered By Week-Ends

Far be it from the intentions of this editorial writer to condemn the prevailing practice of urging students of the University to attend the church services of the village at any and all times. There are, however, several factors relevant to the religious situation which warrant more than casual consideration.

In a recent issue of this paper there appeared an article reprimanding students for leaving the Hill on week-ends in preference to remaining in Chapel Hill and thereby availing themselves of the opportunity to attend church services. When considered aside from the deeply rooted and conflicting inclinations of the various elements of the student body, such a viewpoint is a sound one. Upon careful examination, however, it will be found that those students who make a practice of attending religious functions will do so regardless of whether they are in Chapel Hill on week-ends, or not. Although it is undeniably true that the habitual practice of spending week-ends away from the University campus is a bad one, it is equally as much in accord with the fact that these same students would not go to church even though they spent every Sunday in Chapel Hill.

The writer is inclined to think that religious attitudes are so well established before students come to college that subsequent efforts to make radical changes in such matters as church attendance are useless. This apparently accounts for the varying degree to which students respond to the numerous campaigns of religious organizations. In almost every case principles governing such matters as church attendance were drilled into the present students of the University long before they even contemplated coming to Chapel Hill.

Although we sincerely endorse the contention that the Bible is a masterpiece in point of literary and historical excellence, we cannot overlook the fact that people are loathe to read anything which reprimands them for wrong doing. Investigations in this connection show, none the less, that the Bible is read more than any other single book. Yet it is unquestionably true that these readers comprise the just rather than the unjust.

After having considered the situation from every possible angle, we are inclined to believe that all efforts which figure in shaping the attitudes of students toward religious matters should be aimed at those who are not yet of college age.—J. C. W.

Pen Points

By H. J. Galland

Dear Mr. Paulsen:

You and I have had some correspondence in the past, but we were limited to purely business matters and phrases. In your capacity as Director of the University Laundry, I know you hear many, many complaints, some faint and grudging praise, and a lot of hooey. Far be it from me to add to the last. Yet, there are several things I should like to say to you, and this seems as good a time as any to say them.

You have, I understand (you have told me so yourself) the very finest and most modern equipment in your plant. This is as it should be, since your laundry was installed by and serves one of the most progressive universities in the South.

The South, I hear, is stagnant—or is it unstagnant? Still, there are the tobacco and cotton crops, and as long as the South . . . Excuse me, Mr. Paulsen—I didn't mean to digress, but one hears so much of stagnancy, Lee, Appomatox, and crops, that I'm afraid I'm getting incoherent too. Not that you are incoherent, Mr. Paulsen—it's these writers in the Tar Heel. I hope you don't read 'em. The Laundry needs your time too much for that.

Well, as I started out to say a while back, you have modern machinery installed in your laundry. They tell us that machinery has no soul, that it is cold, uncalculating, and unthinking. Don't you believe it, Mr. Paulsen. Many a time, after you have made a delivery, I have thought of your machines. I know them, and I know they are almost human. I have even seen them laughing, in fiendish glee, after they have turned out a shirt, or what once was a shirt, of mine. They are calculating, or how else would they rip a towel up the exact center, not a hairsbreadth out of line?

Next time you take a walk around your laundry, Mr. Paulsen, take a look at those machines, and see if I am right. Watch them take a sock and neatly enlarge holes, while they whisper and sneer to themselves. You've got to hand it to them, Mr. Paulsen—they certainly do know how to wreak their private vengeances on the student body.

You understand, Mr. Paulsen, that I put no share of the blame for the mishaps to articles of our apparel on your shoulders. It isn't your fault—it's those machines of yours. You will remember that I wrote you last year and thanked you for returning two towels when I had only sent in one, and that I overlooked the fact that the two had been one when the parcel was sent to you. Last week you sent my shirt back—only the back. I know those machines got hold of the front and sleeves, and there's no telling what they'll do, is there?

Still, Mr. Paulsen, I'm not kicking. I'm only wondering why, when you put a few rags in the package to be returned to students, in place of the shirt that was sent you, the matter is thereupon dropped. Don't you think it would be much nicer to write a little note and explain what refund is possible? Or, if this is too much trouble, get a little slip printed, which you could insert when and as needed. It would make us all feel a lot better to know that you cared. And it even might help us to get some kind of refund. Every little bit helps, Mr. Paulsen.

Please give this little matter your serious attention, and believe me, as always, your friend,

The Pointer.

KANSAS HEALTH BOARD ISSUES KISSING RULES

The Kansas board of health in conjunction with the United States public health service has recently issued a group of rules for the guidance of kissers. Some of these rules are:

1. Avoid sudden changes in temperature when kissing. For example, it is extremely dangerous to kiss in a coon-skin coat one minute and then to immediately try it in some lighter attire. The reason for this is of course obvious to any one who has tried it.

2. Gargle frequently at parties where postoffice is played.

3. Try a hot mustard foot bath immediately afterwards if you are "all in."

4. Do not kiss in a draft or in a poorly ventilated room.

5. Be careful about kissing in crowded places.

6. Do not kiss a person who is subject to chills or fever.

TIN CAN PERFORMANCES PANNED

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I have attended my first public performance in the "new" Tin Can, and, incidentally, it will be my last one. My attendance at the marionette performance given there Thursday night has made me a hearty supporter of any movement in favor of the construction of a University auditorium.

If the acoustics of the building have been improved I was not aware of the fact. The blowers which are used to help heat the building also added to the difficulty of hearing. Furthermore, it is quite probable that the type of performance which was given on the recent evening is not suited to the mammoth size of the "indoor athletic field.

Of the show itself I cannot give a fair estimate, because I was unable to see, hear, or sit through it in comfort. But after all, credit must be given the University officials for making the best of a bad situation. And as for the Tin Can, it will serve admirably if every performance will be a music program, such as the recent Marine Band concert. But then there would be the disadvantage of having all the students sit on the ground about the building or even up in the dormitories to hear the program for which the Can serves as a kind of amplifier. Such an occurrence might result in a slight deficit in the gate receipts.

Carolina-Virginia Game To Revive Memories Of Old

Old Thanksgiving Day Rivalry To Be Renewed Here Thursday; Virginia Holds Edge.

By M. R. ALEXANDER

Thanksgiving day will revive the football memory of the old-timers who come back to Chapel Hill.

As they sit and watch the Carolina and Virginia youngsters of 1929 do battle, the old-timers will recall vividly the gridiron games, the heroes, and the feats of their own day—"the good old days."

The Carolina-Virginia game is the oldest continuous Thanksgiving Day football rivalry in the south. Thirty-three games have been played in the 37 years since the series was inaugurated in 1892. Virginia has won 18, Carolina 12, and three have been ties.

Virginia held undisputed edge in the days of old, but since the war it has been a different story. Of ten games since resumption of the series in 1919, the Tar Heels have won five, lost three, and two have been ties.

In total scores, the Cavaliers hold a big edge. For the 33 games the Virginians have a total of 461 points to 197 for the Tar Heels. The worst licking of the series was a 66-0 defeat of the Tar Heels in 1912. The Tar Heels had their largest margin of victory the year the series opened—26-0.

How Series Opened

The series opened with a Virginia win, 30-18, in 1892. The teams met a second time that season. Michael Hoke, now a prominent Atlanta surgeon, led the Tar Heel team to a 26-0 win in the second game—strangely enough, the largest margin by which Carolina has ever beaten Virginia.

The Cavaliers reversed the tide and blanked the Tar Heels, often by disheartening scores, every season until 1898. Vernon Howell, now dean of the University school of pharmacy here, raced 40 yards through the entire Virginia team for a 6-2 Carolina victory that year. Virginia scored 2 of 8 points that blemished the fine record of this one undefeated team of Tar Heel history.

The best showing made by a Tar Heel team in the disastrous years of 1893-97 was that of the team of 1895, captained by Edwin Clarke Gregory, of Salisbury, who has a son on the present Tar Heel squad, which held the Cavaliers to 6-0.

In 1899 a Virginia player was killed in acton, and the annual game was cancelled out of respect to the Cavalier performer, but the rivalry was renewed the next Thanksgiving.

Two Virginia victories and the 12-12 tie of 1902 followed. The Tar Heels had their next win in 1903. Lyle Jones, prominent Asheville attorney, with a son in the University now, led that team.

How They Stack Up

The Tar Heels lost a disheartening 12-11 verdict in 1904, but Coach W. J. Warner's eleven overwhelmingly defeated the Old Dominion the next year, Captain Foy Roberson, now a prominent Durham physician and advisory physician to the Tar Heel squad, leading the North Staters to a brilliant 17 to 0 victory in Nor-

Chapel Hill High Defeats Hillsboro

Hillsboro was defeated for the first time in three years Friday afternoon when Chapel Hill barely nosed them out with a 14 to 13 count, after a hard struggle.

Chapel Hill shifted from its usual passing and reversed tactics to line plunging, registering sixteen first downs to its opponents eight.

Tripp and Upchurch, converted linesmen, playing at half back berths were the principle ground gainers for Chapel Hill. Ewbanks was Hillsboro's main threat, but retired from the game with an injury received as a result of a hard tackle by Tripp.

Hillsboro attempted four passes, completing none, while the 'Minature Tar Heels' completed four out of eight attempts by the ariel route.

This was the last game of the season for the Hillians unless they succeed in getting a game with Durham on Friday after Thanksgiving.

Scoring: Hillsboro, — Touchdowns, Ewbanks, 2 Chapel Hill — Touchdowns, Upchurch, 2. Points after touchdown, Hillsboro, Tripp, 1. Chapel Hill, King, 1, Tripp 1.

Officials: Referee, McIver (Carolina), Umpire, Wright (Carolina). Head linesman, Merritt (Carolina).

Tennis Matches Are Postponed Again

Inclement weather yesterday caused another postponement of the last two sets of the tennis match between Wilmer Hines, Jr., of Columbia, southern junior champion, and Bryan Grant of Atlanta, southern senior champion, for the University net title.

Hines was leading two sets to one when darkness caused postponement of the match on Thursday afternoon. The remaining two sets will be played the first day that weather permits.

OLD WAR-HORSE IS ILL

Knute Rockne's leg infection, which has been causing him trouble, has spread to his other leg. There is no cause for alarm, according to the report of Dr. Robert L. Sensennich, who is attending him. On account of this development, the famous coach may not see the forthcoming game and probably will not be allowed by Dr. Sensennich to see the match between the Army and Notre Dame, which will close the Rockne schedule. The Notre Dame coach's condition requires that he have complete rest and forbids even moving either leg.

D. A. R. Meeting

The Davie Poplar of the D. A. R. had a meeting at Mrs. Warren's Wednesday afternoon.

("Heinie")

ACCORDING TO the Tar Heel files the majority of the tag football league games between the champions of the fraternity and dormitory leagues have been won by the dormitory title holders. Last year, however, the campus title went to a fraternity. This Tuesday the New Dorms and Betas will meet to decide the campus honors.

NOT ONLY will there be a battle for the campus tag football championship this Tuesday afternoon, but the two league leaders will be working to win the turkey dinner which has been promised by the Smoke Shop to the winners of the titular match.

THE CAKE RACE was accounted a large success after a year's layoff. In spite of the cold and a slight drizzle, 106 entries toed the mark a little after 4 o'clock. The track coaches, intramural officials, and others accomplished an amost inconceivable task by picking the position in which the entries finished. According to the results 98 of the 106 finished, led by Tom Watkins, a former McCallie school track star, closely following Watkins was Joe Pratt, Rhodes and Hamilton. Out of the first four winners two, Pratt and Hamilton, were residents of Chapel Hill.

FOUL WEATHER doesn't seem to worry cross country officials much more than it does in football. In spite of the cold and rain yesterday afternoon the 77 harriers, representatives of 11 colleges and universities, entered in the meet completed Carolina's five mile course. The time of the run shows the effect of the weather on the runners. Cross country is usually considered as a minor sport but because Carolina has maintained such an outstanding record in recent years there is more interest in this sport at the University than at many of the other colleges.

THE DUKE FRESHMEN seem to be stepping out toward a state frosh title. They defeated the Davidson Wildkittens last Friday, and had previously taken the Tar Babies in tow by a margin of one point in a hard fought 8-7 game.

RUMORS ABOUT the formation of a new Conference centers around the withdrawal of Oglethorpe and Furman from the S. I. A. A. According to reports the new league will attempt to be formed from teams from North Carolina, Georgia, South Carolina and Virginia. Some readers of recent newspaper articles about this were probably led to believe that the University of North Carolina was expected to be a member of this new conference. However, this is not the case. U. N. C., or any other North Carolina team for that matter, doesn't belong to the S. I. A. A. and is a devout member of the S. I. C. The purpose of the new league to be formed is primarily for the formation of a more centrally located, compact league. Reports indicate that Wake Forest and Davidson will be, or have been, approached in regard to their membership in the formation of the new league.

CAROLINA still leads the Big Five teams and is patiently waiting to see how the Thanksgiving results will affect her standing in the S. I. C.

HISTORY NOTICE

An examination for the removal of entrance conditions on American history will be held December 5 in room 301 Saunders hall from 4 to 6 o'clock.

NO PRACTICE FOR VARSITY PLAYERS

Bad Weather Prevents Work-Outs; Sell-out Predicted for Thanksgiving Game.

In view of the slushy field and cold weather, Head Coach Chuck Collins thought it advisable to keep the University football squad indoors yesterday. He gave the players a long classroom lecture on the fundamentals of Virginia's attack and of the Carolina attack to be used.

Captain Ray Farris, star left guard, turned up yesterday with a severe attack of tonsilitis, and the veteran quarterback Pete Wyrick was still limping. Trainer Quinlan hopes to have both in shape for the Virginia game. Their loss would be a heavy blow.

Approximately 20,000 seats for the game have been sold, it was learned at the office of Graduate Manager Charles T. Woollen.

Five thousand reserved seats are still available, and a number of them have been placed on sale in Raleigh, Durham, Greensboro and Winston-Salem, it was stated.

Virginia Golf and Tennis Players To Be Here Wednesday

The University tennis and golf teams are to meet the Virginia racqueteers and golfers here next Wednesday, according to announcement yesterday from Coach John Kenfield.

The golf match will be played over the Hope Valley course, while the tennis matches will be staged on the University's courts.

The two contests will be varsity preludes to the annual Thanksgiving day clash between the football teams of the two institutions, to be staged in Kenan stadium here Thursday.

CAVALIER FROSH DOWN TAR BABIES

The Tar Baby team lost to the Cavalier frosh yesterday at Charlottesville by a score of 6-0. The team did especially well by holding the strong Virginia team to so low a score, as Carolina was badly crippled by injuries to several players. Three Tar Baby regulars and six valuable substitutes did not make the trip because of injuries and McDade, star tackle, and McNeil, fullback, and Nichols, left end, all first-stringers, were not in the best shape.

When the Tar Heel went to press, full particulars were not available; but a more complete account of the game will be published in Tuesday's issue.

Blue Devils Dump Demon Deacons 20-0

The Duke Blue Devils battled their way through mud and water to a 20 to 0 win over the Wake Forest Demon Deacons. Through sleet and rain a handful of spectators saw Brewer and Murray lead the Blue Devils to their victory.

Both teams battled for every inch of ground but the Duke aggregation easily had the advantage from the start. Fumbles and blocked punts were costly to the Deacons and finally resulted in touchdowns.

No definite advantage was gained by either team until the last minute of the first quarter when a fumble by Wake Forest was recovered by Duke for a touchdown. Duke failed to gain the extra point.

The ball see-sawed up and down the field for the remainder of the half and the score at the mid point stood Duke 6, Wake Forest 0.

The third quarter commenced with Dnke starting toward a touchdown. In the last few minutes of the quarter a Wake Forest punt was blocked and recovered by Duke on the five yard line. Brewer, for Duke, carried the ball over on the 4th down for the touchdown and a few seconds later added the extra point by going off tackle.

The last Duke scoring came in the latter part of the fourth quarter. Murray of Duke made a long run and planted the ball on the five yard line. Murray in this run would have made the touchdown but stumbled as he neared the goal line and slid for about three yards. Immediately following Murray's long run, Brewer carried the ball over. The extra point was added by a pass.

Duke kicked to Wake Forest and the Deacons almost got loose for a touchdown being stopped by the Duke safety man. On the next play Adkins of Duke intercepted a pass, the game ended with the ball in Duke's possession on their own 35 yard line.

Wake Forest threatened seriously throughout the game but showed a strong defense at times. Murray contributed to the Deacon's downfall by numerous pretty runs and again as in last year's game, be listed as the outstanding light for Duke in this game.

DUKE FRESHMEN WIN INVITATION HARRIER HONORS

Jensen, Carolina Star, Captures Individual Title in Freshman Cross Country Run.

With Clarence Jensen of Carolina taking individual honors in exceptionally fine time, the Tar Heel freshman cross country team placed second to Duke in the state freshman championship run held at Chapel Hill yesterday, immediately before the Conference meet. Duke won low score of 27 points, Carolina was second with 35 and N. C. State placed third with 67.

Jensen, who has won every freshman meet this year, closed the season by running the three mile course yesterday in 17 minutes and 30 seconds. Bray of Duke finished 70 yards behind him in 17:42, followed by Lovell of Duke in 17:46; Troutman of State in 17:59 and Wood of Duke in 18:07.

Cordle, in seventh position, was the second Carolina man to finish. He was immediately followed by Zelly, Cox and Lumpkin, all of Carolina. Strikeleather of Carolina placed seventeenth, and Jones twentieth.

Jones, who has been ill with the mumps, ran his first race yesterday wearing a heavy sweat suit. He ran a good race as far as the gate of Emerson field, where he collapsed. After resting a moment, he walked the lap around the track and came in twentieth.

Carolina's defeat was a complete surprise, as the frosh have beaten both State and Duke in dual meets. Jensen came through however with his expected easy individual victory. Coach Ranson considered his time excellent in view of the mud, wet, and cold the runners had to go through.

The freshmen started at the freshman field, went north to Rosemary street, up Rosemary to Carrboro, then turned to the left at the swimming pool. They turned to the left again at the laundry, went down Cameron avenue to the Carolina Inn, turned to the right there and and went as far as the Pittsboro highway. Going along the highway by the Tin Can, they turned into Emerson field and ran a lap there to finish opposite the stadium.

Chapel Hill Gets Real Taste Winter

A blanket of snow, the earliest in many years, covered partly or in whole eight southern states as the south shivered and shook in its first cold snap of the year.

Tennessee, Kentucky and portions of Louisiana, Mississippi, Virginia, North Carolina and Georgia were covered with a blanket of snow that ranged from a thin fringe to eight inches or more as a snow storm that covered Arkansas spread east and south Friday. A snow fall in Shreveport, La., of two inches marked the most southern extent of the storm, and set a new record for that vicinity.

Snow began falling in Greensboro Friday morning at 11 o'clock with the hardest flurry coming at 1:30. The snow melted almost as fast as it fell and an accurate reading could not be taken, but the recorded fall amounted to .2 of an inch.

Asheville and the mountain section of western North Carolina woke this morning to find themselves covered with the first general snow of the season. In Asheville the fall amounted to almost three-quarters of an inch, but though the weather was below freezing it melted almost as soon as it fell.

Friday was by far the coldest day of the present season when a half sleet and half rain sent Chapel Hillians scurrying to cover. The lowest temperature was recorded Friday night. Yesterday the minimum temperature for 24 hours ending yesterday at 5 o'clock was 29 degrees and 34 as the maximum.

Sale To Make Two Appearances Here

Due to the appearance of a number of conflicting announcements there is some doubt in the minds of interested parties as to the actual time of the readings to be given here by John B. Sale on December 2.

It might be stated that Mr. Sale will appear twice in Chapel Hill. At 11 o'clock in the morning he will speak before the members of the sophomore English department in Murphey hall. The reading there will be given under the auspices of the Bull's Head book shop. Every one interested in Mr. Sale and his book, The Tree Named John, is invited.

The reading before the Chapel Hill community club in the Episcopal parish house will be given at 8 o'clock. The public is also invited to attend this lecture.

Buccaneer Notice

There will be a meeting of the Buccaneer art staff in the Buccaneer office Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock. All members please be present as important matters are to be discussed.

Carolina-Virginia Game To Revive Memories of Old Days

That year marked the first time a Carolina player was picked on an All-American football team. Staffer, of Pennsylvania, placed LeRoy Franklin Abernethy at fullback on his selection.

No game was scheduled for Captain Romey Story's 1906 team. Story was reelected captain for 1907, but when the University opened news was received of his death from typhoid fever. The loss of the great tackle was a heavy blow to Koenholz's team and Virginia won 9 to 4.

Period of Losses

That was the beginning of a long period of gloom and defeat for North Carolina. Coach followed coach, and for eleven years the Tar Heels and their supporters made the long trek to Richmond only to lose game on game, often by heart-breaking scores.

"Doggie" Thenchard, famous Princeton athlete began a three-year coaching regime in 1913. He was fortunate in having some wonderful players, but failed to defeat Virginia, although Walter Fuller broke away for a seventy-yard run and a touchdown in 1913.

Dave Tayloe led a Tar Heel team in 1914 that smothered all opponents under great scores and set a scoring record for Tar Heel football teams that stands to date, but still Carolina lost the game of the season to Virginia, 20-3.

Introduce Harvard System

Thomas J. Campbell introduced the Harvard coaching system in 1916 and results were gratifying from the first. Bill Folger slipped through the Virginians' defense for fifty-two yards and a 7-0 victory to end the long jinx.

The Thanksgiving Days of 1917 and 1918 found the Tar Heels in the trenches playing the game of war, but the 1919 engagement netted a 6 to 0 win for the North Carolinians. Runt Lowe starred that day, but he could not stem the Cavalier attack in 1920 and Virginia won 14 to 0.

The rivalry was threatened with disruption in 1921 when "Red" Johnson, star Tar Heel halfback, was the subject of a heated argument between the two faculties, and Captain Hollis Rhinehart started to Chapel Hill with his team without faculty consent. The consent came at a late hour and the sorrel-topped Johnson led Carolina to a 7-3 win.

Close Games Lately

Grady Pritchard, stellar lineman, now a freshman coach, led the Tar Heels to a thrilling 10-7 win in 1922, but the next Thanksgiving battle was a 0-0 tie, and the following year the Virginians turned the tables again and won 7-0.

A placekick by Charlie Mackall, Virginia guard, and a dropkick by Bunn Hackney, Carolina quarterback, netted a count of 3-3 for the 1925 battle. Mackall repeated the same trick in 1926, but Hackney failed in his attempt and Virgnia won 3-0.

The Tar Heels dedicated their new Kenan stadium in 1927 with a thrilling 14-13 victory in which Captain Bo Morehead placekicked the winning point to end a great career in a blaze of glory. The Tar Heels won again last year, 24-20, on a thrilling run half the distance of the field by Chuck Erickson, diminutive halfback, in the last minute of play.

Education Notice

All juniors in the school of education who have not had their major and minor work laid out for them are requested to see C. E. McIntosh at room 2 in Peabody at once.

WINTER IS HERE

Nearby, the cedar withstood the attack with a different spirit. He knew and feared the icy king from Santa Clausland, so he bowed his head and arms low in humility. The cedar, strong in perseverance and tolerance, remained intact and bent, a pitiful figure. But a figure which has triumphant days ahead when the frigid bully sees fit to depart.

The arboretum suffered most. It was a scene of desolation and havoc. Yet a scene of unbelievable beauty, intrinsic, and precious. Alice in Wonderland must have viewed such traceries of crystals. This frozen garden with paths obliterated by broken branches and bending bushes, was a mecca of delicate crystals of frosted sweets: trees of candy in an eerie world.

All nature, for the day, had entered into a phantom world and lived in glass houses.

Red, holly-looking berries on bushes were cores for crystal marbles suspended on grass-plated brown stems.

Wires resembled thousand-footed centipeds with their myriads of icicle legs.

College students, walking beneath "Puritanical" trees, needed World War helmets to protect their still-bare heads from falling segments of ice.

Said one, encountered on the way who seemed to sum up the opinions of all: "It's hell isn't it? See that big broken limb over there. Pretty, though."

But we should look to nature to be warned of the vagaries of nature. Last week, geese and wild ducks were seen, flying a warning on their unswerving course southward.

Says Webster: "Sleet is driven rain partly frozen or that freezes as it falls; to shower frozen rain."

But it's more than that, isn't it?

TAR HEEL HARRIERS WIN ANNUAL CONFERENCE RUN

Gold medals went to the first 15 men finishing: Young, Georgia; Simon, Duke; Miles, V. P. I.; Lowry, N. C.; Bernhardt, Georgia; Baucom, N. C.; Johnson, N. C. S.; Fingrin, Florida; Crisfield, Georgia Tech; Heizer, Duke; Barkley, N. C.; Palmer, V. P. I.; Ayres, Florida; Weaver, V. P. I.; and Summerday, Georgia Tech.

Bob Young's time over the five mile course here yesterday was exceptionally good considering the adverse weather conditions. The old record over the course was made by Galen Elliott of Carolina in the 1927 meet. His time was 26:26.

At the two mile mark Young had a 75 yard lead, being followed by Simons of Duke, Miles of V. P. I. and Lowry of U. N. C. These four men held their relative positions throughout the race. Simons finished in 27:10, 60 yards behind Young.

The splendid team running of Carolina, according to Coach Dale Ranson, was the reason for its capturing the Conference title for the fourth successive year.

complete official files and in addition have preserved the records of their own representatives at the Conference.. The complete story of that Conference would include all the records of all the participating governments and in addition all the memoranda of participating individuals.

"In this capacity as Legal Advisor to the American Commission to Negotiate Peace, Mr. Miller probably had as much direct contact with the writing of the Treaty of Versailles as it was physically possible for any individual to have. In particular, he participated intimately in all that concerned the drafting of the Covenant of the League of Nations.

"The collection of papers which the generosity of Mr. Miller enables us to present to the University of North Carolina includes his Diary printed almost verbatim as it was dictated at the moment, together with a great many other writings. There are twenty volumes of text, containing about ten thousand printed pages in all.

"Volume I contains the Diary and a few other papers, including a list of the personnel of the Conference. Volumes II to IX inclusive contain what Mr. Miller designates as Numbered Documents, of which there are no fewer than 1,008. These Numbered Documents are of almost every conceivable variety and include letters, memoranda, tentative drafts and photographs. Volumes X to XIII inclusive contain reports of various commissions; while Volumes XIV to XVI record the Minutes of the Supreme Council. Volumes XVII and XVIII are Bulletins of the American Commission to Negotiate Peace. Volume XIX is a book of Annotations made during the Conference. It alone would be a reference work of much value. Volume XX contains some minutes and a number of miscellaneous papers. Included in the text of the first ten volumes are some fifty maps. In addition to these, there is a separate box volume of seventeen maps which because of their size could not easily be inserted in the text of the volumes themselves. There is an Index Volume of 135 pages, which contains also a list of errata and corrections to be noted in the earlier numbered volumes. A very large proportion of the total number of documents included in these volumes are hitherto unpublished.

In offering to the University of North Carolina this unique collection, of which only a very limited number of copies have been printed, the Carnegie Endowment feels that it is placing in the hands of students and scholars of generations to come a very remarkable piece of apparatus for an understanding of the work of the Peace Conference which followed the Great War.

Complete Arrangements Made For General Alumni Meeting

First Meeting To Be Held Tomorrow Afternoon In Graduate Club; Student Mortality Subject.

Final arrangements for the 1929 General Alumni assembly of the University have been made, according to an announcement by Maryon Saunders, alumni secretary. Programs have been mailed out to officers of local alumni clubs all over North Carolina and in other states, and also permanent class officers.

The Alumni Assembly will begin with a session next Wednesday evening, and will conclude Thanksgiving morning.

The meetings are being held in the Graduate Club. The Wednesday evening program will center around the problems of student mortality, and President Harry W. Chase will introduce the subject. Francis F. Bradshaw, dean of students, is to address the Assembly on "The University and the Students," and the meeting will later be opened for discussion. Dean Bradshaw will focus his remarks upon five pertinent questions which may be asked about the present-day University student body.

1. What sort of students come to the University of North Carolina?
2. Why do they come?

University Students Attend Press Meeting

The six Carolina delegates, John Mebane, Cy Edson, Glenn Holder, Garland McPherson, Mary Price and Mary Marshall Dunlap returned to Chapel Hill Sunday night after attending the eighteenth semi-annual meeting of the North Carolina Collegiate Press Association held at Lenoir Rhyne college.

Pete Roberts of State College was elected vice-president of the association, the only change made in the officers of the organization. Garland McPherson of the University is treasurer.

More than a hundred student journalists were present at the meeting which lasted three days, terminating at noon Saturday.

The delegates registered Thursday afternoon and were a tea by the student body of Lenoir Rhyne, followed by a banquet at the Country Club given by the Hickory chamber of commerce.

Dr. Schaeffer of Lenoir Rhyne college made the welcoming address Friday morning, followed by a report of the publications, the appointment of committees, and a business session. Friday afternoon the delegates were the guests of the college at a football game between Lenoir Rhyne and Erskine. A banquet and theatre party was given the guests Friday night.

A business session was held Saturday morning at which time High Point college was selected as place for the spring meeting.

F. W. Plonk, State college, led a discussion group for the business managers. Mabel Ingold, Guilford, led the discussion of managing editors. Dorothy Edwards, N. C. C. W., led the discussion of the annual editors. H. L. Lippard, Duke, led the discussion of the newspaper editors. Cy Edson, Carolina, led the discussion of the magazine editors.

Only Two More Issues

There will be only two more issues of the Tar Heel this week, Wednesday and Thursday. Regular publication of the paper will begin again Tuesday, December 3. All announcements for Thursday's issue should be turned in to the Tar Heel office before 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. The office will be closed at that time for the Thanksgiving holidays.

LENOIR CHAMBERS TO BE EDITOR OF VIRGINIAN - PILOT

Lenoir Chambers, alumnus of the University in the class of '14, at present associate editor of the Greensboro Daily News, leaves Greensboro this week to become associate editor of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot.

Mr. Chambers, who is recognized as one of the foremost journalists in the south, was an all-round student while he was on the campus, being editor of the Tar Heel, football halfback, varsity tennis and basketball player, and member of Phi Beta Kappa.

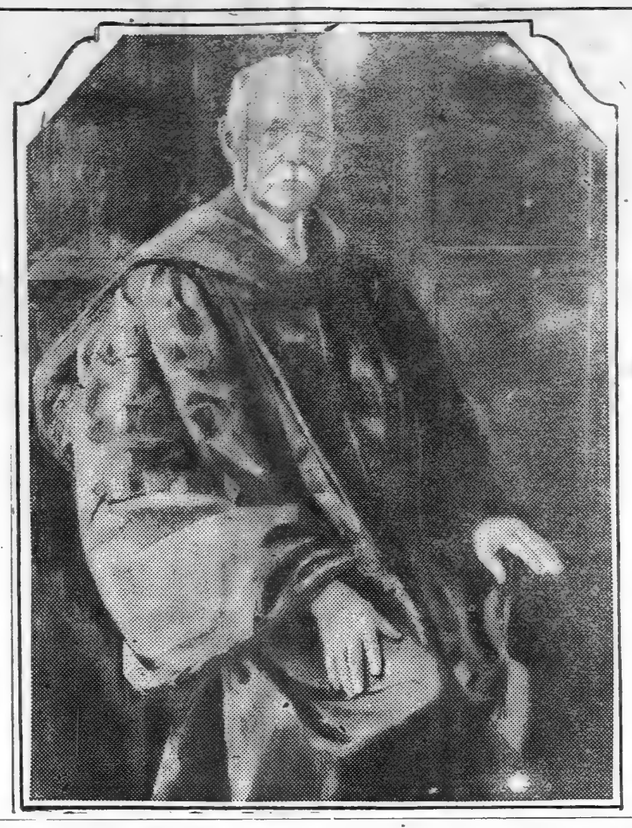
The Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, which is edited by Louis Jaffe, is the newspaper which won the Pulitzer prize last year.

After leaving the University, Mr. Chambers studied at the Columbia school of journalism, and then taught at Woodberry Forest. After the war he came back to Chapel Hill as director of the University news bureau. From here he went to Greensboro, where he succeeded Gerald Johnson as city editor of the Daily News when the latter came to Chapel Hill.

Up until last year he was a member of the athletic council of the University.

JOINT SESSION TO DISCUSS TAR HEEL

The regular quarterly joint session of the Di and Phi will begin at 7:15 tonight in the Di hall, New West building. The purpose of the session is to discuss the merits and demerits of the issuance of the Daily Tar Heel in its present form. Faculty members, undergraduates, and graduates who are not members of either society are invited by the societies to attend the meeting.



This discussion was arranged at the suggestion of a member of the Tar Heel staff, who felt that several defects in the publication would be brought out which have thus far escaped the notice of the members of the staff. The discussion is designed to bring suggestions to the editor and his staff for the improvement of the paper.

Since the Di will be host to the Phi tonight, J. C. Williams, president of the Di, will preside. Although every person who attends will be granted the privilege of discussing the issue, only members of the Di and Phi will be allowed to vote.

Hamilton To Attend Historical Meeting

Dr. J. G. deRoulhac Hamilton, head of the history department, will go to New York Thursday to attend the meeting of the executive council of the American Historical Association, which convenes there November 29 and 30.

Author of "Virginia Plutarch"

BREAK BETWEEN WILSON AND HARVEY DESCRIBED BY BRUCE IN NEW BOOK

Recent Release of University Press Tells Many Interesting Historical Incidents.

The intimate story of Woodrow Wilson's break with George Harvey is related by Dr. Philip Alexander Bruce, well known historian, in one of the chapters of the two new volumes just released by the University Press.

Colonel Harvey, it is recalled, was the first to bring Wilson's name forward publicly as that of a man eminently fitted for the office of president. In relating the events connected with the abrupt termination of their friendship, Dr. Bruce sheds a new light on this famous episode.

Presented in biographical form and entitled The Virginia Plutarch, the two books were written to present "not a series of detached characters," but a continuous narrative of deeds from the Colonial era to the present time and to give "the full amazing sweep of American history as it was shaped by 33 eminent Virginians."

"Dr. Bruce presents this impressive array of Virginia patriots with a full sense of their national and indvidual importance," the University Press announcement states. "They represent every stage of the winning and keeping of America. They are all Virginians, but not Virginians alone, for they belong to America, and in many instances to the world. They have often and in many places been given their separate stories, but no one has before brought all these great figures together as Mr. Bruce does here—with a full sense of their individual and national importance, and written out of a profound knowledge of American history."

"Biography and history have lately devoted themselves so much to idol-shattering, it is both a relief and a pleasure to find at least one good historian who can still see men in Plutarchian proportions. Nor is it anything but natural that, confronted with such an array of fine figures, he should believe that history may often, if not always be the essence of innumerable biographies. Certainly no recent book so ably demonstrates both these attitudes."

Senior Notice

All seniors in the college of Liberal Arts whose names begin with M and through Z are requested to report to Dean Hibbard's office, 203 South building between 9 and 12, and 2 and 4 o'clock.

Five Dances Will Be Given By German Club; Bert Haywood Will Be Leader of Set.

Three celebrations are due this week. The first will occur tomorrow at 1 o'clock when the Thanksgiving recess begins, the second at 2:30 on Thanksgiving day when the Cavaliers and Tar Heels clash, and the last will take place at 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon when the fall dances begin.

House this evening from seven until nine and Wednesday afternoon from three until five. Although cards may be obtained at the door during the dances members are urged to obtain their cards early in order to prevent delay and confusion.

TOWN WILL FINE ALL VIOLATORS OF PARKING LAW

No cases have been made against drivers violating the new traffic laws in force on the University campus, but ten first warnings have been given. P. L. Burch, chairman of the Safety Committee, issued a warning that the second violation of the new traffic laws would incur a $50.00 fine.

Parking in back of Bynum Gymnasium is the main bone of contention in the parking problem. Most of the first warnings have been made against drivers parking their cars in this restricted area.

The new parking laws were printed in the Tuesday, November 19, issue of the Daily Tar Heel.

Recorder Henshaw had an easy time in Recorder's Court yesterday morning when only three cases were docketed.

M. H. Fann, white, was charged with reckless driving and running into two women. His case was postponed until the latter part of December pending the complete recovery of the young women.

Fred Alston, negro, charged with possessing intoxicating liquors for the purpose of sale, gave notice that he would appeal his case to a higher court.

William Horton, negro, charged with hunting without license and hunting rabbits out of season, was made to pay the costs of court.

VARSITY DEBATE TEAM SELECTED

Varsity debate tryouts held recently resulted in the selection of six men after the following query had been debated for two and one half hours: "Resolved, that the nations of the world should adopt some plan of disarmament of all forces, except those which are needed for police purposes."

Carr and Denton were chosen on the affirmative side of the question. Bailey, Hobgood, Meares, and Mashburn won negative berths. These men will represent the University in coming debates with the University of South Carolina, N. C. State, and Wake Forest.

N. C. State and Wake Forest will be met in the form of a triangular debate, while the North Carolina-South Carolina fray is to be a dual contest. Both the triangular debate and the dual engagement will take place early in December.

HOUSE SPEAKS

R. B. House, executive secretary of the University, addressed the meeting of the Young People's Social of the Presbyterian church last Sunday night. The subject of Mr. House's talk was "Personality."

Sophomores Elect Johnson Official

In the election held in chapel Monday morning, Larry Johnson of Charlotte was elected vice-president of the sophomore class to fill the place of George Buchan, who dropped out of school this year. President Ben Aycock presided.

Three other men besides Johnson were nominated for the office, though Johnson received a good majority in the voting. The other nominees were Peter Gilchrist, Bill Petty, and Casper Austin. After being elected, Johnson made a short speech in which he promised to fulfill conscientiously the duties of his office.

After the election the remainder of the chapel period was given over to the practice of some yells and the song—"Carolina Go"—in preparation for the Thanksgiving football game. Cheerleader Jack Barret and Moore Bryson, author of the words of "Carolina Go," conducted the meeting.

The Honor System To The Fore Again

Elsewhere on this page appears the first of a series of five articles on the honor system, prepared by the chairman of the committee on the honor system of the National Student Federation. While the writer of the articles exhibits a natural bias in favor of the honor system, they contain some excellent material. The four remaining articles will be published in consecutive issues of the Daily Tar Heel; careful reading of them by the University students will stimulate constructive thinking that may result in highly beneficial changes here.

Personally we are inclined to believe that cheating is an entirely personal affair, that it cannot be effectively regulated by a student council or any other judicial or legislative body. According to the principles upon which the University honor system is based, every student is placed upon his own responsibility when he enters college here. Theoretically he pledges himself not to violate the precepts of the honor system; if he breaks his pledge he is liable to failure on the course, in case of cheating, and expulsion from school or probation for any type of offense.

In effect the student council is a punitive agency. The freshman is reminded that if he is reported for cheating, he will receive punishment at the hands of the council. In our opinion it would be far better to give the student absolute freedom while he is here. If he cheats on examinations, that is his own responsibility. He is harming himself alone. Frequently he should be reminded that his chances of success or failure in life depend to a large extent upon what he does in college; if he cribs or cheats on his courses, he is squandering his chances for success.

Despite the rather weighty evidence to the contrary, most men come to college to secure an education, and prep-schoolish restrictions and regulations are entirely out of place upon the real college campus. Nearly three-fifths of the student body here are partially or entirely self-supporting. They need no threats of punishment to make them realize the seriousness of cheating and other conduct detrimental to the securing of the greatest benefits from college.

Week-Ends And Scholarship

At a recent meeting of the Dialectic Senate a resolution to the effect that ride bumming on the part of students is detrimental to the University was the subject of discussion in which phases of the week-end problem had a part. Some of the senators contended during course of the debate that scholarship is actually improved by the taking off of week-ends. They based their conclusion upon their observations that the student's mind is refreshed by a period of recreation after five days of intensive study.

Others taking part in the discussion declared that students should spend their week-ends in work and that, therefore, week-ends spent regularly off the Hill are detrimental to their best interests.

It so happens that the majority of students on the campus do not utilize five days of the week in intensive study and concentrated effort. If they did, week-ends taken off possibly might be excused. The average undergraduate cannot expect to do work which is at once satisfactory to himself and to the University if he is regularly off the campus on Friday afternoons, Saturdays, and Sundays. The average student should use his week-ends in tying together the loose strinigs of the work of the preceding week.

Another way of spending an advantageous week-end, as far as education is concerned, is by reading in the library. H. G. Wells has said that he is opposed to colleges because of their subordination of study to such things as athletics and extra-curricular activities, and that prodigious reading is the true educational process. Be that as it may, it must be admitted that week-ends constitute a very valuable part of the students time and that they should be spent profitably. A perjiod of relaxatiion is necessary at intervals between periods of five days. Week-ends spent regularly off the Hill are not conducive to scholarship.—B. M.

Readers' Opinions

IT ALL COMES OUT IN THE WASH, MR. POINTER

Dear Mr. Pointer:

Thanks, old dear, I have longed for the privilege to break into print thru the Tar Heel. Big boy, after reading your kindly letter, I am sure that time has arrived.

Apparently the staff has gone stagnant to have printed your letter and who knows, they might print mine.

It is my wish to thank you, Mr. Pointer, for the kindly letter and inferences you have gathered. Possibly you like many others tie that laundry up in a shirt (Laundry Bags are a necessary evil) and perhaps it might just be possible that your "Yo-Yo" shirt may be the one you have reference to. You know, old top, thats the ONE SHIRT that has to stand the gaff of the week end ravages.

The generous way in which you forget my mistakes (or that of the machinery) certainly denotes a true southern gentleman. Its ever appreciative I am, Mr. Pointer, and its my sincere hope that nothing much will ever happen again to your shirts and towels in the future.

We all need to be stepped on, for truly, I do in all sincerety recognize you as my boss, so, if I do not happen to recognize you Mr. Pointer, just whistle something sir.

SHADES OF INGERSOLL!

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Greetings, doomed editors! What-ho, damned students, and my respects to the irremediably lost faculty of this, oh most sinful campus! And be it known that it is with fingers tremulous with rage and disgust that I seize my pen to answer the article by "A Freshman," entitled, "The Godless Undergraduate," which appeared in Saturday's Tar Heel. Oh, Lord! to think that people like that still exist; and on this, of all campuses! But I shall try my best to drag his whimpering nose from under a somber church pew to where he can see a little light.

Argument No. 1: Percy Puritan(alias "The Freshman") laments that students leave the Hill every week-end for the questionable pleasures of adjoining towns"; and in this very opening paragraph Percy Puritan lays bare the creed of all religious and reforming fanatics. This class of people are humans whose minds and morals are so vile in themselves that they do not allow the rest of us, a single noble or clean sentiment. They look at others through the windows of their own souls, and are shocked to find Man so perverted. And this is your very trouble, Mr. Fanatic Freshman. You judge our actions too much by your own. For instance, what concrete proof can you give that the majority of the men who leave the Hill on week-end tours do so for indulging in "questionable pleasures"? I'll grant you that there are some students who do indulge in certain pursuits which society deems to label immoral (this could also be argued); but this type of student is very much in the minority, and I tell you that this evil cannot be overcome with singing hymns or reading Bibles. Most of the boys who leave the Hill on week-ends, go home to see their mothers and sisters; to have a date with their perfectly clean and honest sweethearts; to visit new towns and old friends; and if you can still claim that this is perverting, may your own God forgive you—mine cannot!

Argument No. 2: That the work of students who leave the campus on week-ends suffers materially. That is wrong from beginning to end, as experience has taught me. Somehow the whole week-end seems to vanish between oversleeping and trying to shake off the stupefying effects of this excessive sleep; so that the week-end flies by, one has done no extra work and has had no relief from books and indoors—and this, gentlemen, is just the right atmosphere in which to breed little Percy Puritans. But do not misunderstand me; I do not advocate neglecting studies—quite the opposite. It is because I give studies great importance that I think it much better to keep oneself fresh and in good condition by relieving one's mind during the week-ends; but neither am I such a stick-in-the-mud as to imagine that studying is the only important thing in my life. One should go out among one's friends, enjoy the social contact which imparts to one the necessary social polish, adds to one's broadening outlook on life, and leads to a fuller existence and better understanding of our fellow creatures. Just this is what ails this rabid, sour-apple of a Puritan, who has stuck his face and his heart so deep and long into musty pages and yellowed volumes that he has forgotten there is such a thing as human nature. Don't worry, old Musty, some day when by chance you be perusing again these same yellowed volumes, you will weep to discover the flower of your youth, now stiff and dry, where you stuck it years before, between the pages of these remorseless books, the lore of which you have since forgotten.

I hate your moralists and religious fanatics with their ferreting long noses and downright hypocrisy, who would rob me of my human pleasures and my liberty. Who are you, with your warped outlook and lack of charity, to judge me and my actions? Who appointed you my keeper? It is just your kind who are directly responsible for plunging into ghastly ridicule this great nation which once prided itself in its glorious independence and manly valour! Look at us Americans—see how manly we have become: the Bosfonian moralist waiving his horrified finger on high: "Na, na, little Americans! Must-na read naughty, naughty books!"; the Tennessean ignoramus who deems it more holy to murder the intellect and freedom of an individual than to run any chances of having any dangerous honest thinking; and lastly, the prohibitionist, who like an old maid, offers to spank us if we take a little drink. Oh, but we are a gallant, dashing, romantic nation; "the home of the free and the land of the brave"—what a sarcastic pharse that has turned out to be!

Where is our valor, where is our sense of independence, that we allow these viperous leeches to suck us dry of all the red blood which we (especially we Southerners) inherited from our stalwart forefathers? Wake up, you effeminates! And now look at the advice of Percy Puritan: students should stay on the Hill and go to the churches of their choice, and in the afternoon read the Bible, for in it they will find some of the most consoling passages in all literature, and thus they will not have forgotten their youth. The devil! Consolation!—what do we want to be consoled about?—for the fact that we were born?—for the fact that we are young and filled with life?—and is God to be found only in musty hymn books and somber pews? Smash all that! I am young and my body tinges with the delight in life—I want to go everywhere and do everything; to love, sing, laugh, and cry; to accumulate knowledge, revel in great literature and music, peruse the enhancing pages of science; in short, I want to drink deep of the joys which Life can offer me, physically, mentally, and morally—and no screeching, medieval fanatic is going to dash this cup from my lips.

The College Honor System

Editor's Note: This series of articles on the Honor System is being printed simultaneously in all the college newpsapers in the United States. A series of five short articles dealing with matters pertaining to the Honor System will follow. This release is being made by the committee on the Honor System for the National Student Federation of the United States of America, with a hope that the students of this country will give serious thought to the problem of student honesty in our colleges, and that they will send to the Fifth Annual Congress of the National Student Federation representatives who have well-thought-out ideas concerning this matter. The Fifth Congress will meet at Stanford University on January 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, 1930.

These articles were prepared by James Theodore Jackson, chairman of the committee on the Honor System. The writer would be glad to hear from students concerning this problem. Please address him at P. O. Box 958, University, Alabama.

ARTICLE I

The Present Day Importance of the Problem of the Honor System in American Colleges.

Of all the problems that confront student leaders and college administrators, that of student honesty in classroom work and campus relations is probably the one that is first in importance and interest today. When students meet, this problem consumes a large part of the time given for discussion of student problems; when college administrators meet, this problem is widely discussed. It is a perplexing problem; it is an important one.

Some coleges and universities attempt to solve this problem of student honesty by means of the Honor System. Under the Honor System, broadly speaking, the students are given absolute freedom from surveillance by faculty members or proctors. It is assumed that the students are honest, and they are dealt with on that basis. Their signature to papers or in some instances to a special pledge, vouches for the fact that the work represented to be his own was done by the student himself, and by him alone. His word is his bond.

Those colleges which use the Honor System, as a rule, believe that it is efficacious in instilling into students a love and respect for honest dealings one with the other; that it is a vital force in the building of character in students; and that it inculcates into the college youth strong and lasting principles of good citizenship that will serve him well in after-college days, when he has left the protecting influence of college professors and fellow-students, and the wholesome deterrent effect of student disapproval of shady conduct.

On the other hand, many colleges, in fact a majority of the colleges of the United States, do not favor the Honor System. They see no advantages to be derived from it; they consider such a system to be a license to the students to cheat. They think that its advantages are greatly outweighed by its disadvantages; they consider that such matters are academic, and that they should be handled by paid faculty members rather than by students whose experience is comparatively limited and whose judgment is not fully developed.

Between the Honor System in which faculty control is nil, and the system of faculty espionage, in which student control is nil, are many intermediary systems. In some colleges the Honor System is in force in certain departments; in some it applies to matters outside the classrooms; but in most of them the Honor System attempts primarily to regulate honesty in scholastic work.

A number of colleges are in the midst of a great upheaval on account of the problem of the Honor System. A few have abolished it within the last few years. A few others have installed it. Others are seeking information concerning it in order that they may try to install it, or if they already have it, in order that they may make improvements.

At the Fourth Congress of the National Student Federation, the Honor System was one of the most important problems discussed. As a result of the discussion and recognizing the potential value in the Honor System as an educational institution, th eN. S. F. A. decided to urge colleges and universities to acquaint themselves fully with the Honor System and to take steps toward introducing it; or, if they already have it, to better it as much as possible.

With this end in view, and with a hope that the students of the country will give some serious thought to this problem, the committee on the Honor System for the N. S. F. A. is releasing this series of articles. The chairman of the committee would be glad to receive inquiries concerning the system or opinions concerning it at Box 958, University, Alabama.

Merely Meandering

Press conventions are nice things. At the recent one held in Hickory at Lenoir Rhyne College a Kellogg Peace Pact was signed between Duke and Carolina, Gerald Crona, editor of the Archive, Johnny Shaw and Jake Lippard, managing editor and editor respectively of the Chronicle, were all discovered to be human and as small in stature as most of us at Carolina. So, pshaw! everything is jake now.

Somebody made a nice speech there too.

But most of the time was taken up with pressing.

Of course, we don't intend to press that point.

Even though the press was all ours.

All right, now let someone go ahead and write an open forum letter about puns. And rotten ones at that.

The Tar Heel will print an open forum letter if it is pressed for copy.

We promise honestly and gincerely that we won't ever, ever make another pun on that word.

Maybe.

The way they acted at that meet
I'l swear is was distressing:
The whole crowd was a total wreck
When they had finished pressing!

It seems as if the campus has a mania for horseback riding this year. The fact reminds us of the best lines about horses that we ever read. You see, it's like this:

"Hit hain't the 'eavy 'auling'
As 'urts the 'orse's 'oofs,
Hits the 'ammar, 'ammar
On the 'ard 'ighway."

They had a Japanese Bazaar during the meeting at Lenoir Rhyne. Everyone did his part in helping to decorate. Johnny Shaw painted signs to replace some that said: "JAPANESE BAASAR"; Glenn Holder cut wistaria out of strips of purple paper; Cy Edson played "Little Pal" on the radio; and we stuffed cigarette ashes under the carpets (gracefully) to give the room a Japanese appearance.

It was rather queer the way the boys and girls flocked to see the picture "College Love." (The townspeople missed the picture and went out to the convention.)

This department of the Tar Heel will offer a special service to co-eds during the Christmas holidays. If all letters to Santa Claus are addressed to the editor of merely meandering, they will be forwarded to Kris, himself without any charge whatsoever.

P. S. Please enclose a snapshot of yourself. The old man might like it. And don't forget your address.

Thank the Lord, ed, that's over until after Thanksgiving!

MATH SEMINAR HEARS ADDRESS BY LASLEY

J. W. Lasley, Jr., professor of mathematics, spoke before the mathematics seminar in Phillips hall on "An Elementary Proof of Transon's Formula for Aberrancy."

The mathematics seminar, which meets weekly, is composed of the mathematics faculty and graduate students in this subject. At its meetings papers are presented on research work done by various members of the Seminar.

CAVALIERS ARE ENTHUSIASTIC OVER N. C. GAME

Planning To Stop Tar Heel Attack And Do Scoring On Own Account.

University, Va., Nov. 25.—Enthusiasm for the Virginia-North Carolina game to be played in Chapel Hill on Thanksgiving is slowly, but none the less surely, rising to the boiling point as the Cavaliers get down to their last two drills before the end of the season.

Carolina's "32 point a game" team has seemed so much superior to the crippled Cavalierrs that for a time most Virginia supporters just shook their heads and counted the game in the red. Gradually their attitude has been changing.

The fighting spirit found among the players on Lambeth Field is infecting the student body generally. Now it is spreading through the University community and out into the state at large.

The Cavaliers, coach and players, know that the odds will be very much against them on Thursday. But they don't care. The eleven Virginians who go into action in the Kenan Stadium will be fighting tooth and toe-nail to hold the crack Carolinians to as small a score as possible. And between themselves these Cavaliers have high hopes of doing a bit of scoring on their own. They don't intend that it shall be one-sided.

Churchill Dunn, who was injured in the V. P. I. game, has gotten back into uniform and he may be in his regular place at guard. If he is in shape to play he will probably replace George Cameron, leaving Dick DeButts as his running mate. But Cameron showed up so well against W. and L. that he may stay in the game.

Dick Day and Bill Williams are slated to start at the tackles. Dick Turner will be on one of the ends, but the man for the other has not been agreed upon. Bill Byrd, John Peyton, Bill Paxton and Norwood Orrick are all being considered for the right flank.

COLLINS POLISHES ATTACK FOR GAME

The Tar Heel varsity took its final scrimmage yesterday in preparation for the Thanksgiving classic with Virginia and showed lots of fire.

Sparing the varsity line, Coach Collins worked two backfield combinations behind a line of second and third string men.

The varsity scored frequently, but the good showing had to be discounted due to the fact that the opposition was a badly crippled freshman outfit.

Chuck Erickson, Phil Jackson, Henry House and Jimmy Maus led the running parade, until injuries caused withdrawal of the latter.

Maus had an old arm injury come back on him, but Trainer Quinlan doesn't think it serious enough to keep him from playing Thursday.

Jimmy Moore, the sophomore quarterback, also showed promise at running, and there was a hint that he may become a halfback in the near future.

Pete Wyrick was still on the injured list, but the trainers hope to have him in shape for Virginia.

Reports here yesterday were that the Virginia squad, which has been more or less shot to pieces with injuries all season, will be in tip-top shape for Carolina and will shoot the works in an effort to stop the high-powered Tar Heels.

Intramural Officials Select Star Players Of Past Season.

Following is the All-University tag football team and alternate team selected by the tag football officials:

FIRST TEAM

Name	Team
Anderson	Beta Theta Pi	End
Glenn	Pi Kappa Phi	End
Williamson	New Dorms	Tackle
Higdon	New Dorms	Tackle
Smith	Mangum	Guard
Purser	Steele	Guard
Skinner	Sigma Nu	Center
Williams	Pi Kappa Phi	Quarterback
Dunn	Old West	Half Back
Rand (Captain)	Pi Kappa Phi	Half Back
McAllister	Delta Kappa Epsilon	Full Back

SECOND TEAM

Waddell	Beta Theta Pi	End
Croson	New Dorms	End
Marshall	Pi Kappa Alpha	Tackle
Bradham	Beta Theta Pi	Tackle
Dunavant	Sigma Alpha Epsilon	Guard
Holderness	Delta Kappa Epsilon	Guard
Gray, G.	Delta Kappa Epsilon	Center
Chatham	Delta Kappa Epsilon	Quarterback
Race (Captain)	Beta Theta Pi	Half Back
Dunlap	New Dorms	Half Back
Potter	Aycock	Full Back

Smith, Williamson, Rand, Williams, and Glenn are on the honor roll for the second time, having made the mythical selection last year. Marshall Rand is captain for the second year. He was chosen last year as the most outstanding player and ran true to form this year, proving a consistant scoring threat.

Bradham, Potter, and Waddell made the first selection last year but slipped a notch this time. A significant thing about the selection is that the Betes, champions, and the Dekes, runners-up, have only one member each on the mythical team. Last year the winning Pi Kappa Phi's placed four men on the All- University team.

Class B Winners To Play Finals Friday

Next Friday, November 29th, at 2:30 P. M., the Oxford and Concord football teams will play the final game of the season for the Class B state championship, in Kenan Stadium.

Coach H. J. Fox of Concord, who is a Carolina alumnus, and Coach G. A. Kirkland of Oxford have been turning out consistently good football teams. Both Oxford and Concord teams competed in the semi-finals of last year and this year they are Eastern and Western champions respectively.

A large crowd of adherents of both teams is expected to come here and many tickets have been reserved at one dollar each for local enthusiasts of exciting high-school football.

The accepted world's record for the running broad jump is 5.68 meters or about 18 feet, 7 1-2 inches, set in London last year by Miss Gunn, an English athlete.

ABELL DRIVING CAVALIERS FOR CAROLINA GAME

Virginia Coach Polishing Up Plays To Use In Thanksgiving Game.

University, Va., Nov. 25.—(Special) — Virginia's varsity squad, after a real rest over the week-end, has only two afternoons to make final preparations for the game with North Carolina which closes the season on Thanksgiving.

Six inches of snow on Lambeth field made practice impossible Saturday. This gave the squad two days of ease instead of the usual one-day layoff on Sunday.

Coach Earl Abell is about through with rough workouts. The two drills this week will consist mainly of polishing up the play to be used against the Tar Heels. And, of course, considerable time will still be given to defense against the attack expected from the North Carolinians.

Virginia's squad of thirty players, with the staff of coaches, trainers and managers, will leave Charlottesville at noon Wednesday, and will travel to Durham by way of Lynchburg, Danville and Greensboro. They will spend the night before the game in Durham.

REVIEW OF PAST FAVORS VIRGINIA

History Shows Cavaliers Best When Dope Favored Tar Heels.

The Tar Heel football prophets who know their history are wondering quite a bit over the obtruse theorem of whether history repeats itself.

If it does, assuredly, the high-powered 1929 Tar Heels are in for a jolt in their annual Thanksgiving battle here with Virginia.

Reference, of course, is to the football situation in 1914, to the fate of Captain Dave Tayloe's famous team that set a scoring record for Tar Heel teams that still stands.

"Doggie" Trenchard, the famous Princeton athlete, put out a team at Carolina that dopesters said was unbeatable.

And it seemed so. Tayloe, Tandy & Co. opened against Richmond College with a band—and a 41-0 score.

They made it 65 on the Virginia Medical College and 48 on South Carolina—a margin of victory in that series, incidentally, that the 1929 Tar Heels lacked 8 points of equalling.

They slipped in and let Georgia score a touchdown, but the score was 41-6 at that.

It was 40-0 on Riverside, and Vanderbilt, with one of the strongest teams in the South, was turned back 10-9.

Wake Forest was passed the sour pill of defeat twice. V. M. I. and Davidson got a dose apiece.

With 10 games down, the greatest scoring Tar Heel team of all time had 356 points to all opponents' 29. Only Virginia remained to pass.

It may have been overconfidence, Captain Tayloe's girl friend may have kicked him, or what not—the Tar Heels still wonder. Have it as you will, this great Tar Heel team returned from Charlottesville a humiliated team, pasted with a 20-3 defeat at the hands of the Cavaliers.

If history repeats, the stage would be well set this year. The 1929 Tar Heels to date are averaging 32 1-8 points a game, a fraction below the 1914 record, and leading the Conference in scoring against Conference teams.

Freshman Game

The University Tar Babies lost a hard fought football game to the Virginia freshmen Saturday in Charlottesville, 6-0. The contest was played in unusually cold weather during a minor blizzard on a snow-covered field.

A soggy field handicapped the backs on both teams. Carolina made four first downs to Virginia's seven.

On the first play of the game Virginia completed a pass for 25 yards which put it on the Tar Babies' 45 yard line. The ball remained in Carolina territory the majority of the first half with both teams punting often.

Virginia scored early in the second quarter when Jack Haggard ran a short punt across the goal line. A line buck for the extra point was unsuccessful.

The Tar Babies threatened as the half was ending when a 20-yard run back from a partially blocked punt gave an opportunity to score. Stuart Chandler, shifty quarterback, gained two first downs, but when the Cavaliers held he passed for a touchback from the five yard line.

Near the end of the game Chandler fumbled a punt which Rose recovered. The attack was cut short by a Virginia fumble. Carolina recovered and began to pass. Stevens intercepted a pass and the Virginia frosh were threatening to score when the final whistle blew.

Golf Finals

Luther Steward, member of last year's golf team, plays B. L. Goodes this afternoon at 1:30 over the Hope Valley course for the University championship. The tournament began early last week, but inclement weather prevented play in the finals until today.

Virginia Planning To Win On Courts

University, Va., Nov. 25.—(Special)—Virginia will meet North Carolina in three sports this week. In addition to the Thanksgiving day game in Chapel Hill the Cavalier tennis and golf teams have matches with the Tar Heels on Wednesday afternoon.

Alphonso Smith, who is captain of the Virginia racquet team, won the South Atlantic championship from Edgar Yeomans of North Carolina in a match played last month at White Sulphur Springs. Smith and Yeomans will probably be paired on Wednesday.

Virginia will send six tennis players to Chapel Hill. Last fall the Cavaliers were victorious on the Madison Hall courts here and they hope to top the Carolinians again this season.

The golf match over the Hope Valley course will be the first encounter of Cavaliers and Tar Heels upon the links. Golf was first recognized as a minor sport here last spring, and this will be the first regular schedule attempted by the team. Reginald A. Loftus of Washington, D. C., is captain of the golfers.

The principal industrial crop of France is the sugar beet.

Bull's Head Sale Is Reminiscent of Old Auctioneer Stands

The book auction to be conducted at the Bull's Head book shop Wednesday of next week, December 4, is reminiscent of the times several years ago when a traveling book auctioneer came to Chapel Hill regularly with his stock of Bibles and dictionaries and a few old books from editions too large for the demand. The auctioneer worked either in front of the postoffice or the Pickwick theatre.

At lunch and dinner time, when the students came to the postoffice for their mail, the auctioneer would park his truck arranged very much like the traveling libraries sometimes seen, gather a crowd by his talk, and sell for whatever the books would bring. The dictionaries, cheap, unreliable editions, were offered to the students. He moved up to the lot where Berman's store now stands to sell his Bibles to the country people in town for shopping.

Amusing incidents sometimes occurred when the auctioneer picked up a book out of his line. He would start off as usual when selling his beloved dictionaries or Bibles. "Here's a book that should be in every home, in every room of every home. A volume that contains the wisdom of the ages, and one indispensible to the intellectually curious."

A heckler broke in on him.

"What is it?"

The auctioneer, not to seem ignorant, stalled. "A book that everyone should have in his home." He was thumbing the pages. "Swin-burne," he said, pronouncing the syllables distinctly, "is the author. A book that should be not only in every home, but in every room of each and every home. It is Swinburne's 'Tristram of Lyonesse.'" He had been able to extricate himself only by looking at the title page.

The Bull's Head auction will be marked by the offering of 100 books for sale to the highest bidder. A great variety of titles will be put on the block. The majority of the books are novels of the last year, but many biographies and general works are in the list. Villon, Brigham Young, the great Russian scientist Metchinkoff, Andrew Jackson, Roosevelt, Uncle Joe Cannon, and "Al" Smith are some of those whose biographies will be offered for sale at the auction; many titles from the most popular fiction writers of the day are in the group.

Professor Howard Mumford Jones will act as auctioneer for the shop.

Sweet To Lecture Here In January

William E. Sweet, ex-Governor of Colorado, will deliver a series of addresses sometime in the middle of January under the auspices of the local Y. M. C. A.

Mr. Sweet is a prominent political leader in Colorado and is a noted banker. He has taken a large part in the past political campaigns of his state. At present he is connected with a large bank. He is also active in the Congregational church.

Mr. Sweet is said to be a good example of the "Teddy" Roosevelt type. He is to be the first speaker on the winter program of the Y.

Members of History Departments Guests Here Last Saturday

The history professors of the celleges of the state were the guests of the department of history of the University at an informal dinner at the Carolina Inn last Saturday evening.

Due to bad weather, the representatives from North Carolina College and Wake Forest could not attend. Ten representatives from Duke, four from Meredith, and the members of the department here were present. A. R. Newsome, secretary of the State Historical Association, was also present.

The meetings, which are quarterly, are held in order that the members of the history departments of the colleges in the state may get to know each other personally.

School Journal To Appear Next Week

The December issue of the High School Journal is nearing completion, according to an announcement by I. C. Griffin, and will probably make its appearance next Monday, December 2. This will make the third issue of the current school year for this journal, which is published each month by the school of education.

Among the contributors to the December issue are: Governor O. Max Gardner; Superintendent G. B. Philipps of the Greensboro city schools; Professor T. W. Valentine of Hendersonville; Mrs. Raymond Binford, president of the State Parent-Teachers Association; and, among the University faculty, Dr. H. D. Meyer, Professor J. M. Gwynn, Dr. C. E. Preston and Miss Nora Beust, librarian of the school of education.

R. M. Gruman Talks To Woman's Club

R. M. Grumman, director of the extension division of the University, addressed the Woman's club of Raleigh last night.

In his talk Mr. Grumman pointed out that there are 241,603 illiterates in North Carolina according to the U. S. census of 1920. Of this number 104,000 are native whites. Mr. Grumman discussed the state problem in view of a survey being made in Wake county. The Raleigh Woman's club in cooperation with the other community and county civic organizations plan to make a survey of the situation in Wake county and to conduct a program of elementary education for the underprivileged adults in that county.

SEASON after season, college men register their preference for John Wards. By constantly increased purchases, they indicate their approval of the fine leathers, the correct lines and handsome workmanship that characterize these smart shoes.

Student Tea

The student tea at the Episcopal church parish house was one of the most successful of any held there during this quarter. Both large recreation rooms were filled with about 150 students, and everyone participated in the Thanksgiving program arranged by Mrs. John Anderson.

The Thanksgiving season was brought ont in the decorations, and in the music, all joining in singing the familiar "Harvest Home" songs. Refreshments with a "home taste" were served. Jack Wardlaw, Donald Wood, and Bill Carlisle rendered musical selections. The new football song by Wex Malone and Holmes Bryson was sung, and the afternoon social hour closed with the University song by the company.

Those assisting Mrs. Anderson as hostesses were: Mesdames Charles Woollen, Alfred Lawrence, W. M. Dey, and Irene Lee.

ESPERANTO CLUB TO HOLD MEETING

The Esperanto study group will meet today at 5 o'clock in Murphey hall. This meeting will be the last opportunity for late-comers to join, since the study of the language itself will begin with this session.

Dr. Metzenthin requests those who attend the meeting to bring a dollar for the grammar book. The work will not begin until the grammars arrive. They will be ordered when all those desiring them have paid for them. This will be the last opportunity for ordering the books.

JOINT SESSION DECLARES DAILY PAPER IS SOUND

Literary Societies Favor Issuance of Daily Tar Heel; Discussion Is Heated.

The Dialectic and Philanthropic literary societies in their joint quarterly session held in the Di hall last night passed by a large majority the following bill, Resolved: That the Dialectic senate and Philanthropic assembly in joint session go on record as believing the issuance of a daily paper at the University of North Carolina is basically sound and practical. The vote was 28 to 3.

The discussion was opened by Senator McPherson who supported the bill with the argument that such a paper was needed to keep the students well informed concerning campus affairs, and that the present financial difficulties of the publication would be offset in later years by increased national advertising. He argued that national advertisers will not increase space during the first year of a change in a college publication.

The first speaker to oppose the bill was Representative Lang who questioned the promises made by various leaders when the campaign for a Daily Tar Heel was being waged. He also stated that the financial standing was decidedly unfavorable, but Editor Glenn Holder corrected his information concerning finance. Holder stated that the paper would in all probability break even this year or incur a slight loss, and also stated that the first year was bound to present financial difficulty.

Representative Wilkinson aided Representative Lang in opposing the bill, by arguing that there was not sufficient campus news to fill a daily paper and that a lot of "bullshooting" was used to fill the columns. Representative Carr seemed to like the "bullshooting" if that was what was in the Daily Tar Heel.

The affirmative was further supported by Senators Shreve, Ramsay, Herkimer and Wright. The negative was supported by Representatives Lang and Wilkinson only.

BULL'S HEAD SHOP ATTRACTS LARGE NUMBER VISITORS

Students who are seldom seen in the vicinity of the Bull's Head shop have been presenting themselves at this rendezvous of tense-faced folk in surprising numbers of late. The attendant, and the quiet group usually found reading there, are frequently seen to raise their glances momentarily from their favorite book to scrutinize some anxious-eyed intruder who stumbles against chairs and fumbles over the shelves in search of—they know not what.

"No, I shall not inquire where the book is. I want to make the discovery myself," muses the evident stranger. His eyes play over the well-kept shelves. The evasiveness of the object of his interest causes him to become more intent in his search for the hidden treasure. All's Quiet on the Western Front and The Tragic Era are shamelessly ignored. The diminutive room is circled again by the questing student. Not a trace of despair is revealed in the determined face. Eyes of other readers restlessly survey the shelves: they, too, have joined in the search.

Finally the student pauses and withdraws from between Dumas the Incredible Marquis and The Omnibus of Crime the long-sought volume — Richard Halliburton's New Worlds to Conquer. Seated at the table environment vanishes, as, within the space of perhaps an hour the reader journeys with the prince of travelers to the alluring spots of an entire continent.

Pages are turned . . . the ticking of a watch becomes the voice of a far-away waterfall. The arrival of other students seems but a vague stirring of the prisoners in the blockhaus on Iles du Salut . . . and—the drama and tragedy roll on. The bell for lunch is sounded. Less enthusiastic readers hastily file from the room. The boy at the table, unobvious of intrusion, continues to sail the Southern Seas.

Another book by Halliburton has arrived. The word is passed from friend to friend and enthusiast to enthusiast. At present one may note such a process as described above occurring at most any period of the day. All become victims for an hour, charmed by the beauty of Popo, enchanted by the cry of the winds through the pinnacled Inca city, Manchu Picchu.

Officers Of Alumni Association

This evening the first meeting of the General Alumni Assembly will be held at the Graduate Club. At this meeting a discussion of "Student Mortality" will be held. Pictured above are the officers of the Association.

N. C. College Conference To Be In Greensboro December 10-11

Dr. Harry Chase Is President Of Group and Dr. N. W. Walker Is Secretary.

An event that will be of general interest among the educational circles of the state will take place next month with the annual meeting of the North Carolina College Conference, of which Dr. Harry W. Chase is president and Dr. N. W. Walker is secretary-treasurer.

Dr. Walker has recently announced the completion of plans for the conference, which is to be held at the King Cotton hotel in Greensboro December 10-11. As the members of the faculties of all North Carolina colleges are invited to attend and will be given privileges of the floor, several members of the University faculty will be present besides President Chase and Dean Walker. Dr. M. R. Trabue of the school of education will take part on the program, and Dr. T. J. Wilson, registrar of the University, will attend the meeting of the North Carolina registrars' association, which is to be held immediately after the adjournment of the conference.

The general purpose of the ninth annual meeting of the North Carolina College Conference is to discuss the common problems of collegiate education with a view to arriving at a common understanding and a possible solution of some of them. The general theme of the 1929 conference is to be "Our College Students and Their Preparation." The first division of this subject will be dealt with at the first session of the conference, the second division at the evening session, and some phases of the third division will be dealt with at the third and final session Wednesday morning.

Woollen Asks People Of Village To Leave Automobiles At Home

The people of Chapel Hill are requested to leave their cars at home when they attend the football game on Thursday. By doing this they will greatly facilitate the handling of traffic through the town and on the highways leading out. It will be recalled that a great deal of difficulty was experienced in clearing the streets of cars after the Georgia contest. The few hundred cars which the townspeople will necessarily be driving in an opposite direction to the general run of traffic make for unnecessary congestion. Co-operation in this effort will be appreciated.

CHARLES T. WOOLLEN
Graduate Manager.

THORNDIKE SAVILLE GOES TO MEETING AT GULFPORT

Professor Thorndike Saville of the school of engineering will attend a meeting of the American Shore Preservation Association at Gulfport, Miss., December 2 and 3, as the representative of the North Carolina Department of Conservation and Development and will deliver a paper describing the department's studies of beach erosion along the Carolina coast.

On December 4 Mr. Saville will attend a meeting of the U. S. Army Engineer Board on beach erosion to which he is consulting engineer. The board is meeting at Pensacola, Fla., to report on improvements to Pensacola harbor. It will also consider a report on a proposed large jetty at the entrance to New York harbor which it has had under investigation for some time.

VIRGINIA GAME PEP MEETING TO BE AT OLD PICK

Annual Rally Will Be At 9 O'clock Tonight; Boxing Show To Follow.

Music by the University band and speeches by coaches and football players of this and bygone years, are the features of the pep meeting to be held tonight at 9 o'clock in the old Pickwick theatre. For the benefit of the freshmen this theatre is the old movie house directly across the street from the Carolina theatre. In previous years these pep meetings were always held in Memorial hall, but due to the repair work being done on that building it is impossible to hold the meeting there this year.

Jack Barrett, chief cheerleader, will be in charge of the program, which will be concluded with songs and cheers for the Tar Heel team which will carry the Blue and White in the 34th renewal of the ancient Carolina-Virginia football rivalry. As many as possible are urged to attend, for the finishing touches will be put on the song written by Wex Malone and "Block" Bryson especially for the Virginia game.

Many alumni are expected to join with the students in this celebration, for the streets of Chapel Hill already show the effects of the influx of the old grads.

Following the pep meeting a big boxing show will be put on in the Tin Can. Seven bouts have been arranged by Coach Rowe, boxing mentor. All bouts will be between men on the squad, and as Coach Rowe has such mitmen to work with as Levinson, Jimmy Gray, Goodrich, Sheffield, Shemwell, Gray, Preston, Patterson, Overman, Glover, Stallings, Jackson, Kauffman, Smathers, Logan, Warren, Gaylord, Maybank and Avery to draw from, good bouts are expected.

Engineers Weekly Meeting Postponed

The meetings of the Mechanical Engineering Society and the William Cain student branch of the American Society of Civil Engineers, have been postponed from this Thursday evening until next week, and the meeting of the local student branch of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers has been postponed from December 5 to December 12.

These meeting are postponed because Thursday, when the societies usually meet, is an official University holiday, and very few students would attend a meeting held that evening.

Self-Help Notice

All persons desiring to have work done over the week-end will please notify Grady Leonard, self-help secretary of the Y, at once. There are many students who are unable to go to their homes Thanksgiving and would desire any kind of work, Mr. Leonard states.

BRADSHAW TELLS ABOUT HOLIDAY ABSENTEE RULE

Dean of Students Explains The Importance of Obeying Rule Against Cutting Classes Before And After Holidays.

In chapel Tuesday morning Dean F. F. Bradshaw explained the rule that students are placed on probation for 30 days for absence from classes on the day before or the day after holidays.

Since many have failed to understand this rule Dean Bradshaw explained its operation and the reason for it. A large number of absences are due to good roads and the recent institution of "bumming," the dean said. This is especially true of absences before and after holidays, when students wish to lengthen their stays away from the Hill. Dean Bradshaw said that the desire and opportunity of increasing the holidays by absences has caused a serious attendance problem. He pointed out the fact that it is necessary to set certain dates for recess periods and that all rather than merely a part of the student body must abide by the arrangement.

Dean Bradshaw said that the holidays were selected by a vote of the student body a few years ago. Hence the present body should be all the more willing to accept the dates that have been set. The dean of students urged the students not to ignore the rule but help meet the situation which has made it necessary.

Miss Herring Talks About Present Labor Situation At Y Meet

Three Y cabinets held a joint meeting Monday night at the Y at 7:15 for the purpose of hearing Miss Harriett E. Herring of the sociology department.

Miss Herring spoke to the group on the subject of the "Present Labor Situation." She began her talk by asking the question, "Why is there so much interest shown in the textile industry?" "One reason for this," states Miss Herring, "is that the textile industries employ whole families, whereas, other mills hire only men or women alone. Another reason," she continued, "is that the textile mill owners customarily furnish the homes in which their employees live. This helps a great deal in bettering the conditions of the workers."

In answer to the question as to whether the present labor condition was better or worse than the past she stated, "The mills of today are, without a doubt, much better in every way than those of former times." Miss Herring closed her talk by answering a few questions of cabinet members.

G. A. Metz, student pastor of the Lutheran church, ended the program with a word of prayer.

Chairman Burch of the Safety Committee announces that a second violation of the new traffic laws will incur a $50 fine. Anybody wanna buy a go—well, a Ford—cheap?

We gather from the press notices about the new football song called "Carolina Go" that it is a self-starter, not to mention a good chaser and an effective means of drowning out the sound of breaking glass and gurgling fluids. All of which should combine to make it a nifty for the game tomorrow.

The new small paper currency is "holding its own" and wearing well, according to W. S. Broughton, federal treasury commissioner in charge of currency distribution. Right you are, Mr. Broughton, especially as far as we are concerned. We certainly can't keep the new short green long enough to give it any wear.

Middle Class Unintelligence

One of the most amazing aspects of the economic transformation which the South is undergoing at present is the attitude of the middle class business and professional men toward the efforts of labor to improve its standards of living. Throughout the Gastonia, Marion and Elizabethton affairs the Rotarian brethren have been almost unanimously in sympathy with the capitalistic cause.

Recently a large mail order concern established a branch in Atlanta and announced that its regular wage scale would be observed in employing clerks. Immediately the Merchants Association set up a mighty wail that the new establishment was destroying the local labor market. If comparatively high wages were paid by the mail order concern, would not every merchant in the city be compelled to pay ruinous wages in order to prevent his clerks from securing employment at the new retail establishment? As a result the officials of the mail order house were induced to lower their wages to the prevailing scale.

When the Bamberg-Glanstoff corporation opened its mills at Elizabethton, a wage scale was adopted similar to that prevailing in Northern mills. Mill owners throughout North Carolina and Tennessee protested vehemently, declaring that high wages would prove ruinous to industry in the South. Even the Elizabethton business and professional men voiced emphatic disapproval of the high wages. The officials of the new mills saw the light, and the pitifully low wage scale prevalent in other Southern textile establishments was substituted for the original salaries.

In both instances the merchants and professional men argued that high wages for the laborers would be fatal to business and industry. They purblindly disregarded the fact that increased purchasing power for the workers, with the attendant improvement of living conditions, would result in a great acceleration of buying. Retail stores, industrial establishments—all branches of business activity would have benefitted had the wage earners been enabled to increase their purchasing power.

The Atlanta and Elizabethton cases are illustrative of the general attitude of the middle classes throughout the South—and this attitude is a serious indictment of the intellectual level of the middle class mind. Instead of silly prattle about communism and anarchy, charges of "insurrection and rebellion," support of the forces of capitalism in their stubborn determination to yield not a whit to the demands of organized labor for a decent living, the middle classes would do well to approach the new Southern industrial problem in a sane and constructive light.

This Question Of Religion

The very naive but utterly unconvincing letter published in The Tar Heel Sunday and signed "A Freshman" is illustrative of a fundamentalism which now seems almost an anachronism. Such epistles bring to mind those days in the early nineteenth century when religious pamphlets and periodicals were circulated containing touching moral stories of faith and divine love and righteousness and any number of other virtues. But in the modern world such fables and admonishments for purity are absurd; there is now no place for monastic seclusion of a fanatical sort, for the ascetic with the aspirations of Galahad, for the sternly dogmatic Puritan or the sober, sad-faced Quaker.

Religion is being infused more and more with common sense (in spite of the combative forces of the pulpit, some of the occupants of which seem to wish for the members of the congregation to remain in medieval ignorance and superstition). We have now lifted ourselves from the morbid fear of Hell; we have now ceased to draw such stringent lines between good and bad. No longer is there the terrible world of the fanatical Puritan's ruthless righteousness, nor the superstitious world of the priest-ruled clans in the day when The Cloth was symbolical of mental stagnation and intellectual barrenness. Instead, there is the modern world of sane religion and a spirit of tolerant understanding. Of course there are the absurd disputes between Fundamentalists and Modernists, between one Protestant denomination and another; there is the anachronistic fear of a Pope-controlled catholic civilization which seems to be still current among a certain class. Of course there is the big business church (what a group this comprises!), in which financial pillars of the congregation—and the town—are the leading voices, the controlling spirits. Religion will never be the idealistic dream one pictures in childhood. There are too many subjects for dissension, and back of all there is weak human nature, quarrelsome, trivial, petty, intolerant, unthinking.

But at least there is sanity and tolerance of a social sort; no persecution, no hypocritical ostracizing, no excommunicating. The world has finally reached that stage of wisdom and discretion where it minds its own business—in part, at least. No longer is an atheist a curse on a neighborhood; an "infidel" is not now subject for gossip and the wagging tongues of hidebound, prejudiced nincompoops. Slowly but surely the world seems to be creeping nearer the light of a tacitly accepted code of ethics, acknowledged to be right, with religion as a beautiful but rather doubtful ritual in the background. Ministers still exert an undeniably powerful influence, of course,—and rightly so in most cases; but under an intelligent survey the awful trappings and the mysteriously malign influences that have come down with Christianity from the middle ages have vanished. Our ideals, our codes, our sense of morality, our conceptions of sin even, have all undergone a change; there has circulated among our civilization a spirit of inquiry, removing much of the sham from religion and leaving its beauty, its austerity, its innate goodness.

And our souls have been the better for this glow of reason and common sense permeating them. Far from undermining the forces of morality this awakening has adapted religion to the modern world,—this age of civilization in which the people who of a previous age and generation would have been sober with a dull repression, fearful, wretchedly narrow and intolerant, now accept life candidly; they view existence as a joyous struggle and set about living under no illusions regarding monstrously elaborate sin or archaic sobriety of fanatical puritanism. Their attitude is neither pagan nor atheistic nor is their outlook that of the agnostic. Whereas religion was fed to the peoples of the previous centuries, arbitrarily, as a puzzle which they accepted with meek submission, unquestioning, the twentieth century forbears, consuming what is offered until it is examined in the light of reason and the doubtful, the trivial, the unnecessary, removed,—then the way is clear.

Even Yet There Are Honest Men

Dr. Horace Williams is in the habit of asserting before the chapel assembly once each year that there is not an honest man in the University, or rather his classes voted that there is not an honest man here. But of course the classes take Dr. Williams' definition of honesty in making their decision. In his opinion an honest man would not tell a lie even if the life of his own father depended upon it.

So fast are our ideas and conceptions of every virtue and attribute changing that any broad statement concerning any abstract quality has little real meaning. If there is not an honest man in the University today, then there was not an honest man here yesterday, for human nature is essentially the same always. According to someone else's standards, there may not be an honest man here, but by our own standards there are many.

One may define any characteristic in such a way that he eliminates all men from the possession of it, and then proceeds to bemoan the fate of the Moderns and to sigh for "the good old days when men were men." One cannot set up some standard to which no one conforms or can conform and still be human, and then expect any man to live up to it.

If there is not an honest man in the University, then surely, Dr. Williams, something is wrong with your definition of honesty. We are not poor benighted heathens; we may be proud sinners going our way to perdition, but by all modern human standards, there are still many honest men in our university; there are still sincere men, and loyal men, and profound men.

The College Honor System

ARTICLE II

Editor's Note: This series of articles on the Honor System is being printed simultaneously in all the college newspapers in the United States. A series of five short articles dealing with matters pertaining to the Honor System will follow. This release is being made by the committee on the Honor System for the National Student Federation of the United States of America, with a hope that the students of this country will give serious thought to the problem of student honesty in our colleges, and that they will send to the Fifth Annual Congress of the National Student Federation representatives who have well-thought-out ideas concerning this matter. The Fifth Congress will meet at Stanford University on January 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, 1930.

These articles were prepared by James Theodore Jackson, chairman of the committee on the Honor System. The writer would be glad to hear from students concerning this problem. Please address him at P. O. Box 958, University, Alabama.

The History of The Honor System

Four colleges claim the honor of having been the initiator of the Honor System. William and Mary College claims to have begun the use of the system in 1779. South Carolina College (now the University of South Carolina) claims to have begun the use of the Honor System at its founding in 1801. The University of Virginia claims to have initiated the system in 1842. Finally, Washington and Lee University puts forth claims to having been the originator of the Honor System, their claim dating back to the administration of General Lee as president.

It is impossible to say exactly which of these colleges is in fact the mother of the Honor System. Probably William and Mary College did have some kind of system under which the students were placed upon their honor, and under which an Honor System prevailed in spirit. Perhaps the honor of the students was appealed to at South Carolina College from the time of its inception. But the preponderance of the evidence seems to show that the University of Virginia was the first institution to make definite plans for an Honor System, to draw up an honor code, and to adopt a definite plan of legislation, control, and system of penalties.

Washington and Lee's claim dates back to the administration of General Lee, following the Civil War. Therefore, the University's claim antedates that of Washington and Lee by a score of years or more. However, Washington and Lee can indisputably lay claim to having the oldest complete student Honor System in the United States, for at that institution the Honor System embraces every phase of student life.

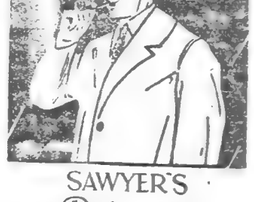
The Honor System originated in the South. It spread slowly at first, because it was a marked departure from the Old World idea of governing students: it was a pioneer step in the educational field, taken in a pioneer period of a new country—the United States—by pioneer spirits in the realm of education and progress. It is a significant fact that the system originated in this new democratic country.

After the Civil War the Honor System spread faster. Many other Southern colleges began to adopt the system, and many colleges in other sections of the United States began to recognize its values and to institute it. From 1860 to 1890 the number of colleges using the system increased greatly. From 1890 to 1910 the number increased still faster. In 1911 more colleges adopted the system than in any other year up to that time. From 1911 to the present there has been a steady increase in the number of colleges that have adopted the Honor System. At the present time approximately 39 per cent of the colleges and universities of the United States have it.

The system as we have it today is the product of a process of evolution. As conditions have changed, the mechanism and means of enforcing the Honor System have had to be changed in order that pace might be kept with progress. Today no two do or can have exactly the same Honor System on account of the varying conditions that are found in the different colleges.

The system, as it was inaugurated at the University of Virginia, came as a solution of the problem of handling the students. A laxness had grown up in the University with regard to student honesty. The Honor System was greatly needed. It evolved. It was the product of the long-visioned idealism and the formidable courage of Thomas Jefferson, who was chairman of the first Board of Visitors of the University. When differences between the faculty and students were referred to the Board, under the leadership of Jefferson that body usually was very lenient with the students.

In short, the system was able to be inaugurated at the University of Virginia on account of the arrangement of the buildings, Jefferson's ideals of school management, the existing social conditions in the South at that time, and the strong Christian character of the professors at the University during its early history.



Can there not be great worth in an institution that has existed in many excellent institutions for nearly a century?

CAVALIERS BRING FINE ASSORTMENT BACKS FOR GAME

Captain Sloan and Bill Thomas Are Outstanding On Virginia Team.

University, Va., Nov. 26.—(Special)—Virginia will take to Chapel Hill for the Thanksgiving day football game one of the finest assortments of backs that can be found in the south. Upon these men the chief hope of the Cavaliers will rest in the game with North Carolina.

Captain John Sloan is one of the most versatile backs who has ever worn the Orange and Blue. Last season he was practically a unanimous choice for All-South Atlantic quarterback, and but for an early injury this fall, he might have won All-Southern honors.

The loss of Captain Sloan in the same game that Hunter Motley, 210 pound tackle was sent to the hospital, weakened the Virginians greatly. If these two men had been in uniform all year, there might have been a different story recorded in several contests.

Sloan can carry the ball with the best of them, and he can pass and punt and drop-kick. He plays safety man on defense and is a sure and deadly tackler. He is also an experienced field general who knows how to keep the opposing defense guessing.

In spite of a weakened line through two seasons Captain Sloan has been shining in the Cavalier backfield. Those who have watched him in action do not doubt that he would have won a wide, even a national reputation, had he played upon one of the all-victorious elevens that has caught the eye of the public.

Bill Thomas, who is playing his first season with the Cavaliers, has come to be recognized as a great halfback, on offense and on defense. Thomas, like Captain Sloan, comes from Richmond.

Sloan has averaged something over five yards for each time he has taken the ball from scrimmage this season. The yardage of Thomas has been slightly less. This has not been lack of ability as much as the fact that the defensive players have come to watch Thomas closely and to keep him covered.

Thomas is the leading Cavalier scorer and ranks among the high point men in the state. While Sloan was injured he took over the punting, and he is keeping this up even with the captain back in the lineup. This pair together are counted upon by the Cavaliers to give considerable trouble to the Carolinians.

Bleachers Erected For Virginia Game

Faced with the possibility of a sell-out for the Carolina-Virginia game, Graduate Manager Charles T. Woollen yesterday ordered the construction of temporary stands just back of the west goal post in Kenan stadium.

Additional stands also will be placed at the east end of the field, but so as not to obstruct the view of the field house.

The new seats will take care of three thousand additional spectators. This means there should be plenty of seats for everybody, even the last minute customers, but indications are that those desiring reserved seats would do well to purchase before Thursday.

Three thousand of the reserved seats remained available last night. They are on sale here and in Greensboro, Winston-Salem, Durham and Raleigh.

Until long after the Revolution all the American colonies held slaves.

The stage was all set today for the 34th annual Thanksgiving Day gridiron classic between elevens representing the universities of North Carolina and Virginia, expected to draw a crowd of 30,000.

Pictured above is beautiful Kenan Stadium of the University of North Carolina, where the game is to be played. It was dedicated when Carolina and Virginia last met here two years ago.

Insets show Captain Johnny Sloan, Virginia quarterback, who ranks with the best field generals in the country and Captain Ray Farris, North Carolina's triple-threat guard, who is being boosted for All-American this year.

Team Shows Drive In Work Against Freshmen Yesterday

Coaches Give Players Surprise Scrimmage; Farris, Magner And Wyrick Do Not Work.

Faced with the possible loss of three of his best performers, Chuck Collins, Tar Heel mentor, did exactly what he had planned not to do yesterday and scrimmaged practically the whole Tar Heel squad on a mud-soaked field.

Captain Ray Farris was out of yesterday's work on account of tonsilitis. Pete Wyrick and Jim Magner, star backs, also were held out of the muddy battle. Both are just recovering from injuries, and it was thought best not to take further chances with them.

Three full elevens and several odd-number linemen worked against a couple of freshman clubs and showed concerted drive and power.

Nash, Ward and Spaulding were all running hard for frequent gains in the veteran backfield corps.

Jimmy Maus and Chuck Erickson, the boy who beat Virginia with his last-minute sprint last year, were doing likewise in another combine.

Henry House was driving the line with terrific force, which means perhaps that fans will see plenty of the star fullback Saturday. House is assuredly the hardest driver on the squad, but has been kept out of most of the games by injuries.

Haton McIver, scrappy 160-pounder, worked in Captain Farris' place at left guard yesterday, but otherwise the varsity line was intact, with Holt and Fenner, ends; Koenig and Adkins, tackles; Fysal, right guard, and Lipscomb, center.

Coach Collins would not predict definitely last night whether Farris, Wyrick and Magner would be used in the Virginia game. Farris should be okay, and the other two will be used if they are in shape, he said.

Game Postponed

The game between Beta Theta Pi and New Dorms for the campus championship which was scheduled for yesterday was not played due to wet grounds. It will be played this afternoon at four o'clock on the intra-mural field.

Tar Babies Meet N. C. State Frosh At Raleigh Today

Today the Carolina freshmen will play the N. C. State Wolflets at Raleigh in a preliminary to the Carolina-Virginia Thanksgiving day game. The game promises to be hard fought, as a Tar Baby win would do much to redeem their poor season's record and the Wolflets can clinch the state championship by a victory.

At present it seems that the crippled Carolina team will be in better shape than last Saturday, as Robinson, Jackson, Davis and Abrams, who have been on the injured list, will be in shape to play. It is still a question as to whether or not McDade, star tackle, will be able to play. His presence in the Carolina lineup will be a great asset to their chances for a victory. The team is still badly crippled by the loss of Thompson, star halfback, and Sickler, Henry, Redding, and Zovesus, all substitutes.

In spite of the fact that the Wolflets beat Duke 6-0 and the Blue Imps beat Carolina 8-7, the Tar Babies have a fairly good chance to win.

Oxford And Concord Clash Here Friday For Class B Title

Oxford and Concord high schools will clash here Friday afternoon in Kenan stadium for the state class B high school title.

There was a good deal of agitation to carry the game to other points, but E. R. Rankin, secretary of the state high school athletic association, announced definitely today that the game would be played here on Friday.

The class A titular game, originally scheduled for Saturday, has been postponed, due to a tie between Wilmington and Goldsboro for the eastern championship, but will probably be played December 6.

Oxford beat Ayden 34-0 for the eastern B title, and Concord won over Mount Airy 14-0 for the western B title.

Broad Street, Philadelphia, is the longest straight street in the U. S., being 14 miles long.

TAR HEELS AFTER SCORING RECORD

Will Have To Maintain 32 Point Average Over Duke and Virginia.

In their final two games of the season, the one with Virginia here tomorrow and the one with Duke in Durham December 7, the Tar Heels will be shooting at a new scoring record. To date the 1929 Tar Heels have averaged 32 points a game, which equals but does not better the previous record made in 1914 by Captain Dave Tayloe's team.

The 1929 Tar Heels are going to make a great effort to better that 1914 record, but to do so they must run up big scores against both Virginia and Duke. Whether they can do that only time will tell.

To date the Tar Heels are leading all Southern Conference brethren in scoring against Conference opposition.

The versatility of the Tar Heel attack seems to offer the best explanation of the high scoring tactics of this year's team. And in this connection there are some statistics that should prove extremely interesting.

Twenty-three of the touchdowns came from runs from scrimmage that range from a one-yard plunge by Jimmy Ward to the same Jimmy's 62-yard sprint at Davidson and Jimmy Magner's 63-yard dash at Maryland. The average on the touchdown sprints from scrimmage is slightly more than 16 yards.

Two more of the six-pointers have been the result of punt returns. Johnny Branch, sophomore quarter, wove his way through the roaring Tornado of Georgia Tech for 55 yards and the first, and Strud Nash did 60 yards through the whole N. C. State team for the other.

Only one has come via the blocked punt route, Herb Nelson, fast-moving reserve end, getting credit for that in the South Carolina battle.

The extra points have come mainly from the toe of Yank Spaulding, hefty fullback, who has credit for 10 placekicks. Carolina has gotten three by the offside route, and Branch, Magner, Harden and Fenner have added one apiece by devious ways.

CAROLINA LINE PLAYING GREAT

Was Big Question Mark At Beginning Of Season; Now Receiving Praise.

With gaps at six line positions to fill at the beginning of the season, Tar Heel supporters shook their heads gloomily. Now, with the season eight games gone and the Tar Heels leading all Southern Conference teams in scoring within the family, those misgivings are over.

Those same supporters face the Thanksgiving battle with Virginia with supreme confidence that this line can stop Virginia's backs, with all their 179-pound average, while at the same time opening great holes for Carolina gains.

The way this 1929-Carolina line has come through may not be a miracle, but it is a mighty fine tribute to the coaching of Chuck Collins, Bill Cerney, and Bob Fetzer, and to the players themselves.

First of all, there is Captain Ray Farris, a triple-threat guard, who was one of the hardest-hitting and scrappiest guards in the Conference once last year. Farris has been that and more this year.

Eskew and Hudson have both played good ball at the other guard position, and the rookie Fysal, who broke into the job late in the season, has proven a second Farris for drive and punch.

Ned Lipscomb's work at center also has been great. Lipscomb was just a sub to Schwartz last year, but with his 192 pounds and 74 inches of fight, and his great play on offense and defense, he has become just as great now as Schwartz in the eyes of Tar Heel supporters.

Bill Koenig and Fenton Adkins, who average 215 pounds, had just boken into regular berths as last season closed, and both have played stellar ball this year. Koenig made All-State last year. Adkins, after super-performances against Georgia Tech and other teams, seems a certain prospect this year.

Don Holt and Julian Fenner at ends played fairly regularly last year, but they have really come into their own this year. Weighing 180 pounds each, they have consistently featured on offense and defense. Holt was laid up for a short spell with influenza but since his return to shape has been doing exceptionally fine work.

Any number of rookies could be named who have come through. The best include Parsley, Nelson and Brown, ends; Dortch, Thompson and Harper, tackles; Crew and McIver, guards; Gilbreath, center.

(By J. C. Eagles)

Last week-end was one of inactivity for the majority of the Southern Conference elevens. Four games were scheduled for conference teams and only one of these was between two members of the conferences.

Florida's Alligators, national high scorers last fall, came out of the sunny southland to battle South Carolina on a wet field in very cold weather. After a few minutes of the first half the Gators got warmed up and proceeded to decisively defeat Laval's proteges. Led by Rainey Cawthon, outstanding candidate for all southern quarterback, the Florida eleven ran up twenty points while holding the Gamecocks to one touchdown. This victory enabled the Gators to move into a tie with the Tar Heels in the conference standings with five wins and one loss.

Clemson, after starting the season as a potential championship contender, fell back and lost three straight battles. However, Saturday saw her return to form to trounce the Citadel, one of the undefeated elevens of the S. I. A. A.

Duke maintained the winning stride set in the L. S. U. and N. C. State games by giving Wake Forest a 20 to 0 beating. The Devils were handicapped in their passing game by the wet field but they were more than recompensed for this handicap by Deacon fumbles which came as a result of the slippery ball. On two occasions fumbles were the means of Duke's touchdowns.

N. C. State engaged in the only intersectional game of the day. Villanova proved too strong for the Tebellmen and they bowed to the eastern eleven 24 to 6.

Canada exports more wood pulp and newsprint that any other country.

FRESHMAN CALMS CO-ED HYSTERIA

Appearance Of 'Winged Animal' Disturbs Peace Of Spencer Hall.

(By E. C. Daniel).

A lot of water has gone over the old mill wheel and still nobody has told this story, so here goes: Glorious was the calm of that Sabbath evening. Not a sound could be heard above the din of passing auto horns, the shuffle of hurrying feet, the slamming of innumerable doors, the static growl of the radio, the meaningless jargon of a hundred voices in discordant unison, and the majestic moan of the organ in the church next door.

Within the room, cozy in spite of its great size, several groups of sophisticated young people were seriously, but with exterior joviality, pairing off for an evening of indoor sports, or more likely hide-and-seek, in the arboretum. Every one who "belonged" was there, even the nervous freshman with his first "blind date."

Let your imagination work, and you may or may not believe that the "Co-ed Shack" at dating time on Sunday night has been described.

When the crowd had begun to disperse and the choice corner seats, left without lamps for a purpose, had been occupied, the jiu-jitsu artists got down to the business at hand and all was quiet on the Spencer front. But into the midst of the calm was hurled an unharmonic note.

Some diabolical soul had allowed a vile fowl, or was it a winged animal, to invade the domain of the fair. The stygian monster with no harmful intent created a scene of disorder, not at all complimentary to the reputation for ladylike conduct that the women students have managed to maintain this year. In ever increasing circles it flew, at every turn causing fear to cling to the frozen hearts of les petites filles. However, emaciated he-men stood bravely by, enjoying the occasional squeeze of a hand, the encircling protection of an arm, and the clinging vine attitude of their companions which the occasion demanded. For the moment they were all heroes in the most magnificent sense of the word.

And then some dumb—yes, it was later discovered that they were freshmen—persons spoiled the fun. Armed with pillows and other formidable weapons, they assailed the creature, which was of course a harmless bat about town. After many small-boy feints and blows they were rewarded to see their prey flutter to a softly cushioned chair where it lay down for a few moments before taking up the battle anew.

With wild whoops of victory the hunters stole upon the unsuspecting victim, taking her (but, no, we cannot believe that it might have been the mother of some innocent little ones waiting at home for her return from the night club) rather, taking him away into the night, where he wanted to be, of course.

Although some of the zoology studes were disappointed not to have viewed the creature in captivity, the whole affair was quite entertaining, as long as it lasted. But then, of course, the evening had other attractions for most of us, and her name was Mary.

English Professor Sends Freshmen On Information Hunt

During the past week a new form of "Ask Me Another" has been played in the environs of the reference room at the library. Here, peaceful readers were quite taken aback by a wild tornado of freshmen, who swooped down upon the card catalogue in a search for the Widow of Nain and scoured the encyclopediae in an effort to learn such facts as when the walls of Cartaghene de las Indes were finished.

As a matter of fact, the freshmen had not completely lost their heads. J. W. Posey had sent his students in English 1 on a wild paper chase. The purpose was to familiarize the student with the methods of doing research work at the library.

Several times a fight seemed to be on the verge of breaking out between members of different teams which had been organized for the purpose of working together. One freshman produced first hand evidence that John Wesley was superstitious. Another became disgusted, stating that the library was entirely too large, and proceeded to show more first hand evidence to the effect that Wesley was not superstitious.

When the last freshman left the reference room Friday afternoon, a strange state of quietness and general inertia came into the air, such as the library had not seen for a week.

Hollett Makes Trip

A. R. Hollett, coordinator of cooperative work in the school of engineering, made a five-day trip last week visiting organizations which are using cooperative students from Carolina in their work.

Mr. Hollett left Chapel Hill Tuesday and visited several companies in Danville, Greensboro and Charlotte, returning to Chapel Hill Sunday. While in Charlotte he made arrangements whereby two new organizations will take students into their shops.

The Armature Winding Company and the Charlotte Electric and Repair Company, both of which rewind and repair electric motors, each agreed to use one electrical engineering student from the University.

Mr. Hollett visited in addition to the firms already mentioned, the Southern Railway at Danville, at Greensboro, and at Charlotte, the Duke Power Company at Charlotte, and the City of Charlotte.

HICKERSON'S BOOK AIDS IN DESIGN OF HIGHWAY

Professor T. F. Hickerson, a member of the school of engineering faculty, has received a letter from the engineer on the Mount Vernon memorial highway stating that the spirals in Mr. Hickerson's book on highway curves and earth work have been used in designing the curves of this highway from Washington to Mount Vernon, which is to be the most perfectly designed highway ever built.

The book from which these spirals were taken is "A Handbook on Highway Curves and Earthwork" written by Professor Hickerson, which was published by McGraw-Hill Book Company in 1925.

At The Carolina

In "Untamed," the new Joan Crawford Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer all-talking picture which comes to the Carolina theatre for two midnight shows tonight, Director Jack Conway has taken into full consideration all of the vivid personal characteristics of the star.

The story starts in the jungles of Central America where Bingo Dowling has grown up without a mother and with no curb to her impulses.

Bennoch, a degraded white man, played by John Miljan, grabs her in the middle of a street dance and shows his interest in the growing girl.

Later he quarrels with Bingo's father about her, and stabs him.

Ben Murchison (Ernest Torrence) and Pressly (Holmes Herbert) take the girl in charge.

En route north with Ben Murchison, Bingo falls violently in love with Andy McAllister (Robert Montgomery), the first young white man she has ever seen.

McAllister fights for a year against his love for this girl whose oil leases make her so very wealthy, but finally tells her of his love.

They are surprised during the avowal by Gregg, who is very interested in Bingo, and Marge, equally in love with Andy.

Gregg challenges Andy to a fight and they have it out in the middle of the ballroom floor.

Andy's situation grows more unpleasant as Murchison starts talk at the club against "men who would marry for money" and who "can only make money by gambling."

Murchison, scheming to get rid of Andy, slyly tells Bingo that he will get Andy's consent to marry her immediately.

In turn he offers Andy a check for $50,000. He takes it and storms out, saying he wouldn't marry Bingo if it was the last thing he did. Murchison thinks his scheme has worked.

Jack Conway, director of "Our Modern Maidens," assembled a very competent cast for this production. Besides those mentioned Gwen Lee plays "Marge" and other roles are taken by Grace Cunard, Don Terry, Eddie Nugent, Tom O'Brien and Jessie Le Seur.

Willard Mack, the eminent playwright, wrote the adaptation from C. E. Scoggins' story.

New York Papers Praise Playmakers Performance

Three One-Act Plays Well Received by Audience at McMillan Theatre.

TELEGRAM LAUDS THEM

Says Spirit of Carolina Backwoods Was Splendidly Brought to Stage.

The Playmakers made a big hit with New York theatre-goers who watched their performance last Saturday night at the McMillan Academic theatre. All the New York critics praised them. The New York Telegram had the following to say about their showing:

"The spirit of the Carolina backwoods was brought to the stage of the McMillan Academic theatre Saturday night when the Playmakers of the North Carolina produced three of their sixty one-act plays. It's a spirit that mirrors primitiveness, stupidity and stubbornness, a spirit that is strong and weak at the same time, a spirit that craves in no uncertain manner, but merely craves the indefiniteness of the word 'change.'

"Bringing their scenery, their luggage, themselves, and their Southern drawl in a bus all the way from Chapel Hill, the Playmakers attempt to project honesty, not greatness. And their attempt is met with success because of sincerity and energy instead of histrionic ability. Regarding themselves primarily as thinkers and playwrights rather than as actors, their accent stress is always upon the idea behind the play.

"Selecting 'The No 'Count Boy' by Paul Green; 'Black Water' by Loretto Carroll Bailey, and 'Magnolia's Man' by Gertrude Wilson Coffin, as the program, many sides of the famed spirit were exemplified. In 'The No 'Count Boy' there is the day-dreaming propensity of the youthful Negro strikingly contrasted with the emptiness of his material elders. In 'Black Water' there is a longing to get-away-from-it-all fighting against the drabness of the strikes and commonplace marriages. In 'Magnolia's Man' there is pictured the dearth of romance for a romantic maid.

Each character presented has reasons to be unhappy, has reasons to be inwardly fighting, and it's pretty much the general odds of life they fight against. But in the careless backwoods there is little or nothing to think of, so obsessions are easily formed. Altogether, the Carolina backwoods must be a dismal and substantially depressing environment.

"The Playmakers, living and going to school around those people, have evolved American folk plays that are unique and distinctive. They have strength and character, and with the inevitable growth of the imagination of the playwrights, a folk play that might be comparable to the greatest of our modern plays, the Irish, may some day be the result of this ambitious and worthy group."

VIRGINIA LEADING IN TENNIS CONTEST

Virginia was leading in the doubles and had taken four out of six of the singles yesterday afternoon when the tennis meet was postponed until 10 o'clock today on account of darkness. In the number one singes, Smith (V) won from Yeomans (C) in straight sets, 6-0, 7-5. Smith was national junior doubles champion with Eddie Jacobs in 1927, and in disposing of Yeomans showed his old-time form. Other singles matches went as follows: Merrit (C) defeated Martin (V) 6-4, 6-2; Freddis Johns (C) won from Hendall (C) 6-3, 6-2; Norman Bryan (C) won over Noell 6-3, 6-4; Newell (V) defeated Palmore (C) 6-4, 2-6, 6-4; Hugh Whitehead (V) won from Henry Baggs (C) 8-6, 6-3.

In the doubles Johns-Smith (V) were leading Merritt-Yeomans 6-3, 5-5 when the match was postponed by darkness; Newell-Martin (V) were leading Bryan-Kentall 6-3, 3-1; and Whitehead-Noell (V) were leading Palmore-Baggs 7-5, 4-4. The last match was thrown out because of the inability of some of the players to be here for the play-off today. The other doubles matches will be played off at 10 o'clock.

BERTRAND RUSSELL HERE DECEMBER 3

Bertrand Russell, philosopher, essayist, publicist, will speak in the Tin Can Tuesday, December 3, at 8:30 p. m. His subject will be "Need Moderns Be Cynical."

Mr. Russell is well known as a lecturer. He was formerly special professor of philosophy at Harvard, and is now on the regular lecturing staff of the British Institute of Philosophical Studies. He has recently been invited to deliver a special course of lectures—the Tarner lectures—at Trinity college.

He speaks here under the auspices of the student entertainment committee.

Tar Heel Picks All-Time University Football Team

(By Crawford MacKethan)

This article may be considered in the form of an answer to a challenge handed out to me a month ago by Mr. Charlie Woollen, graduate manager of athletics, as we sat chatting about the great athletes of the University of North Carolina. However, the job of selecting an All-Time University football team is one that from habit falls upon someone about every ten years; therefore, since such a length of time has almost elapsed the Daily Tar Heel offers to the student body and the alumni the 1929 All-Time selection.

The following results were obtained from a collection of data sent in by a number of alumni whom we believe have watched football as it was played during their college generation and the following generations. The men who have assisted us in selecting this team are as follows: George Stephens, Roy Abernethy, "Runt" Lowe, Stephen Bragaw, "Pete" Murphy, Edwin Gregory, Bill Blount, "Nemo" Coleman, Dave Tayloe, Dr. Lawson, Dr. Mangum, and Dr. Verne Howell. Of this number Dr. Lawson and Dr. Mangum were invaluable in offering their opinions upon the men as they have seen them since they began following the team "away back yonder."

The style of play has changed greatly in the last ten or twenty years and the selection this year will undoubtedly give evidence to the fact that we were attempting to choose men whom we believe could have by natural ability played the game under any style and especially that of today.

A number of great centers have been nominated; "Yank" Tandy, '16, stands out among this number because of his versatility. He was more than a triple threat; he would and did kick placements and dropkicks from the forty yard line. He was a passer and could run with the ball. "Tandy and Ramsay were the best men physically I ever examined," says Dr. Lawson. Tandy gets a place at the pivot position on our first team. Bill Blount, '20, '21, '22, gets our second vote. He was brainy, and was one of the Carolina centers to be used as a roving pivot. Although frail, he was a fighter both on defense and offense. Harry Schwartz, "Mink" Cunningham, Herman McIver, Pete Murphy, Steward, and Council all in their day stood out as powerful centers.

As guards two men have been chosen who represent two entirely different ages and styles of football: "Bear" Collier, '94, '95, 96, and Ray Farris, '27, '28 and '29. Dr. Lawson makes the following statement: "I have experienced real joy following the play of a number of guards and Carolina has had her share of good ones, but there is one that we all know, his play is flawless, his leadership fine. I

Carolina Plays Virginia Today On Kenan Field; Teams In Good Shape

34th Game Between Old Rivals Expected to Draw Largest Crowd in History of Rivalry.

GAME CALLED 2 O'CLOCK

Virginians Will Have Full Strength in Contest; Wyrick Magner and Farris Ready.

(by Will Yarborough)

Before probably the largest crowd ever to witness a football game in North Carolina the football teams of the Universities of North Carolia and Virginia will clash this afternoon at 2 o'clock in Kenan Stadium for the thirty-fourth time.

Tradition dating back to the introduction of football in the South and hopes of Tar Heel supporters for a smashing victory over the Cavaliers causes this game to be the climax of the Carolina schedule for North Carolinians. Memories of long years with repeated victories for Virginians and the sting of overwhelming defeats administered the Tar Heels by the Cavaliers have whetted the appetites of Carolina followers for a victory.

Coach Chuck Collins has developed the most powerful team ever produced at Chapel Hill. With the greatest assortment of backs in the South and a line which yields little to any, Carolina has amassed a 32-point average score for the eight games played this season. Only three teams have held the Tar Heels below thirty points—Georgia Tech, Georgia, and Davidson. Wake Forest, Maryland, V. P. I., State, and South Carolina fell before the rush of scoring.

Virginia has suffered defeat only twice this fall, V. P. I. and V. M. I. turning back the Cavaliers 32-12 and 20-7 respectively. Two tie games, however, with Maryland and Washington and Lee prevent an otherwise good season. With the coming of Coach Abell a new coaching system was installed. This coupled with repeated injuries to stars has made the road rough for the Virginians. But today marks the last appearance of the 1929 Cavalier eleven. As with North Carolinians the Thanksgiving contest marks the climax of the season with Virginians. One supreme effort is made to topple the Tar Heels before the players turn in their uniforms.

Starting line-ups for the teams will find two powerful lines and speedy backfields opposing each other. The average weights of the teams are about the same. Coach Abell plans to start Turner and Byrd on the flanks, Day and Williams at the tackles, DeButts and Lankford at guard, and Taylor at center with Captain Sloan, Kaminer, Thomas and Faulconer in the backfield. Opposing these will be Fenner and Holt, ends, Koenig and Adkins, tackles, Farris and Fysal, guards, and Lipscomb, center with Branch, Nash, Ward and Spaulding in the backfield.

The backfields indicate air attacks. Captain Sloan is one of

The Twentieth Century Thanksgiving

While Thanksgiving day itself has lost its original meaning for the American people, it is still an important holiday, with all the pleasing atmosphere that surrounds a general day of loafing and enjoyment. Football is regarded as a necessary part of any real observance of Thanksgiving day by the American public—and therein is a sure indication of how the original purpose of the holiday has been distorted; not that anyone is necessarily any the worse for it.

The modern is inclined to make life as enjoyable for himself and others as he can. For such an attitude there is every justification. Perhaps the twentieth century method of observing Thanksgiving is just as satisfactory, just as commendable as that in which the Pilgrim rendered his appreciation of his rather sparse blessing over 200 years ago, after all. At least the modern Thanksgiving is far more enjoyable.

The Duke-Carolina Feud

For the past few years a rapidly increasing animosity has been evident between the Duke and Carolina student bodies, seemingly without reason. College students, especially those who attend large universities, have a peculiar proclivity for regarding neighboring institutions of higher learning with ill-concealed contempt; perhaps this fact explains in part the ill feeling between the student bodies of North Carolina's two universities.

Members of the athletic teams here frequently state that the Duke athletes are splendid fellows, but in the same breath they speak of the school itself in the most derisive of terms. This fall the Daily Tar Heel has printed more than one scornful reference to Duke; indeed, Duke-baiting has been one of the favorite pastimes of the staff, especially the sports columnists. All for no apparent reason, except that writers experience an unholy sort of glee in defaming the Durham institution. Personally we have enjoyed making cracks at the expense of Duke as much as any one else, but we have been convinced of the error of our ways. Last week-end at the North Carolina Collegiate Press Association convention we entered into a Kellogg peace pact with the editor and managing editor of the Duke Chronicle. The first Tar Heel typewriter pounder that makes a nasty crack about Duke is going to be absolutely out of luck, if you'll take our word for it; those Dukesters are too darn nice a bunch to be cussed by a lousy crew of college news hounds.

The general attitude here seems to be that the Duke students are capital fellows individually, but so-and-sos as a group. Such an attitude is very obviously highly fallacious. Numerous Carolina men regard Duke as snobbish; on the other hand, many Duke students regard Carolina as exhibiting the ultimate of superciliousness. In other words, each student body believes that the other regards itself as vastly superior. Nothing could be more absurd. A logical consideration will convince anyone that there is no real basis for enmity between Duke and Carolina men.

Readers' Opinions

IS THIS FAIR PLAY?

For a period of 136 years, the University of North Carolina has existed at Chapel Hill; for a period of 136 years, it has brought trade and prosperity to this town. Heretofore, both town and school have profited by a mutual friendship; however, there seem to be those (who have profited most by this friendship) who wish by unfair methods to further their own interests by an ordinance suppressing energetic "student salesmen." The ordinance in question is the one prohibiting students (who are referred to as strangers) from selling programs and sundry other things on town property.

There are several hundred students at the University who must earn all, or at least a part, of their expenses. Many thanks to the Athletic Department which offers to the students many opportunities to make money on the days when we have football games. One of the ways by which the self-help student earns money for both himself and the Athletic Department is by selling programs and other articles. If this privilege is curtailed by an unappreciative town, both town and students suffer. The old maxim, "Turn about is fair play," might well be applied in this instance. The students are ready to do their part.

The law itself seems to me a rather unfair proposition. It looks as if it were a law made for the benefit and profit of the Chapel Hill merchants. If this be the case, it should be revoked. There are few people who prefer to purchase a program from a store rather than assist a self-help student by the purchase. The law has the aspect of a thrust for a few loose nickels rather than a protection against those "undesirables." In what way will the suppression of these undesirables profit a tailoring company? Yet, we find their signature among those in favor of this ordinance. The "unsufferable manners" referred to that were indulged in by these salesmen, I suppose, caused the tailoring company, for the moral uplift of the community, to approve of an ordinance to banish these so-called "strangers" from the streets of Chapel Hill.

The new ordinance can be of little benefit to anyone, but it will cause much friction between the students and the town. This ill feeling will hurt both school and town; therefore, I ask, why not come to a saner view and make a just ordinance to both student and town?

A STUDENT.

There is consolation in the thought that if Congress spends all its time in investigations there will be no chance to pass any more laws.—Florence (Ala.) Herald.

30,000 People Expected Here For Game

HIGHWAY PATROL HERE TO DIRECT TRAFFIC TODAY

Three Athletic Fields to Be Used For Parking Space; New Roads in Use.

The University village is all set for the invasion of what is expected to be a record football crowd for this state.

Some 30,000 fans are expected.

Preparations have been perfected to handle the big crowd without congestion, and, if the plays are carried out, everybody will be able to get in and out of Chapel Hill with little or no delay.

Captain Charles D. Farmer and his deputies of the state highway patrol will be in charge of traffic, which fact alone gives assurance that things will move along smoothly and orderly. Captain Farmer's men will be assisted by squads of police from nearby towns and by the local police force under Chief Lloyd.

Three athletic fields have been set aside for parking space, and townspeople have been asked to keep their cars at home so as to provide more parking space along the streets for the visitors.

The Carolina-Virginia game of 1927 drew an attendance of 26,000, yet so well were the automobiles routed and directed that the town was cleared of all traffic in less than an hour.

Those in charge of arrangements profited by experience that year, and with a number of new parking spaces opened up, the two big new arteries developed to bring in and take away the crowds, an even better handling of traffic is expected this year.

The new highways are expected to prove an especially big factor.

Fans coming from the east now by way of Raleigh won't have to pass through Durham, but can turn off at Nelson, take the new macadamized road that intersects the Raleigh-Durham highway at that point.

This not only reduces the distance from Raleigh to Chapel Hill from 38 to 28 miles, but also brings the eastern traffic in over two roads instead of one.

There is a new short cut also to divide the traffic from Greensboro and points west, and reduce the distance from Greensboro to Chapel Hill from 60 to 45 miles.

The new highway is by way of Burlington and Graham, the short cut intersecting route No. 10 at Graham. This road places Chapel Hill within 150 miles of Charlotte by the northern route, as well as the southern route, and reduces the distance proportionately from these points west.

FROSH HARRIERS BREAK EVEN IN SEASON'S MEETS

Carolina's freshman cross country team this year broke even in a schedule of four meets. In the early part of the season the frosh harriers were beaten by the V. P. I. freshmen by the score of 26-30. In the meet with the N. C. State freshmen, the Tar Babies were victors by a score of 29-37. The Duke frosh succumbed to the superior running of the Carolina freshmen by a score of 23-33. In the state championship meet held here last Saturday as a preliminary to the Southern Conference meet, the Duke yearlings did the unexpected when they defeated the Tar Babies and the N. C. State freshmen. The scores for this meet were: Duke 27, Carolina 35, and State 67.

Yank Spaulding

"Yank" Spaulding has been the most consistent fullback for the Tar Heels all season. Because of his ability on defense and at receiving passes he has been recognized as one of the finest backs in the state.

Ticket Notice

All student tickets on the South side of the stadium will admit through Gate 5 and all on the North side through Gate 3 only.

(By J. C. Eagles)

Naturally the game this afternoon between the Tar Heels and Virginia holds the chief interest for fans in this section. In addition to this feature southern football offers quite a few other games of major interest. Georgia meets Alabama. Tennessee battles Kentucky. Duke and Davidson fight it out and Tulane engages L. S. U.

Attempts to predict the results of football games are always precarious affairs. Today's slate offers more close games than usual but we make the attempt anyhow.

Considering Carolina and Virginia first we find that from a comparison of season's records the Tar Heels have the edge. Since this is a generally conceded idea we will dismiss with any further discussion of the battle scheduled for this afternoon in Kenan stadium.

Now the Georgia-Alabama clash brings together two of the south's most outstanding elevens. Neither boasts a perfect record, but each has registered victories over exceptionally powerful teams and each has been a consistent winner all fall. While the Bulldogs are noted chiefly for their defense the Crimson Tide relies chiefly on a driving offensive. Each club has a well-rounded combination. Interesting will be the fight between Rothstein of Georgia and Holm of Alabama for the fullback position on the mythical all-southern eleven. On their showing today depends each star's chance for the honor. Taking everything into consideration, we predict that Alabama will come out in front, though by no large margin.

CROSS COUNTRY TEAM COMPLETES EXCELLENT YEAR

Coach Ransom's Runners Win Fourth Consecutive Southern Conference Title; One Defeat.

The shades of Carolina's bygone harriers, Henderson, Fisher, and Elliott seemingly inspired the 1929 Tar Heels to a victory over ten other Southern Conference teams last Saturday afternoon, giving the University its fourth consecutive championship title in this sport. A biting wind, sleet, and muddy course were not sufficient to daunt the spirit of the local hill-and-dalers. Named as underdogs in this meet, because of a previous defeat by the V. P. I. team, the Tar Heels retained their title by a decisive margin, and defeated the "cream of the South."

The 1929 cross country team did not have as smooth-going a course as might be supposed. It had a goodly share of hard luck, with illness eliminating some of the safest bets at the crucial moment. First it was Lowry, who was unable to participate in the N. C. State and Duke meets because of an abscessed tooth. Then Creighton Wrenn, a three year letterman, was taken ill with mumps and was unable to run in the Duke and Southern Conference meets. Finally, Howard Simpson, one of the best reserves, was also eliminated by the mumps.

Notwithstanding, the Tar Heel harriers, under the able tutelage of Coach Dale Ranson, last Saturday completed a successful season with three victories and one defeat. This defeat was early in the season. Miles and Palmer, V. P. I.'s stellar runners, finished ahead of Barkley, Baucom and Lowry in this meet. The final score was 27-33.

In the Carolina-N. C. State meet, a crowd of 10,000 in attendance at the gridiron contest between the two schools watched Barkley, Baucom, Phoenix, Pierce, and Wrenn, cross the finishing line hand-in-hand to beat the State harriers with the lowest score possible in a cross country meet. The score for this meet was 15-45.

The ancient rivalry between Carolina and Duke manifested itself in the grim determination of the Tar Heels to avenge the defeat administered by the Blue Devils last year. This run was hard fought from start to finish, but the Tar Heels achieved their aim, and Duke was defeated decisively by a score of 21-39. Captain Barkley, Baucom, and Phoenix were the leading Carolina men in this run.

the best passers in the South. Against Washington and Lee he tossed passes all over the field. Faulconer, fullback, also passes while Thomas, sophomore star, and Kaminer give the Cavaliers a dangerous combination in the air. Passes gave the Tar Heels trouble last fall and Sloan will make constant use of them this afternoon. Carolina has relied on passes all season to score. All the Tar Heel backs toss and catch them. The ends catch them. Ward will do most of the tossing for the starting backfield, but Spaulding is used often for this purpose.

But it is Carolina's reserve strength which has enabled the Tar Heels to pile up impressive wins. Magner, Maus, Jackson, Erickson, Wyrick, House, Slusser and Harden give Coach Collins a fine array of backs to inject into the game. In the line all positions are fortified. Gilbreath, Eskew, Hudson, Thompson, Dortch, Harper, Parsley, Brown and Nelson are ready to step into the line positions.

Coach Abell has his squad in the best of condition and will be able to use a full quota of substitutes. Gravatt, Moncure, Orrick, Ivey, Peyton, Bryant, Paxton, Dunn, Fuller and Lewy furnish the bulk of the reserves.

With the largest pre-game sale of tickets on record indications are that the record crowd which witnessed the dedication game two years ago will be surpassed. Additional bleachers have been erected to accommodate three thousand more people.

Mr. and Mrs. Corydon Lyons announce the arrival of a daughter, Mary Elizabeth, on Thursday, November 22.

OLD TEAM MATES OPPONENTS TODAY

Virginia Prep Schools Furnish Many Players for Cavaliers and Tar Heels.

When Virginia and Carolina meet this afternoon several old acquaintances and rivalries of the gridiron will be renewed. Former teammates will meet as rivals and former rivals will play under the same flag.

Episcopal High school has given Gravatt, Moncure, Orrick, Faulconer, Taylor, Lankford, Bryant and Day to the Virginia squad. This afternoon they will meet, as a rival instead of as a teammate Gavin Dortch, Carolina tackle. Dortch is a former Episcopal High captain.

Three Virginia players and four Carolina players played together at Woodberry Forest. Meeting today as rivals will be Bill Ivey, John Wylly and John Peyton of Virginia, and Strud Nash, George Thompson, Tom Alexander and Julian Fenner of Carolina.

The Woodberry and Episcopal High football teams meet every year. As there are players from both schools on each team, today's game will see the renewal of rivalries formed in prep school days. "Rip" Slusser, Carolina halfback, starred at Augusta Military Academy. He can be counted on to do his share of carrying on these rivalries.

Especially hard fought and interesting should be the battle between the two centers. Before going to Episcopal High, George Taylor played center at Greensboro high school. He has made the grade at Virginia and is one of the best centers in the Old Dominion. Facing him today will be Ned Iipscomb, also a former Greensboro center, who has settled the fears of those who mourned the loss of Harry Schwartz. Since both have developed into good college players, it's a sure thing that neither of the two is going to yield to the other without a hard fight. The struggle for supremacy between Taylor and Lipscomb should prove to be one of the game's most interesting features.

Even in the days when Virginia won the annual classic regularly all games between these two institutions were hard fought. In modern times the game has come to be regarded as one whose result is never settled until the final whistle. This year, added to the traditional spirited fight between the two teams, there will be this renewal of rivalries. Every player is anxious to settle any question of supremacy, the answer to which may have been left in doubt, in today's game.

This added zest, due to the personal contacts between the members of both squads, will do much to make this game one of the most colorful in the history of the classic series.

think his major work was in '28. I would place our own Ray Farris at left guard and I think his mate on the other side is just as good, and I name 'Bear' Collier my other guard position." The opinion of the majority of the votes concurs with his. On the second team we have placed Louis Guion of '94, and Grady Pritchard '20, '21, '22. Poindexter, Robbins, Cronartie, Gardner and Bennett are all prominent names in a review of the history of this position here at the University.

In choosing our flankmen we have had more than a difficult time. Our research has dated back as far as the famous Gibbs and Biggs combination of 1892 and the following is our answer to this problem. Four men of the number of nominees stand out more or less in a class to themselves: Edwin Gregory, Roy Homewood, "Slip" Brown and "Suey" Cochran. Homewood and Brown have been given our vote for the first team, and Gregory and Cochran have been placed on the second team. Both Homewood and Brown were large in size; they were fast and shifty on their feet and terrific tacklers. Both excelled in covering punts. Gregory, '95, '96, '98, has been chosen as captain of the second mythical team. Nat Townsend, Albert Cox, Odell Sapp, Casey Morris, Bob Winston, and Willy Merritt were mentioned.

One great tackle stands out above all the others that have worn the blue and white, Graham Ramsay, '13, '14, '15, '16. Tommy Campbell of Harvard once said that Ramsay was the greatest tackle that he had ever seen on the gridiron. He was a smart football player, holding his position just long enough to protect his kicker, and then often beating the ends down the field and making the tackle; no end and halfback could box Ramsay. On the other side of the line we have chosen "Romy" Story. On the second team we have signed up Beemas Harrell, '19, '20 and Pierce Matthews. George Robinson of '24 and '25 deserve honorable mention.

For the quarterback position the competition has been particularly keen. Four great quarterbacks stand out pre-eminently for recognition: "Runt" Lowe, '16, '21, Jacocks, '03, Louis Graves, '00, '01, '02, and Monk McDonald, '22, '23. Because he could do all the things the others could do, and could also do some things which they couldn't do, "Runt" Lowe has been chosen as quarterback and captain of our 1929 selection. On the second team we have placed Monk McDonald. Foy Roberson, '04, '05, deserves honorable mention.

A fast stepping group of halfbacks have been nominated: "Red" Johnson," George Stephens, Hunter Carpenter, Herman Koehler, Jim Magner, Strud Nash, Dave Tayloe, Vernon Howell and Emmett Underwood have all been brilliant in their own way. However, we have chosen "Red" Johnson for one of the halves, chiefly because of his great offensive driving power; the other half goes to Hunter Carpenter. On the second team we have placed Jim Magner and George Stephens.

The fullback position belongs without a doubt to Roy Abernethy of 1905, the greatest line-plunger and defensive man that has ever gone out from the University. Bill Folger of 1916, because of his great open field running, gets our vote for the second team. "Pot" Graves of 1898, '99, '00, '01 entered West Point after leaving Carolina and his record there rivals that of Roy Abernethy. Earl Holt, '00, and Arthur Belden, '96, '97, both receive honorable mention.

Annual Thanksgiving Dances Attract Many Visitors Here

Gimghoul and German Club Figures Feature Week-End Affair; Decorations Unusual.

A brilliant affair of Saturday night brought to a close the annual fall dances given by the German club. Nearly two hundred students attended, while representatives of the feminine element were present from practically every section of the state.

The dances were held in Swain hall which was attractively decorated in a color scheme of red and black to give the appearance of an enormous tent. The orchestra box and chaperone booths were arranged as smaller tents.

Two figures were presented. The first of these was held Friday night for members of the Order of the Gimghouls, a junior social order. Fleming Wiley of Durham was leader of this with Miss Jane Rogers of Little Rock, Ark. The figure Saturday night was for all members of the German club and was led by Bert Haywood of Durham with Miss Dorothy Harper of Wilson.

The sophomore dance was held Friday afternoon with John Gillespie as leader and Peter Gilchrist and Henry Stultz as assistants.

Excellent music was furnished by Jack Crawford and his orchestra of thirteen pieces.

House parties were given in connection with the Terpsichorean festivities by two fraternities, the Zeta Psis and the Pi Kappa Phis.

Magazine Deadline

The last issue of The Carolina Magazine until after Christmas will be published this Sunday. The editor requests that all copy for this issue be turned in by tonight at six o'clock. Contributions should be sent to box 710 or brought to John Mebane at the Sigma Delta house. All book reviews are to be turned in by this deadline.

SOPHOMORES HEAR CHARACTER TALK

In chapel yesterday morning Professor Horace Williams continued a discussion of a subject begun two weeks ago in a talk on ethics. Professor Williams' remarks to the sophomores yesterday concerned chiefly stability of character.

In the course of his speech Professor Williams took issue with the editorial writer of the Daily Tar Heel who sometime ago ventured to disagree with his definition of an honest man. He pointed out that the writer had declared certain phases of human nature to be unchanging while men's understanding of principles and ideals was asserted to be in a state of progressiveness. Professor Williams believes that human nature is less certain and less unchanging than principles.

Professor Williams pressed upon his hearers the importance of rigidity of character and of tenacious adherence to the right. For the rewards of the strong character, Professor Williams pointed to the joys of the man who in spite of difficulty has told the truth or overcome temptation. Rather than easy, however, Professor Williams maintains that the task of being honest and upright is extremely difficult.

COMMUNITY CLUB ISSUES PROGRAM

In the December bulletin issued by the Chapel Hill Community Club the programs for the following month have been announced.

The art department has planned its first meeting for Wednesday, Dec. 4 at two o'clock, at which time the Sketch Club will meet at Rosemary lane. In case of bad weather the members will gather at the home of Mrs. W. E. Caldwell to sketch from a model. On Wednesday, Dec. 11, 7:30 o'clock at 412 Rosemary Lane, Miss Katherine Batts will read a paper on "George Inness and the Hudson River School of American Landscape Painters." The program of December 16 will be announced later.

The Garden Club will not hold a meeting this month. The Health Department program will be held at the home of Mrs. Otto Stuhlman on Friday, Dec. 13. The Home Department meeting will be announced in the Chapel Hill Weekly.

The Literary Department has planned its second meeting of the month, to be held Dec. 17, at 7:30 o'clock in the social rooms of the Methodist Church. Miss Nora Beust will discuss the Children's Library and the season's best books for children.

The Music Club will hold its program Wednesday, Dec. 11 at 3:30 o'clock in room 9 of the Music Building.

ALUMNI LOYALTY FUND DRIVE TO COMMENCE HERE

R. B. House, Louis Graves, And Carl Durham Compose Committee Seeking Contributions In Chapel Hill.

An appeal is being made this week to University alumni residing in Chapel Hill to subscribe to the Alumni Loyalty Fund, according to an announcement made yesterday by Felix A. Grisette, director of the fund. The campaign among Chapel Hill alumni is being handled by a committee consisting of R. B. House, Louis Graves and Carl Durham.

According to the committee, it is imperative that Chapel Hill alumni respond unanimously if they are to expect a complete response from the great body of alumni who live farther away. In a letter mailed to every alumnus yesterday, the committee states that people from all parts of the state have been asking about the response which Chapel Hill people are making.

It was pointed out in the letter that if Chapel Hill people will participate in the fund that such an action will constitute a challenge to other alumni throughout the state which can not be ignored.

An interesting feature of the appeal which is being made among Chapel Hill alumni is the fact that the committee is urging a full participation as being of much greater importance than the amounts of the gifts. "Regardless of the amount you subscribe or the terms of its payment, we want your participa-

BALLOTS MAILED TO ALUMNI FOR OFFICIAL VOTE

Annual Election To Be Completed by December 15; To Select President and Vice-Presidents.

Ballots for alumni officers for 1930 will be sent out today from the central alumni office. The nominations which are to go to members of the general alumni association for balloting were made by the alumni assembly, which met here last Wednesday and Thursday.

Candidates for president for 1930 are W. T. Shore, '05, of Charlotte, present holder of that office, and Fred L. Carr, '95, of Wilson, who is at present first vice-president.

Candidates for vice-presidents, two of whom will be elected, are: Dr. J. F. Patterson, '04, of New Bern; Judge J. G. Adams, '06, of Asheville; Dr. C. O'H. Laughinghouse, '92, of Raleigh; and Lawrence S. Holt, '04, of Burlington and Asheville.

Dr. Foy Roberson, '06, of Durham, was the only candidate nominated for the place of alumni representative on the athletic council, and his election is assured.

New directors of the alumni association elected at the meeting of the alumni Thursday are: T. C. Taylor, '21, Raleigh; R. Grady Rankin, '10, Gastonia; Roy Abernethy, '06, Hickory; Fred I. Sutton, '08, Kinston; and Bowman Gray, Jr., '29, Chapel Hill.

The balloting on the officers will be completed December 28, according to Maryon Saunders, alumni secretary.

Playmakers Return From Record Northern Tour

The Carolina Playmakers returned Sunday from their northern tour, which Hubert Heffner, assistant director of the group, characterized as "one of the most successful, if not the most successful, from the standpoint of opening up new territory and making bookings for next year."

In an interview, Mr. Heffner said, "We had a lot of hard luck, but it was a great tour, nevertheless." In New York, on the return trip from Boston, the Playmaker bus, which has received comment in various press reports, featured in a collision which resulted in considerable damage to it. This accident caused a delay in New York, and necessitated traveling in busses which were both uncomfortable and poorly equipped for carrying a company of players.

The accident occurred at the corner of Lenox avenue and 110th street. The Playmaker bus was struck broadside by a machine driven at a rapid rate of speed, and occupied by two men, both intoxicated.

"I thought that it had killed most of us," Mr. Heffner stated.

A checking up of the injuries showed, however, that no one was seriously hurt, although two or three members of the company had been shaken up.

The chief result of the accident was the favorable impression that Mr. Heffner got of the New York police. "Those police are certainly gentlemen," he said.

To meet their schedule the company was forced to ride all night in an unheated bus. After several days spent in various busses, the Playmakers reached Farmville, Va., where they were scheduled to put on a bill of three one-act plays.

The regular Playmaker bus carries all the scenery, but on the trip to Farmville the scenery was carried in a hired truck. It was due to arrive at 7:30. The show was scheduled for 8:30. At 9 o'clock the scenery had not arrived. The directors explained the situation to the audience, and offered either to return their money, or go on with the performance without scenery. The audience voted to give the plays.

Paul Green's negro comedy "The No 'Count Boy" was the first play on the bill. At the conclusion of a performance, which the directors characterized as one of the best presentations of that play by the Playmakers, the audience was again consulted. They enthusiastically voted to continue the program. Just then the scenery arrived in charge of two drunken negro drivers.

While the scenery was being set up for the second play, Holmes Bryson and Muriel Wolff were sent on the stage to sing mountain ballads and tell mountain stories. For 40 minutes the audience howled. The program was resumed with even greater success, according to Mr. Heffner, although the entire cast was nearly exhausted from the time spent in uncomfortable busses. The performance end-

Noted Philosopher To Speak Here Tonight In Swain Hall

Bertrand Russell To Lecture Under Auspices Of Student Entertainment Committee On "Need Moderns Be Cynical?"

(By Edward French)

Bertrand Russell, well-known among philosophers of today, will speak in Swain hall tonight at 8:30, under the auspices of the student entertainment committee. His subject will be "Need Moderns Be Cynical?"

Before the war Bertrand Russell was known to the intellectual group as a great symbolic logician and hereditary heir to an earldom. Since the war he has become known to far wider circles as the foremost of the liberals and one of the most clear thinking of England's philosophers. Few families in England have taken a more conspicuous share in public affairs than the Russells, and under stress of war this ancestral claim asserted its sway over the philosopher.

As Wesley C. Michell pointed out, "Above all, Bertrand Russell possesses extraordinary courage. He has the moral intensity of a martyr, the intellectual confidence of a great logician, and the calm assurance of an English aristocrat." The experiences with human nature in its least tolerant mood, which were thrust upon him during the war as one of an insignificant and most unpopular minority, merely confirmed his faith in his own version of truth. His successive books show no decline in his powers but reveal a steady advance in the scope of his social knowledge. Few men today possess so rare an ability to think clearly upon either sociological or scientific problems—and to present so clearly and intelligibly the most abstract conceptions. His recent book, "The Analysis of Matter" (one of the most abstract subjects), has been hailed everywhere as a model of clarity. His articles on the political, social and economic affairs of China and the Orient helped modify the official attitude of the governments of the world toward China.

Dr. Archibald Henderson, who is a personal friend of Mr. Russell, said of the Englishman in a recent interview, "Bertrand Russell comes of a very distinguished family and is equally as distinguished in his own right. His ancestor, Lord John Russell, was an illustrious statesman of his own time, and his descendant is now holder of an hereditary title. He has long been associated with Cambridge University and was also a professor of philosophy at Harvard for a while. Russell is besides a philosopher a publicist, a great mathematician, especially along the lines of refined modern analysis. He is a disciple of the Italian school of Peano and Pasch, and in addition to being a noteworthy worker in mathematical research, he is able to present his problems in a popular and understandable style.

"In recent years Bertrand Russell has become widely known for two things, his place as one of the leading living philosophers, which has resulted in a new school of philosophy, and his place as an international publicist, especially in his fondness for remote subjects such as the government of China or Bolshevism. Although an educator primarily interested in

Entertainment Lecture Tonight

Students and others expecting to hear Bertrand Russell tonight are asked to note that the lecture will be given in Swain hall instead of in the Tin Can. A few season tickets for the remainder of the student entertainments are on sale at Dean Hibbard's office, South Building, at reduced prices.

Tar Heel Topics

The Greensboro Daily News handed us a much-appreciated bouquet yesterday for our editorial last week on the Duke-Carolina unpleasantness. Which makes us absolutely positive that the Duke students are a darn fine bunch.

A vast amount of publicity has been given in the state press to reports of wholesale drinking at the game here Thanksgiving day, but local bootleggers report that business was "powerful po'" in Chapel Hill immediately before and throughout the holidays. Vindicated, be gosh!

Evidently the contractor for the Sigma Nu house went the infamous gold brickers of past generations one better. Smoke issuing from the rear of the fireplace Sunday night brought the fire department in a hurry. When the partition was torn out it was discovered that the contractor had used wooden bricks in constructing the rear portion of the fireplace.

Bertrand Russell
In A Hash House

Tonight Swain hall, official University hash emporium, will perform a function that it has never before known during its decades of faithful service. Bertrand Russell, famous philosopher and essayist, will speak under the auspices of the student entertainment committee; his subject will be "Need Moderns Be Cynical?"

The rather disastrous presentation of the Jean Gros Marionettes in the Tin Can November 21 effectually eliminated the huge structure as a University auditorium, especially for lectures and similar events. In desperation the entertainment committee instituted a frenzied search for a place to present the remaining numbers on the program for this year, and Swain hall was finally selected as the only auditorium, if such it may be termed, possessing the requisite seating capacity and acoustical qualities.

Obie Harmon and his force must perform arduous labor in preparation for the lecture—the Swain hall tables must be removed and seats installed. Much praise is due Mr. Harmon and Charles Woollen for the manner in which they have cooperated with the entertainment committee officials in their efforts to escape from the dilemma confronting them after Memorial hall was condemned.

Most of the students and townspeople have realized the predicament faced by sponsors of entertainments and similar public events here in the absence of anything approaching a University auditorium. While the majority have adopted a very sensible attitude toward the situation, a few malcontents have voiced thoughtless and entirely unfounded criticism of those in charge of the entertainments. A little reasoning would convince these men of the absurdity of their criticisms.

Admittedly the entire situation is very much of a muddle, but the blame can be legitimately attached to no one, unless it be the architects of Memorial hall. They have reposed under the sod for lo! these many years, however; hence they cannot be held to account very satisfactorily. At any rate, the spectacle of Bertrand Russell delivering a lecture on "Need Moderns Be Cynical" in a dining hall will be quite remarkable. It is to be hoped that the members of the University building committee witnessed the Marionette performance in the Tin Can and will hear Mr. Russell speak in Swain hall. If so, they will probably be brought to the realization that the absence of an auditorium here is a serious indictment of the University and of the state.

Joint Session
An Encouragement

The Dialectic Senate and the Philanthropic Assembly in their recent joint session gave the staff of the Daily Tar Heel the signal to go ahead when they declared by an almost unanimous vote that the issuance of the daily publication is basically sound and practical. The discussion from start to finish showed that student opinion approves the work done thus far by the editor and his staff.

In the course of the debate members of both societies cited defects which have characterized the paper thus far, but they contended almost without exception that these were due to the fact that the issuance of a daily student paper at the University has not yet passed beyond the embryonic stage. The majority of the speakers were of the opinion that the daily publication represents a marked improvement over the old tri-weekly. Members of both societies contended that the high quality of the Daily was remarkable when considered in connection with the fact that its issuance began a scant three months ago.

Although the combined memberships of the Dialectic and the Philanthropic Assembly make up an almost negligible part of the student body in so far as numbers are concerned, they are representative. There is no risk in prophesying, therefore, that the support accorded the Daily Tar Heel by the vote of the joint session Tuesday night was representative of the opinion of the entire student body.

Several Senators and Representatives called attention to the fact that thirty-two leading colleges and universities of the United States issue daily papers, and have been doing so for a number of years. They developed from this the very logical contention that the University of North Carolina should continue to issue a daily paper, since she occupies a position of prominence in the category of so-called leading element. This attitude of profound interest in the advancement of the University is a great encouragement not only to the staff of the paper, but to all others who have the cause of a "Greater Carolina" at heart.

Football,
The Big Show

What the editorial writer on the Chicago Tribune staff said recently about American institutions of higher learning and the show business cannot be doubted. Practically all colleges and universities have invested, within the last few years, enormous sums of money in stadiums which can be used for nothing other than football games and in coaching and business staffs and equipment. Such investments have not been made merely to accommodate students; they have been made for the benefit of the public as well. And in order to pay for these gigantic arenas American schools have had to go into the show business on a grand scale.

Those institutions which are not involved in indebtedness, their stadiums having been donated, are none the less in the show game. They have had to maintain their prestige in athletics and to be progressive; therefore schools in this class have become entertainment promoters. And we revert here to the Tribune's editorial comment and say: Well, what of it?

At any rate, just as the California Tournament of Roses is rapidly replacing Barnum and Bailey-Ringling Brothers as the greatest show on earth, the Virginia-Carolina game is becoming, if it is not already so, North Carolina's great show. Whether the chief attraction of the event is the game itself or the fights in the stands or the clowning of drunks or the attendant dances, certainly the public approves the collegiate entertainment and no doubt the number of patrons will continue to increase. In view of the fact that football is here to stay and that it must remain the great sport for a good many years, we heartily advocate bigger and better shows in Kenan Stadium.

Readers' Opinions

THE CHILDISH CAROLINA-DUKE RIVALRY

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I thoroughly approve of your editorial in Thursday's issue relative to the childish rivalry that has grown up between Carolina and Duke student bodies. Some years ago I, as an interested Carolina alumnus, approached an official of Trinity College (now Duke University) on the question as to why Trinity and Carolina should not play each other in major sports. His reply was that the two institutions were too close together, that the history of such contests proved that closely neighboring schools could not play on a plane of generous rivalry, but that the game would degenerate into an orgy of petty spite and ungentlemanly boorishness. My reply to that suggestion was that I believed the two student bodies could meet in athletic contests and still practice the amenities. I remember asking him this question: "If young college men can not meet in a mere athletic contest and remain friends, how can any one expect uneducated men to deal with each other in the serious business relations of life?" I would still like to have the answer to that question.

I hold no brief for Duke, and I yield to no man in my love for the University of North Carolina; but at the game next Saturday I expect to sit with a friend of mine who is an alumnus of Duke, and I have no doubt time seeing the game—whichever side may win. Let the two student bodies adopt saner methods of showing their college spirit, before some southern savant shall deem it his duty to remark that they—rather than a group of western insurgents—are the genuine "sons of wild jackasses."

IN DEFENSE OF "I" DORM

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

(Note: "J. O." of a recent Tar Heel shall be referred to as "Joe" throughout this article.)

Joe of "I" Dormitory spoke rather recklessly of his almost impossible situation of a recent issue of the Tar Heel—in fact, he raised such a river of tears that we fear he is himself after some mercy or pity record. "I" is not after any record. For the benefit of those who did not read little Joe's innocent plea and for those who enjoy soothing words from the wise, we quote some of Joe's sophomoric outbursts that may be well included in the Annual Record of the Banalities of Criticism:

"Objectionable manners without a thought to the convenience of others," "consideration of other men," "deaf ear to polite demands," "some sort of authority to curb their actions," and "misplaced number of men."

Knowing that a person's ego is usually tickled when he is quoted, we hope that Joe does not in any way feel himself a bit inflated. And, since, now we must start our defense of "I" we find it first necessary to tear down some of the many illusions that our unofficial observer has so seriously considered.

If there "reigns a deathlike stillness" in "J" compared to the conditions now existing in "I" then a statistician would surely starve tabulating the number of people who have moved out of "I." We, in all sincerity, hope that Joe does not accept the position, since we would rather see him live so that we may have cultured ballyhoo ad libitum.

No "misplaced number of men" could do all that Joe honors them with unless they were blessed with a highly artistic

The College Honor System

ARTICLE III.

Editor's Note: This series of articles on the Honor System is being printed simultaneously in all the college newspapers in the United States. A series of five short articles dealing with matters pertaining to the Honor System will follow. This release is being made by the committee on the Honor System for the National Student Federation of the United States of America, with a hope that the students of this country will give serious thought to the problem of student honesty in our colleges, and that they will send to the Fifth Annual Congress of the National Student Federation representatives who have well-thought-out ideas concerning this matter. The Fifth Congress will meet at Stanford University on January 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, 1930.

These articles were prepared by James Theodore Jackson, chairman of the committee on the Honor System. The writer would be glad to hear from students concerning this problem. Please address him at P. O. Box 958, University, Alabama.

The Present Status of the Honor System

Eighteen months ago the present chairman of the Committee on the Honor System for the N. S. F. A. gathered extensive information concerning the prevalence of the Honor System in American colleges and universities. The information gathered then is believed to be valuable; conditions have not changed materially since that time.

In reply to a general questionnaire containing questions pertinent to the Honor System, 417 colleges sent information. 160, or 39 per cent, of these colleges operate under some kind of Honor System. In 129 of them it is used wholly; in 31 of them it is used only partially. Of these 31, 21 use it only in certain select advance classes, seven employ it in certain departments only, while three have the system in handling matters that do not pertain to examinations (e. g. the handling of library books).

On the other hand, 251, or 61 per cent of the colleges replying do not have the Honor System. They operate under the faculty espionage or the protector system, whereby the students are closely watched while they take their examinations, whereby no trust is placed in them, and whereby the shrewder man wins, be he the student or be he the instructor.

This survey shows that there are now 10 per cent more colleges using the Honor System than were shown by a similar survey to be using it in 1912. In that year 66 per cent of the colleges using the system were colleges for men, 17 per cent were colleges for women, and 17 per cent of them were coeducational. In 1928, 15 per cent of those using it were for men, 35 per cent were for women, and 50 per cent were coeducational.

Of the 160 colleges using the system, 61, or 39 per cent, are colleges whose student bodies range from 500 to 1500 in number; 54, or 35 per cent have an enrollment of from 200 to 500; 18, or 11 per cent, have an enrollment of less than 200; 13, or 8 per cent, have an enrollment ranging from 1500 to 3000; and 10, or 5.5 per cent, of the colleges using the Honor System have 3000 students or more. Of the 160 Honor System colleges, 41 per cent are situated in the South, 36 per cent of them are situated in the Northeast, 15 are in the North Central section, and 8 per cent are in the Western part of the United States.

Of all the colleges in the South that replied, 60 per cent use the Honor System. 36 per cent of all colleges in the Northeastern group that replied use the system. 23 per cent of the colleges of the North Central group use it, while 38 per cent of the colleges of the Western group that sent information have the Honor System.

In several universities of the United States the Honor System works especially well in the Law School. Are students of law any more honorable than any other class of professional students or undergraduates? Do professional ethics tend to cause a man who would cheat and defraud in the School of Arts and Sciences, to terminate abruptly such practices upon entering a professional school?

One university has the Honor System only in its School of Speech; another has it in its School of Business Administration; another has it in its School of Veterinary; another has it in its School of Engineering; while still another university has the Honor System in its School of Architecture.

What influence does the size of the institution have upon the success or failure of the Honor System? What influence does the location of a college or university in a city or a village have upon the Honor System? Are women more honorable than men? Are students in one section of the country any more honorable than those in other sections?

This statistical information and these questions are given with a hope that students will study them, seriously think about them, and form some definite conclusions about the Honor System as an educational institution. In what ways does this system give a student more benefits than the faculty espionage system confers?

Merely Meandering

Quoting from the Paragraphics of the Duke Chronicle: "Have it your own way, but we hold that there are three gentlemen from Carolina, viz., the Holder-Mebane-Edson combination." Which statement we heartily endorse.

Apologies.

May we say: Have it your own way, but we hold that there are three gentlemen from Duke, viz., the Lippard-Crona-Shaw combination.

Now, if someone else will compliment us, we shall be delighted to return that, too.

The N. C. C. W. Carolinian has been very unladylike once or twice this year. You should have seen the slams they tossed to Carolina and Duke. The feminine sex can get away with anything. But they ought to be ashamed at some of those things. Because N. C. C. W. is a very nice school and turns out lots of school-teachers.

And school-teachers shouldn't be turned out. Because they are a nice class. God bless them. This near exams.

Below we give quite gratuitously a list of phrases which might go rather well in your "saccharine daily." These are reprinted with permission of various recipients.

"Love is a marvelous intoxication . . ."

"I've found that love isn't exactly like I've imagined it to be—it's great!"

"If you ever plan to rudely shatter my air castles, do it now before they're too towering and real to me."

"When you wrote 'I love you,' you wrote three words in living flame that I will keep after all others are forgotten."

"I'll tell you a little secret: I was crazy about you from the first time I saw you. Honest."

"Those pictures should be finished . . ."

"When miracles occur and I have a decent picture taken, I'll send you one."

"The radio is marvelous tonight, not one bit of static. Right now I'm listening to the warmest and bluest number entitled 'True Blue Love'."

"Tonight I decided that I would believe that you loved me: and, gee, the very thought just thrills me!"

"It doesn't matter how many girls you write, just as long as you love only me."

"Why does time pass so quickly? I begrudge every moment of it. How I wish I could see more of you."

"Personally, I think that being in love with someone is wonderful; it gives you something pleasant to think about, dream about, and wonder about."

P. S. Darn it, Glenn, I told you I shouldn't have written that letter today—I used up all my puns.

With the close of the 1929 football season only a few days off, the Daily Tar Heel is offering the annual chance to the students to pick their all-state team. The majority of students, of course, have seen only the games played at Chapel Hill, and there is still the Duke game to look forward to, but they should have formed an opinion of the relative playing ability of the players from other schools in the state.

The Daily Tar Heel requests that all students interested in picking this all-state team fill out the form below and send it in at the earliest possible time to the Sports Editor of the Daily Tar Heel. Those players polling the majority of votes will be placed on the first team, while the runners-up will be put on the second. The results of this balloting will be published as soon as possible.

TEAM WINS 41-7 OVER VIRGINIA; DUKE SATURDAY

With Cavalier Contest Behind Coaches Now Working For Last Game With Blue Devils In Durham.

Behind a line which yielded little, Carolina's great array of backs ran rough-shod over Virginia in the annual Thanksgiving day game here Thursday 41-7 before a crowd estimated at 30,000. The six touchdowns represented the largest score ever run up against a Cavalier team in the 34 years of rivalry.

Carolina scored in every possible manner—end runs, inside tackle plays and passes. Virginia's lone score came when Captain John Sloan, one of the south's most brilliant backs, took a Carolina kick-off and raced 92 yards down the side lines for a score.

But this happened after Carolina had already scored 21 points, and it gave the Carolina partisans hardly more than a momentary fright.

Before the game had been going on three minutes Ward had circled Virginia's left end for a touchdown. About five minutes later Nash, catching a pass from Ward on the enemy's 10-yard line, made the second score. Again in the first quarter Ward ran 50 yards for a touchdown. It was immediately after this that Sloan made his 90-yard run.

The first quarter ended with the score of 21 to 7. Maus's 49-yard run added a touchdown in the second. This was the only time that the extra point was not scored, and at the intermission Carolina led 27 to 7. Nash ran for a touchdown on the first play in the second half; and Branch, taking a pass from Ward, crossed the goal line in the final quarter.

Carolina came close to scoring two or three more times. Once a pass was knocked down by Sloan behind the Virginia goal line, and once a Carolina back fumbled when another score seemed almost certain.

The Virginians made a serious threat in the third quarter after a fumble had given them the ball on Carolina's 27-yard line. A forward pass, Sloan to Paxton, netted a 10-yard gain, and then Falconer went through tackle for 10 yards. The ball was now only 7 yards from Carolina's goal line. Sloan lost 5 on an attempt around his left end. Falconer lost 1 yard on the next play, and then Branch intercepted a pass and made one of the most spectacular dashes of the day. He got by all but one Virginia man, but that one brought him down near midfield.

The stars of the game were Sloan, Faulconer and Goldenberg for Virginia, and Ward, Nash, Captain Farris, Lipscomb, Spaulding and Branch for Caroliina"

TRACKMEN FACE TOUGH SCHEDULE

Penn State and Princeton Added To Card; Nims Is Captain.

What is probably the best track schedule in many years has been arranged for the 1930 season, according to local athletic officials. The schedule, in order, includes meets with Davidson, Georgia Tech, Tech Relays, Penn State, V. P. I., State Championship, Princeton and the Southern Conference meet. Meets with N. C. State and Duke are also being considered.

The meets with Princeton and Penn State at Chapel Hill stand out as most worthy of notice. The Nittany Lions and the Princeton Tigers have long held the reputation of being the leaders of the Eastern colleges in track. Their teams contain many famous names in the track world. The Southern Conference meet at Birmingham will be close, as Louisiana State has won the championship for three successive years, and will, no doubt, present a strong team this year.

Coaches Fetzer and Ranson, varsity mentors, have a formidable array of athletes, with many lettermen back this year. Among these are Captain Nims, Gay, Smith, Garrett, Barkley, Baucom, Perry, Dameron, Adkins, Neiman, and Bagby.

There are also a large number of last year's reserves and outstanding freshmen back this year. Among these are Farmer, Slusser, Chase, Weil, Brown, Lowry, Phoenix, Cohen, Pierce, Farris, McAllister, Remson, Reid, Arnold, Dry, Reeves, and Mebane.

Miss Dora Coats, who teaches at East Carolina Teachers College was the guest during Thanksgiving holidays of Mr. and Mrs. A. K. King.

HALFBACK OUT OF DUKE GAME

Magner Not To Play Saturday On Account Of Old Leg Injury; Maus Likely To Get Call.

Definite word came from the coaches yesterday that Jim Magner, ace of the Tar Heel halfbacks, will not be able to play against Duke on Saturday.

Trainer Quinlan had hoped to have the big boy in shape for Virginia, but an old leg injury persisted. Magner didn't run against the Cavaliers and word came today that unless unexpected improvement came, Magner wouldn't be able to run against Duke.

The blow was a tough one. Before injuries laid him out, Magner had averaged 7 1-2 yards a try with the ball, and it was his fine work principally that gave the Tar Heels the honor of giving Georgia Tech its first Southern Conference licking in three yearrs.

The coaches had counted on the big boy's driving and passing against Duke, for the coaches are disregarding season records entirely and thinking that, despite all, Duke will be one of the toughest foes on the Tar Heel card.

Three backfields are being groomed according to the usual custom, and chances now seem that Jimmy Maus, stellar passer and a good runner as well, will slip into Magner's old post.

Pete Wyrick, veteran quarter, is doped to be back in shape to general the veteran backfield of Ward and Nash, halves, and Spaulding, fullback.

That will probably mean that Johnny Branch, star sophomore, will slip back with his old club, with Slusser at right half, and House at fullback, and Maus slipping in at Magner's post at left half.

The third combine being groomed for Duke shows Phil Jackson, quarter; Chuck Erickson, right half; Pap Harden, fullback; with the left half post to be decided between a number of rookies the most promising of which are Houston and Redfern.

The recent Phi assembly tryout preliminary to the Mary D. Wright debate resulted in the selection of Harris and Stanton as speakers. This team will meet the Di's team of Williams and Shreve in the annual intersociety debate, which will be held in Gerrard hall on the night of December 10.

The query to be debated is: "Resolved, That the Smoot-Hawley bill now pending before the special session of the 71st congress should be passed as introduced." The Phi will be represented on the affirmative side of the issue; the representatives of the Di will uphold the negative.

Winning the war against weather

In the telephone business, research man, manufacturing engineer and construction supervisor are carrying on a successful war against the unruly elements, enemies to service.

Cable, for example, housing many circuits and covered with protective coatings of proved strength, withstands storms which might seriously threaten open wire lines.

Thus in the Bell System growth is intensive as well as extensive, improving present facilities as well as adding new ones. And there is no end to all this development.

Students Show Much Interest in Sports

Much more interest has been evinced in intramural athletics thus far this year than heretofore. The three divisions of the intramural program already disposed of — the novice track meet, cake race, and tag football—are regarded as having been unusually successful viewed from the standpoint of the number of students induced to participate.

The department has conducted the tag football games with more system this year than heretofore. Results of games have been turned in to the office at a given time; two men have officiated at each game instead of one; fewer games have been forfeited or postponed; a closer check has been kept on the intramural credit received for participating in the events.

In the cake race precaution was taken for the first time against possible ill effects from participating in the run without having practiced to get in condition. Medals were given for the first time to the first ten finishing. Numbers were used for the competitors for the first time, which arrangement served at least to prevent a few ingenious cake eaters from running out from behind the tin can to join the crowd at the last minute and finish in the money.

In the novice track meet ribbons were given to the first three to finish in each event.

D. B. Waugh of Pelham, N. Y., won individual honors in the novice track meet. Tom Watkins of Jackson, Miss., won first place in the cake race. Beta Theta Pi won the fraternity championship in tag football; New Dorms won the dormitory championship.

Basketball is the next item on the intramural program.

UNIVERSITY MEN ATTEND MEETING

Dean N. W. Walker of the school of education and Dr. T. J. Wilson, Jr., registrar, are attending, as representatives of the University, the meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, which is being held in Lexington, Ky. The meeting, which assembled yesterday, will be continued throughout this week, and Dr. Walker, who left Sunday morning, will not be back in his office until Friday or Saturday.

This association, of which Dr. Walker was president in 1927, sets up certain standards and requirements that must be maintained by colleges and high schools of the south seeking admission into membership. At the sessions of the association, questions concerning admission to college for students, scholastic standards for high schools, rules and regulations in the field of college athletics, and other matters of a similar nature are discussed, and necessary regulations are formed by voting.

Joe thinks he is worse off than anybody in the whole school; perhaps, he is—is it our fault or the school's fault? Joe can not say that deaf ears are "continually turned to his polite demands"; if he does, then we are forced to declare that he has not learned the art or even secret of making polite demands. In a person whose education has not been neglected, a weakness like this is almost inexplainable. Again, Joe can not say, without blushing, that he is the only gentleman in the dorm any more than he can say that he is the only one who does not "bespeak the lack of the right kind of training." What Joe can say, however, is that he is about the only one being disturbed; and, instead of making himself heard, he should retire with calm reluctance to the hills of Virginia—a hermit so that he may count the commas used by Zane Grey.

Playmakers Return From Record Tour

ed at 12 o'clock, and the company, which has appeared in Farmville four times, was told that this was the best show they had ever put on there.

Almost everywhere they appeared the Playmakers were received by packed houses, and were given urgent invitations to return. In Boston, where they played for the first time, the house manager of the Fine Arts theatre stated that according to his watch the audience applauded for seven minutes. The performance the second night was received with equal favor.

Jasper Deeter, who is one of the foremost directors in the country, and the director of Paul Green's play "In Abraham's Bosom" when it won the Pulitzer prize, said of them, "I never saw white people interpret negro character better than the Playmakers." He also stated that Mrs. Coffin's play "Magnolia's Man" was "genuine American comedy of the highest type."

In all the large cities visited by the Playmakers they met numerous students who became greatly interested in the dramatic work at Chapel Hill. In New York the group was visited by several outstanding directors and playwrights, and by a number of former members of the Playmakers now on the professional stage.

On their return to Chapel Hill they received a wire from St. Louis requesting a week's performance there.

Although the tour was very expensive due to the trouble with the bus and the necessity of hiring transportation both for the players and the stage equipment, the Playmakers were so successful in attracting large audiences, according to a statement by the directors, that the tour was a financial success.

SPORTSMANSHIP IS SUBJECT OF CHAPEL SPEECH

Dean Bradshaw Tells Freshmen That Sportsmanship Should Be Part Of Man's Philosophy.

In a short talk during chapel Dean F. F. Bradshaw described the principles of sportsmanship as the central idea underlying university life. "This idea is a product of western civilization," Dean Bradshaw said, "and it should be an essential part of every man's philosophy."

Dean Bradshaw illustrated his remarks with references to Field Marshal Haig, well-known figure of the late war. Whenever possible Haig cast his lot with that of the private soldier, and never at any time used the power of his office to benefit himself. Dean Bradshaw spoke of this as the highest and most preferable type of sportsmanship. He said that a man following this idea asks nothing for himself but is anxious to carry his part of the common load.

The dean showed how these principles applied to student life by explaining their connection to conduct, the administration of student offices, the attitude of players in athletic contests, etc.

Dean Bradshaw pointed to a new field for the practice of sportsmanlike conduct by directing attention to Carolina-Duke rivalry. He urged friendly rivalry tempered with mutual respect.

Preceding Dean Bradshaw's talk Rev. C. E. Rozelle conducted a short devotional exercise. Dr. Abernethy, the University physician, was to have been presented to the freshmen yesterday, but he was unexpectedly prevented from coming. He will speak in chapel this morning.

Y Membership Cards May Now Be Secured

Officials of the Y. M. C. A. announce to the student body that a National Council ruling specifies that city Y. M. C. A. organizations shall extend visitor's privileges to no member of student organizations except that they have a membership card signed by proper authorities. They have also ruled that no card can be issued unless a pledge has been made and paid to the student organization. Those who have paid their pledges and wish to secure cards should call at the Y office.

Bertrand Russell Speaks On 'Need Moderns Be Cynical?'

Noted Lecturer Presents Third Program Of Student Entertainment Committee In Swain Hall; Sets Up Intellectual Honesty, Happiness, and Culture as Ideals.

Bertrand Russell, famous as a philosopher, publicist and essayist, spoke to an appreciative audience in Swain hall last night as a feature of the student entertainment program. His subject, "Need Moderns Be Cynical?" was considered one of the timeliest that could be brought to an audience composed largely of college students.

Speaking in extraordinarily clear terms and for the period of but one hour, Mr. Russell "debunked" the usefulness of the "old ideals" surrounding God, patriotism, Truth and Liberty, and set up in their place as genuine and effective ideals to which the young generation may adhere with an absence of hypocrisy—intellectual honesty, happiness, and culture.

Persons who have been long attached to the University in various capacities were unanimous in their opinion that no speaker, in recent years at least, has been given as enthusiastic a reception as that accorded Mr. Russell.

Mr. Russell is an experienced lecturer, having lectured extensively at Cambridge and at Harvard, where he was special professor of philosophy. He is now on the regular lecturing staff of the British Institute of Philosophical Studies, and has recently been invited to deliver a special course of lectures—the "Tarner Lectures"—at Trinity College. He is a prolific writer and his articles appear constantly in leading magazines. Many of his books have been translated into foreign languages. Among his most important are "Education and the Good Life," "The Analysis of Matter," "What I Believe," "The A. B. C. of Atoms," and "Introduction to Mathematical Philosophy." Speaking of the author Professor Ralph Barton Perry of Harvard says: "One of the most genuinely distinguished and brilliant philosophic minds of the age."

Mr. Russell arrived yesterday afternoon from Greensboro where he lectured at North Carolina College on "The Outlook for Civilization in This Machine Age." Last night he was the dinner guest of Dr. Archibald Henderson, who has known the philosopher for a number of years, and who introduced him to the Chapel Hill audience.

SALE CAPTIVATES LOCAL AUDIENCES

Speaks To Community Club and English Classes; Is Making Lecture Tour of Southern States.

John B. Sale, author of "The Tree Named John," a book of negro folk lore, which, although only recently published by the University Press, has already attained wide popularity, captivated several Chapel Hill audiences Monday with readings from his book.

Mr. Sale is from Columbus, Miss. At present he is making a tour of educational centers in the south.

Monday morning he appeared before children of the Chapel Hill schools and before University English classes. Monday night he appeared before members of the Chapel Hill Community club and their guests.

Mr. Sale read several selections from his book. The first sketch, entitled "Learning to Swim," told how Henry, the hero of "The Tree Named John," convinced his pal, John, that he could never learn to swim unless he swallowed a fish bladder—the larger the bladder the better the swimmer.

The second selection pictured vividly how the plantation children conducted the funeral of a disreputable rooster. Henry and John again played the leading roles. Henry, always the master of ceremony, directed the mourners, the songs, and preached the funeral, declaring that the rooster had to be "preached down to hell because nobody had never heard him repent fo' his sins." Mr. Sale's mimicking of the negro boy's preaching and praying demonstrated rare ability.

These two selections, together with a short one entitled "Spe'ence"—"What you gits w'en you won't larn by lis'en' to whut de old folks tell you"—completed the program.

SCOUT EXECUTIVE MEETING WILL BE HELD TOMORROW

Boy Scout Leaders Of North Carolina To Meet December 5-7; H. D. Meyer In Charge Of Program.

H. D. Meyer of the University faculty is in charge of the educational program in North Carolina, serving as a member of the regional educational committee on which the states of Georgia and Florida also have members. Mr. Meyer has announced that only two seminars will be held this year, whereas there were three last year. In order to secure the full credit of 25 hours a year each program will offer 12 1-2 hours of credit.

The executives must attend both seminars and all periods will be divided as follows: Six hours of preparation and guided discussion of subjects of local council administration; nineteen hours of presentation and guided discussion of subjects of vital interest to scout executives, and a supplementary reading program to be assigned, requiring 1,000 pages of reading matter.

The complete progrram, all parts of which will be given in the University Y. M. C. A., is as follows:

Thursday evening—8:00 to 10:30, General presentation of program "Putting Committees Into Operation," Mr. Chadwick. Discussion.

Annual Weil Lectures To Be Held In Gerrard Hall

Dr. W. W. Alexander, of Atlanta, To Deliver Lectures Friday, Saturday, and Sunday.

Dr. W. W. Alexander of Atlanta is to deliver the annual Weil lectures in Gerrard hall Friday, Saturday and Sunday of this week at 8:30 p. m. The subject of the series of lectures is "What Is the South?"

Dr. Alexander is an authority on the subject of racial relationships and should bring some very timely messages to the University on southern problems. He is well known to many here and those who attended the Blue Ridge conference in 1928 will remember some of his talks.

In speaking of the coming lectures Dr. Howard W. Odum, of the Weil lecture committee, says: "This is a subject in which a good many students are interested, and, of course, a good many of the professors are discussing the subject. There is, too, a general revival of interest in old things of the south, and especially at this time because of a critical attitude of the North towards the South, particularly as related to the industrial situation and the De Priest reactions. Dr. Alexander has given a good deal of thought to values, and I imagine a good many of his questions will be new to many of his hearers."

The subjects of the lectures are: Friday, "Truth and Fiction About the Old South"; Saturday, The New Rulers," and Sunday, "The Older Values in the New Life."

The Weil lectures are an annual event and were founded by Henry Weil of Goldsboro in honor of his father. Mr. Weil is an alumnus of the University and chairman of the Alumni Loyalty Fund.

Patterson on the second floor of the Y or from Garland McPherson at the Sigma Delta house. In addition, some member of the dance committee will be in the Di hall on Friday afternoon to issue cards.

District Racketeer Forces Playmakers To Pay In Cash Before Renting Them A Bus

(By Milt Wood)

Carolina's redoubtable Playmakers are back home from an eventful 3,000-mile pilgrimage in the North, which for sheer thrills was equal to the dramatic climaxes of the folk plays they gave to audiences, and which for hardships was almost on a par with those of colonial pioneers.

A before-dawn crash on Thanksgiving morning between their bus and an automobile driven at terrific speed by two allegedly drunken men in New York City; one 60-hour stretch of bus riding in which they did not change their clothing or even so much as brush their teeth; and some dangerous dealings with a New York City gangland boss for another bus after theirs had been wrecked in the accident—these are only a few of a chain of exciting incidents of their roadside adventures.

But the show went on as shows must go on in spite of accidents, racketeers, cyclones or what not. The Carolina Playmakers made every one of their appointments, and in addition added one bill to their original itinerary.

Upwards of 7500 people in 11 cities of eight states saw the productions of Carolina folk plays as given by the troupe from Chapel Hill. They were lauded by many distinguished audiences, by noted playwrights, and equally famous producers, critics and publishers.

But to tell the details of some of their roadside adventures, as Professor Frederick H. Koch likes to call them.

The automobile crash came very early on Thanksgiving morning at 110th street, Gotham. The setting was perfect for an accident and their veteran driver, Frank Daniel was even more careful than usual. He approached the intersection at five miles per hour. It was raining and one of New York's typical fogs choked the upper air. As the Playmakers' bus started across the intersection, a careening sedan approached their flank at a maddening pace. Daniel turned the bus to prevent a broadside blow. The crash was sufficient to knock the big bus across the street and at one time it tilted precariously on two wheels but did not turn over.

The two men in the sedan when extricated from their demolished car were hurried to a hospital. A bottle of whiskey was found on them. The Chapel Hill troupe members were only slightly bruised and cut by flying glass. The bus, however, was damaged beyond repair.

Police investigation gave the Playmakers little consolation beyond the fact that if one of the

A Crucial Period in the Loyalty Fund Campaign

Yesterday the Alumni Loyalty Fund officials inaugurated a drive in Chapel Hill which may have a profound effect upon the future development of the University. Under the direction of Felix A. Grisette, who recently succeeded Dan Grant as director of the fund, an attempt is being made this week to secure participation of every University alumnus in Chapel Hill in the Loyalty Fund campaign.

Unless the Chapel Hill alumni respond unanimously, the most optimistic of Loyalty Fund advocates can hardly expect alumni in this and other states to contribute substantially to the fund. The local alumni are more familiar with the needs of the University than any others, of course. They are a part of the University community itself; therefore it is especially important that they contribute, even though their contributions may be inconsiderable in actual figures, to the Loyalty Fund campaign, the success or failure of which will determine to a great extent whether the University will continue its program of expansion and development.

The head of a leading western university stated recently that "It is coming to be an accepted corrollary of public education that state support does not necessarily mean the absence of private support, and that institutions which are drawing revenues running into millions of dollars from the public may nevertheless seek additional funds from private sources. Indeed, state university executives are coming to the conclusion that legislative appropriation will always lag behind actual needs, and that the only solution of the state university financial problem is the appeal for additional support from those public-spirited citizens who are interested in the progress of education."

The above statement is indicative of the attitude that has come to be widely accepted by state university alumni throughout the country. Most of the leading state universities have been enabled to reach their finest development during the past few years through private gifts, and it is apparent that the alumni of the University must resort to similar means if they are to encourage and stimulate the growth of the institution, which cannot reach the front rank without the assistance of the alumni.

Hence the drive among Chapel Hill alumni this week is especially significant. It marks a crucial point in the progress of the Alumni Loyalty Fund and therefore in the future of the University, which is inextricably linked with the success or failure of the fund.

Increasing Friendship Between Duke and Carolina

In the recent discussion of the relations between Carolina and Duke students that has been carried on in the columns of the two student papers, the sanest attitude yet exhibited by either group of students has been shown. Discussions such as these will do much toward bringing about a more cordial and more friendly relationship between the two institutions. For the purpose of improving the present conditions we have a suggestion to offer.

It has long been the custom of the V. P. I. and V. M. I. senior classes to have a joint banquet on the evening following the annual V. P. I. - V. M. I. football game. The student papers of the two institutions have stated that nothing has has been more instrumental in moulding a desirable and satisfactory relationship between the student bodies of the two schools than these annual banquets. At such affairs the football teams are guests of honor. Speeches from each class explain the ideals of the two institutions; and the customary fun and rivalry make a first rate entertainment.

As the Carolina-Duke football game is becoming to be more of classic each year, attracting larger crowds, and stirring up more interest among the students, it is at this time of the year that the rivalry and friendship or bitterness between the two institutions is felt most keenly. School spirit, if we may use so prosaic a term, is at its height during the week of the game.

And now we would suggest that some plan be worked out whereby the senior class of Duke and the senior class of Carolina might have a joint banquet following the annual game. The expenses could be shared jointly, and the place alternate each year as the football game does. We believe such an affair would not only erase much of the unpleasant feeling now existing between the two schools, but would be a positive influence in bringing about better understanding and greater friendship between the two universities.

AN EXPLANATION

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

As author of an article in a last week's issue of the Tar Heel, I wish to apologize to the merchants of Chapel Hill for an attack on them regarding the ordinance sponsored by them for the banishment of undesirable salesmen from the streets of the town.

Through misunderstanding of the article explaining the ordinance, I drew the wrong conclusion. The article in the Tar Heel seemed to give the merchants alone the privilege of selling the articles mentioned in the ordinance. Through an explanation, I have found this not to be the objective. I find it to be an act for the protection rather than a hindrance to the self-help student, and I am sure that it deserves our full support.

THE GOOSE GIVER IS LOCATED

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I wish to express my indebtedness to you for publishing my inquiry regarding the identity of the person who recently brought a wild goose to my house and left it with his name and compliments. The name never reached me. A few days after my inquiry appeared in the Daily Tar Heel, a friend who had read it gave me the required clue. It is through your courtesy in extending the freedom of your columns to me for this inquiry that I have been enabled to locate the mysterious donor, Charles Kistler of Morganton, an old friend and former student.

"J." D. SEEKS REDRESS

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I seek redress! My good character has been impaled. I do not claim to be a pure white lily, so to speak, but I deny that my character is black and I demand proof.

With all due respect for the veracity of my accusers' statements, I should say not that my character is black, but that it is that each of us will have a good not white. Or, rather, that it is slightly smudgy. And whose, I ask, is not? Point out to me a man who is perfect in character and you point out to me a corpse.

I am accused of being the perpetrator of objectionable rim-rolling activities and of "inanely washing dirty linen" before you. I beg to differ on both counts. The din-craving rim-roller, with whom I seem to have been confused, is a neighbor of mine — incidentally, another "nincompoop"—and the "inane washing of dirty linen" was in vain.

Despite the vehement denial of my charge that we possess more than our share of mentally deficient Carolinians, or perhaps, as a gesture of defiance, there was another fire on the ground floor of "J" on the very night that the vigorous rebuttal was being prepared.

The committee in charge of this second piece of tomfoolery showed a sufficient amount of intelligence to warrant the granting of the w. k. rising vote of sitting thanks. They reserved enough presence of mind to throw the flaming receptacle out on the campus. If I am not mistaken, the triumvirate responsible for the article in defense of the "nincompoops" were elated spectators of, if not active participants in the questionable revelry.

I trust that my statements will not again be misinterpreted. I do not accuse the entire dormitory of being asses—not by any means. There are a number of us who relish decorum and this lends us a certain cachet among the J's, for we are few and far between.

District Racketeer Forces Playmakers To Pay In Cash

allegedly drunken men had died, then Driver Daniel would be held on a technical charge of manslaughter. Police said charges could not be filed against the two men in the sedan under New York laws unless one of them was so drunk that he could not walk. There is no speed limit on 110th street, the Playmakers were told.

After hours of delay one policeman finally aided Koch and Heffner in locating another bus owned by Joe Leeberman, racketeer chief of that neighborhood for the past 20 years. He demanded an excessive amount for his unheated bus and would not release it until the actual cash had been wired for and placed in his hands. After arrangements had been made for a bus from Raleigh to meet the troupe at Washington, the Playmakers pushed on.

Bidding good-bye to the gangster's bus at Washington, the Chapel Hill people piled into the bus from Raleigh and set out for Richmond, Va. However, after traveling a few miles a valve on this third bus broke down and the party was further delayed on the trip while it was repaired.

At Farmville, Va., the players arrived ahead of their scenery which had been entrusted to a negro truck driver. Curtain time came and no scenery was in sight. After delaying a while, one play was given to the audience without scenery. More time was taken up by Miss Wolf personifying a mountain girl and singing a number of mountain songs for the crowd. Finally the scenery arrived two hours late and the negro in a drunken condition. The Farmville night watchman locked the truant truck driver up for the night, and the Playmaker officials appeared in court the next morning against him.

Accordingly, from Wednesday morning until Friday night, the gallant troupe of Playmakers had been riding in busses almost continually from Boston to Farmville, Va., without even time to change their clothing. "Not a disgruntled sound from the fine people with us," said Professor Koch, "which is certainly a tribute to friendship."

Miss Bailey's long play of "Job's Kinfolks" was universally liked especially for its true characterization. Mrs. Coffin's "Magnolia's Man," according to those on tour, was a complete hit everywhere.

The Playmakers were seen in five new cities. They played to a wide variety of audiences and people: university folks at Boston; Baltimore for the third time; a hastily arranged stand at Hartford, Conn., in a theatre that had once been an old church and in which the stage sloped to the footlights from the back; big theatres and small ones which seated only 200 people. They went the farthest north of any time during their 24 tours. They were presented before five dramatic organizations at Hartford. Frank P. Allen, governor of Massachusetts, received them in his office and greeted them warmly.

Among the playwrights who saw their bill in New York City were Anne Bridgers who wrote "Coquette," and Hatcher Hughes. Among New York producers in their audiences were Kenneth MacGowan, Charles Wagner and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Douville Coburn.

Dramatic critics in New York City who viewed their productions included Montrose Moses, Sheldon Cheney and Roland Holt; while among the publishers were Will D. Howe of Scribners and Frederick Croft.

Among former Carolina students and actors who are now on the boards of Broadway in New York City, earning their livings by acting are Al Kahn whose professional name is "Al Kerr," Penn Harrison, Helen Dortch, Mary Dernberger, Ernest Thompson and P. L. "Lee" Elmore. The Playmakers were warmly greeted by all of these old friends.

It was by far the most extensive journey of the Carolina Playmakers since that nationally famous group was founded by Professor Koch, and by all means it was the most thrilling and eventful.

The troupe arrived back in Chapel Hill Sunday afternoon—tired but happy.

Virginian-Pilot Says Carolina Press Has Liberal Viewpoint

A recent editorial in the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot comments on "A Virginia Book From a Tar Heel Press." The reference is to the publication of Dr. Alexander Bruce's "The Virginia Plutarch" by the University of North Carolina Press.

It is gathered from this article that Virginia and Carolina are rivals in other fields than that of athletics. At least, this is an attitude that some people of that state have assumed, and which the Norfolk paper considers "fundamentally parochial."

The editorialist says in part: "For the state of Virginia or the University of Virginia to feel either resentment or jealousy against the University of North Carolina Press . . . is to introduce the psychology of football rivalry in a field where it has no place. Not only are the North Carolina Press and "The Virginia Plutarch" knit in the common bond of the Republic of Letters which knows no frontiers and erects no tariff walls, but both are a part of a concerted effort Virginia and Carolina are making to construct a more significant civilization in the south.

"This, then, is an ideal time for Virginians generally to take note of the fine pioneer work that the North Carolina Press has done and is doing."

Speaking of "the co-operation between Charlottesville and Chapel Hill . . . which . . . has been continuous" the article concludes by stating that the far-famed Virginia Quarterly Review, in which the Press frequently advertises and which often publishes the work of North Carolina scholars, and the Press "have assumed that there was no room for cultural rivalry between the commonwealths" and that all other Virginians may assume the same with a considerable bit of self congratulation that an institution is waiting at the University of North Carolina to publish an eminent volume of Virginia biography.

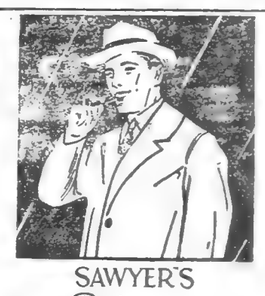
U. N. C. RADIO STATION GETS LICENSE RENEWED



The University radio station, W4WE, has recently secured annual renewal of its license from the Federal Radio Commission. Under the license, which was issued in the name of Professor George F. Bason, head of the department of electrical engineering, the station is given permission to operate with three types of transmission apparatus, including telephone, and on all wave lengths open to amateurs.

The license this year was renewed in the name of Professor Bason so that the station could retain its old call letters. Unless this had been done, it would have been necessary to change the call letters, for the radio commission is assigning all stations at technical schools call letters beginning with the letter Y.

Carolina Places Three Men On All Southern Teams

CAPTAIN FARRIS UNANIMOUS PICK FOR FIRST TEAM

Branch Is Quarterback on Second Team; Magner Is Placed In Third Team Backfield.

The United Press recently conducted a vote for the coaches of the S. I. C. and the result found Captain Ray Farris chosen as the most outstanding guard in the South. Johnny Branch took second All-Southern honors for the Tar Heels by landing the quarterback position on the second team, while Jim Magner cinched a position on the third All-Southern eleven.

Farris not only received the vote of the Coaches of the S. I. C. in the United Press article, but also came through in the NEA's choice of the Southern All-Stars. Don Holt was also mentioned for high honors for his outstanding work on the Carolina wing. Buie, of Duke, was placed on the NEA's second eleven in a half back position, and was the only other member of a North Carolina team, except Tar Heels, that has so far been mentioned for All-Southern honors.

Tennessee, runners up in the S. I. C. race, led all other Southern teams by placing three men on the first All-Southern eleven. Tulane and Alabama followed closely with two men each, while North Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Kentucky each placed one.

The United Press selections follow:

First Team

End—Smith, Georgia
End—Brandt, Tennessee
Tackle—Drury, Kentucky
Tackle—Sington, Alabama
Guard—Farris, North Carolina
Guard—Steele, Florida
Center—Roberts, Tulane
Quarter—Dodd, Tennessee
Half—Banker, Tulane
Half—McEver, Tennessee
Full—Holm, Alabama

Second Team

Ends, Van Sickle, Florida and Hug, Tennessee; Tackles, Rucker, Tulane and Swofford, Clemson; Guards, Boedenger, Tulane and Brown, Vanderbilt; Center, Eberdt, Alabama; Quarter, Branch, North Carolina; Halfs, Kelly, Kentucky and Thomason, Georgia Tech; Full, Cawthon, Florida.

Third Team

Ends, Dalrimple, Tulane and Jones, Georgia Tech; Tackles, Barnett, Mississippi and Marie, Georgia Tech; Guards, Forquer, Kentucky and McDonald, Maryland; Center Boland, Georgia; Quarter, Crabtree, Florida; Halfs, Hackman, Tennessee and Magner, North Carolina; Full, Rothstein, Georgia.

Ward And Nash Are Good Pair

Jimmy Ward and Strud Nash, veteran Tar Heel halfbacks, set a fast stride against Virginia last week and will be striving to repeat against Duke Saturday.

Ward, a triple-threater, ran the ball 13 times for an average of 10½ yards a try, scoring two touchdowns and hurling passes for two more.

Nash, the Tar Heel speedking, ran the ball seven times for an average of 12.3 yards, and scored two touchdowns, one on a pass from Ward, and the other on a 50-yard canter through center.

Both boys are in fine shape this week and raring to go against Duke. Ward, who is high Tar Heel scorer, will be playing his final game in a Tar Heel uniform, but the speedy Nash has one more season. Both are doped to be in the starting lineup.

Carolina's All-Southern Stars

Johnnie Branch has been chosen as second team quarterback this year, giving Dodd, of Tennessee, a good race for first place. He is only a sophomore and is expected to do big things during his two remaining years.

Captain Ray Farris, picked on every All-Southern Selection, is being praised as the greatest guard on the Southern grid in many years. He plays his last game as a Tar Heel against Duke Saturday.

Jim Magner was placed at halfback on the third all-southern team. He has averaged more than eight yards each time he has carried the ball this year, and is an excellent passer also.

CAROLINA WINNER OF MAJORITY OF GAMES WITH DUKE

Team Has Not Lost To Duke Since Renewal of Grid Rivalry In 1922.

Looking at the situation from one angle, Old Man Psychology will be on the side of the Tar Heels when North Carolina and Duke clash in Durham next Saturday afternoon to decide whether the Tar Heels are to have undisputed claim to the state football championship or whether it must be shared with Duke.

But if you take a look at things from another angle, you will see a different picture. You will see a Duke team that has everything to gain and little if anything to lose in the game this year. The Blue Devils have just been given a licking that they didn't feel they deserved. They are out for revenge and they will be going after the Tar Heels with blood in their eyes. Moreover, Duke supporters feel that it is high time the Tar Heel brothers were being scalped. It is a victory they have been longing and praying for many a day.

The Tar Heels have lost to the Methodists only three times in the history of football relations between the two institutions.

The first defeat came in 1889 when Trinity (now Duke) won 25 to 17. The next Trinity victory was in 1891 by the score of 6 to 4, and the third was in 1893 by the same score.

Duke has not won a game since, although there was a 26-year period from 1895 to 1922, during which Carolina and Trinity did not meet on the gridiron.

Altogether twelve games have been played, with the Tar Heels showing 9 victories.

The Tar Heels have a clean slate for the seven games since relations were resumed in 1922, but four of the games have been won by one touchdown margins. The score last year was 14-7.

The Carolina-Duke series to date stands as follows:

1889 (Spring) Carolina 17, Duke 25.
1889 (Fall) Game forfeited to Carolina.
1891 Carolina 4, Duke 6
1892 Carolina 24, Duke 0
1893 Carolina 4, Duke 6
1894 Carolina 28, Duke 0
1895 to 1922, No Games
1922 Carolina 20, Duke 0
1923 Carolina 14, Duke 6
1924 Carolina 6, Duke 0
1925 Carolina 41, Duke 0
1926 Carolina 6, Duke 0
1927 Carolina 18, Duke 0
1928 Carolina 14, Duke 7.

TENNIS OUTLOOK IS VERY BRIGHT

Coach Kenfield Is Optimistic About Showing In Spite Of Loss To Virginia.

Although the Tar Heel tennis team dropped six of the nine matches in the opening tilt with Virginia last Wednesday, Coach Kenfield does not hesitate to predict a successful tennis season for 1930. Conceding the fact that the Cavaliers have a strong tennis aggregation this year, the Carolina racquet-swingers did not show the strength that is to be expected when the full quota of varsity material is available. The lineup last week contained but two veteran players, Yeomans and Merritt. Baggs, Kendall, Bryan, Palmore—all new men in varsity net action—showed up well despite the fact that all except Bryan lost in singles and doubles. Bryan scored over Noell in straight sets, 6-3, 6-4.

Two of the strongest contenders for varsity ranking, Eubank and Sonny Graham, were not eligible for intercollegiate play last week, but will probably rate regular berths on the squad as soon as eligibility obstacles are overcome. Graham will be open for play by early spring and Eubank will more than likely clear his difficulties up before then. Liskin, first ranking freshman last year, but not entered at the University this fall, will probably return in time to bid for a varsity berth at the opening of the spring practice.

An abundance of material is out for varsity tennis this year, and, according to Coach Kenfield, the lineup used last week is by no means a definitely established thing. The only two permanent members are Merritt and Yeomans; the remainder is only tentative, and may be shifted altogether by the time varsity play is resumed next spring. Some of the more prominent candidates for varsity positions at present are A. M. Rhett, C. C. Winecoff, Frank Owens, the Wardlaw twins, Fred and Digby. Doug Potter, George Waterhouse, J. E. Skinner, Moe Wolf, and others.

The Virginia game was the only varsity contest scheduled for the fall season, but a full schedule of fifteen or twenty matches will be played in the spring with the first match falling somewhere around the first of April. Although the games have not been booked yet, Coach Kenfield intimated that a large portion of the schedule would include an extended southern tour. The main trip last season was a northern one where such teams as Georgetown, Princeton, George Washington and other leading eastern universities were played. It is Mr. Kenfield's intention to alternate the northern and southern trips, going north one year and south the next.

BACKFIELD ACES BACK IN UNIFORM

Magner and Wyrick Work Out In Preparation for Duke Contest; Reserves Work Hard.

The appearance in football togs yesterday of Pete Wyrick and Jim Magner for a light workout raised hopes that the two backfield aces who have graced the sidelines for the past three weeks will see service in the game with Duke Saturday. Coach Collins expressed the opinion that there was a good chance for both boys to return to the lineup against Duke.

A short scrimmage, the first since the Virginia contest, culminated the workout Tuesday. Only the reserves came in for the scrimmage session while the veterans who carried the bulk of the burden in the Virginia game rested.

The dampness of the turf and the stinging cold prevented the reserves from showing their best. On defense the second stringers looked good at times, but allowed the opposition to rip off long gains through tackle and around the ends. Quarterback Moore, halfbacks Maus and Slusser, and Fullback House ran behind the reserve line against the frosh. The line listed, Nelson and Parsley, ends; Dortch and Thompson, tackles; McIver and Hudson, guards, and Gilbreath, center.

Many of the dormitory organizations failed to cover their buildings during the recent Red Cross drive. For this reason the local Red Cross chapter wishes to state that the drive will continue until these dormitories are canvassed. Now that the "first-of-the-month" checks and allowances are coming in, the chapter asks that the dormitories that were not covered be canvassed as soon as possible so as to get as many contributions and memberships as possible.

Russell's Life Of Emerson Receives Favorable Comment

Phillips Russell, University of North Carolina alumnus and prominent biographer of Benjamin Franklin and John Paul Jones, has just had published his latest work, Emerson, The Wisest American.

According to the New York Times, "It is a better book than his lives of Benjamin Franklin or John Paul Jones for two reasons: the temptation toward a superficial popularization were not too much for him here and the larger part of his function of biographer, a function that he recognized and pursued, was to restate an attitude toward life which had been made wholly clear in Emerson's own works. . . . The reader may turn to Mr. Russell's book with confidence."

Y Cabinet Members To Attend Raleigh Discussion Meeting

Dr. John R. Mott, former statesman and a great Y. M. C. A. exponent, will conduct a special forum in Raleigh December 11 on the subject of "The Religious Outlook of the World from the Standpoint of the Students." Dr. Mott will discuss this question in a round-table fashion with a specially selected group of from 75 to 100 campus Y leaders from the leading colleges in North Carolina.

The colleges to be represented will be the University, N. C. State, Duke and several of the women's colleges. Since the University is the largest, it will have the largest number of delegates. This delegation was elected last Monday night at the meeting of the three Y cabinets. The following students were selected as delegates to this discussion:

Sophomore cabinet: J. Elwin Dungan, F. M. James, John Park, John Miller, Grady Leonard.

Freshman council: Alex Webb, Schuyler Schenck, Charlie Brawley, Robert Barnett, Charlie Rose, Bill McKee, Aubrey Perkins.

At The Carolina

"Once when I was a vaudeville producer, I stopped over one night in a very small town, and, to pass time, took in a crude little show there—the best they had in small towns in those days. And I remarked to myself what a pity it was that the really great shows could not reach these little towns, and these people who never, save by traveling to a big city, could see what they would appreciate, perhaps, more than the sophisticated urbanite. That's why producing the 'Hollywood Revue' gives me my greatest thrill—for we have brought Broadway and all it means to the small town."

So says Harry Rapf, vaudeville veteran, former stage producer, and the man who envisioned and brought into being Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's great singing and musical show, "The Hollywood Revue," which will open at the Carolina theatre today. The new singing, talking spectacle—a Ziegfeld Revue, a revue of famous film personalities, and a spectacle far beyond anything the limitations the stage is fettered with, is, in talking film, natural photography, and in point of famous names, far beyond anything the stage has ever achieved.

"I am certain," says Rapf, a veteran motion picture producer in the silent film days as well as the first revue creator of the new talking picture, "that we have paved the way to what will be a film institution. There will be other revues—perhaps many of them, for the talking picture lends itself better to this type of entertainment than almost any other in some respects—and because this is the form of entertainment the public likes. Famous stars that never leave Broadway can be brought to film audiences—music, dance, comedy—everything that goes into one of these lavish entertainments. It is certain that the demand will be great, and it will cause the creation of many more. So I feel that we have founded a new institution in a new art—perhaps one of its most important."

Y CABINETS HOLD WEEKLY MEETINGS

The freshman, sophomore, and junior-senior cabinets held their regular weekly meetings last Monday night at the Y at 7:15.

The program of the freshman council opened with devotional exercises led by H. N. Parsley and a prayer by Tom Worth. After the roll was called and the minutes were read, the president announced that there would be a delegation to go to Raleigh December 11 to be with Dr. Mott. Aubrey Perkins then led in one of the most interesting discussions that has been held this year. Mr. Perkins started his discussion on the program of the Y. After a short discussion of this topic, he asked a few questions which were fully commented on by the members. It was decided to carry this discussion over to next meeting.

A general discussion of the subjects and points brought up by the speakers of the past month was the main feature on the program for the sophomore cabinet. All the points that had been stressed by the speakers of the past few meetings were commented on. The subject of the speakers for the past month had been "The Present Labor Situation." It was announced that a banquet would be given some time before the close of the fall quarter; plans and arrangements for this banquet will be announced later.

The program for the junior-senior cabinet opened with devotional exercises led by Euber Taylor, after which Mr. Comer announced the discussion to be led by Dr. Mott. Delegates for this discussion were chosen. Plans were then made for student discussion groups in the dormitories, and also plans were made for the next meeting. The program was closed with a prayer by Mr. Comer.

Gardner's Address Features December Issue Of Journal

Number of Feature Stories Contained in Monthly Publication Of School of Education; N. W. Walker Editor.

The December issue of the High School Journal, which is published by the school of education, was released by the University Press a short time ago and has been sent to its subscribers in this and other states.

The High School Journal is a medium by which the University is rendering service to teachers through its school of education. It is one of the few publications in the field of secondary education in the south, and is subscribed to by practically all the high schools in North Carolina, as well as by many in 37 other states and in seven foreign countries.

The Journal is edited by Dean N. W. Walker with the assistance of Professors Edgar W. Knight, E. R. Mosher, M. R. Trabue, and A. M. Jordan, all of the school of education. I. R. Griffin, also of the school of education, is business manager. Members of the training staff of the school of education prepare some of the general articles and conduct the special departments, but the Journal receives a considerable quantity of material for publication from high school principals and teachers throughout the state.

The December issue of the Journal is featured by the text of an address delivered at Chapel Hill on October 21 by Governor O. Max Gardner upon "The Significance of the Citizens' Library Movement," in which Governor Gardner emphasizes the need and value of the library as a method of instruction, as an aid in business life, and as an agent of cultural and spiritual progress among the people.

Three other articles of general interest are also included in the December issue. Guy B. Phillips, superintendent of the city schools of Greensboro, in the article "Bridging the Gap Between the School and the Public," stresses the individual task of each teacher to enlighten the

Garland McPherson Elected President Dialectic Senate

Concluding its activities for the present quarter, the Dialectic senate held its executive session Tuesday night in the Di hall. The senate proceeded immediately to the election of a full staff of officers for the coming winter quarter and, in addition, a president for the ensuing spring quarter.

Senator Garland McPherson was unopposed for the winter quarter presidency. He succeeds Senator J. C. Williams in that capacity. Senator T. B. Rector was elected spring quarter president. Senator G. A. Kincaid was elevated to the office of president pro-tem, succeeding Senator McPherson. Senator C. A. Shreve was elected clerk. He succeeds Senator T. B. Rector. Senator Ed Hamer defeated his opponent by a comfortable margin in the race for the office of sergeant-at-arms. Senator Marcus Simpson has served the senate in this capacity throughout the present quarter. In accordance with custom the retiring president, Senator J. C. Williams, was made critic.

Senator Rector called attention to the fact that the group picture of the senate would be taken at chapel period on Tuesday morning, December 10, in front of the law building.

Making his final report for the debate committee, Senator Kincaid reminded the senate that the annual Mary D. Wright debate would take place in Gerrard hall on the night of December 10.

Dr. Henderson

Henderson Officer Historical Society

The states of Kentucky and Tennessee have recently, separately, celebrated the contributions of Colonel Richard Henderson, famous North Carolinian, who opened up the West in 1775. A notice was given in a former issue of the Tar Heel of a celebration in Henderson, Ky. Since that time Governor Horton of Tennessee pointed an entire week to be known as Tennessee Citizens Week in honor of Colonel Richard Henderson's contributions to the early settlement and development of Tennessee. He (Governor Horton) recently issued a public proclamation to that effect and sent Dr. Archibald Henderson of this institution an official and signed copy of that proclamation. Dr. Henderson is a descendant of the famous Col. Richard Henderson.

At Henderson, Ky., a new National Patriotic Society was formed known as The Transylvanians, leading officers of which are: Judge Robert W. Bingham, an alumnus of this University, Bishop Joseph B. Cheshire of this state, and Dr. Archibald Henderson.

The new Century quarterly for autumn 1929, contains an extended essay by Dr. Henderson, describing the contributions made by North Carolinians to the opening up of the West. This essay is entitled "Transylvania": a story of the bold and almost successful attempt to found the fourteenth American Colony.

This number of the Century contains the following notice:

"Archibald Henderson (Transylvania) is a graduate of the University of North Carolina and is now head of the mathematics department. He was a student at Cambridge University, the University of Berlin and the Sorbonne. Dr. Henderson is a scientist by profession, but he is also the leading authority of Westward Expansion in America during the eighteenth century, and the author of several books on the subject, the most important of which is "The Conquest of the Old Southwest." Dr. Henderson is also the biographer of Bernard Shaw."

December Issue Law Review Contains Interesting Cases

Organization and Functions of American Bar Association Discussed by University Publication; Allen Smith is Student Editor.

The December issue of the Law Review, publication of the Law School, was recently released. It contains material of popular interest as well as of a technical nature. "The O'Fallon Case: Latest Battle in the Public Utility Valuation War," by Professor G. H. Robinson of the Cornell Law School, sets forth the vast importance of this recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the economic life of the country, involving billions of dollars in the valuation of railroad property alone. Concerned with questions growing out of the labor disturbances in Gastonia is the article by Judge J. Crawford Biggs on "Religious Belief as Qualification of a Witness," which brings together the important judicial decisions and statutes in that connection. Mr. C. B. Sparger, a certified public accountant and a lawyer, discusses "Profits, Surplus and the Payment of Dividends," in which he shows a divergence between the views of the accountants and the lawyer as to what constitutes profits and surplus for the payment of dividends.

The Open Court section of the Law Review contains five short articles, originally presented as papers in the course on Administration of Justice. They discuss the organization and functions of the bar, taking up the history of the American Bar Association and the North Carolina Bar Association. The activities of these organizations are analyzed with a view of indicating methods of improvement within the associations and presenting the latest movement in the United States for the improvement of the Bar, the so-called "Self-Governing Bar," now in operation in six states, and spreading rapidly. The comment entitled "The Thirteenth Juror" deals with the mistrial in the first trial of the Gastonia strikers due to the insanity of a juror.

There are fifteen notes and recent case comments, all but one of which are written by students. Four of these discussions are in the field of Banking and Negotiable Instruments, including many important questions of bank collections. There are two topics each in the fields of Evidence, Contracts and Equity and one each in Corporations, Criminal Law, Mortgages, Public Utilities and Trade Regulation.

The Law Review is printed and contains 128 pages of reading matter. There are twenty-one student editors, assisted by four faculty editors. Allen K. Smith is student editor-in-chief and John H. Anderson, Jr., and James H. Chadbourn are assistant editors. Professor R. H. Wettach is the faculty advisor to the publication.

Vocational Bureau Described in Talk

The work of the bureau of vocational information was described in chapel Wednesday morning by Henry Johnston, who is engaged in this work in the office of the dean of students. Mr. Johnston told of the history and extensiveness of the vocational guidance movement and the nature of the local bureau.

The movement began a few years ago when a man opened in Boston an office for the purpose of advising young men on vocations. It received a great deal of impetus during the war by methods used in placing men in the army and later through steps taken by business organizations in establishing personnel departments. Mr. Johnston said that from this the movement spread into education where it could meet especially the needs of young people.

Mr. Johnston stated that the local bureau of vocational information equipped itself by gathering information about the various occupations and also about work in certain firms and organizations. In this way both a general and specific knowledge of certain fields of work is placed at the disposal of the student.

Mr. Johnston mentioned that the bureau has a book shelf on vocational study in the library. The bureau has in the past sponsored series of chapel talks on the subject.

Mr. Johnston stated that as much as possible is being done through the bureau of vocational information, although the work is of necessity conducted on a small scale. Since only a few of the men of the University can be advised, the bureau attempts to aid chiefly seniors and graduate students.

Graduate Vacancies

There will be two vacancies in the Graduate Club beginning January 3. Professional students of advanced standing and graduates of the University are eligible. Application for reservation should be made to the Manager, Box 26, Chapel Hill, and should be accompanied by a reservation deposit of $5.00.

PHILANTHROPIC ASSEMBLY PICKS TERM OFFICERS

John Lang to Head Body for Winter Quarter; Banquet Follows Election.

The quarterly elections of the Philanthropic Assembly were held at its regular meeting Tuesday night. A banquet in the hall followed the election.

Upon motion, the Assembly voted to meet in the hall of the Assembly on the night of the Mary D. Wright Debate and to go in a body to the debate. Several amendments to the constitution in regard to the election of officers were made by vote of the Assembly. The report of Representative James Harris, treasurer, was presented and accepted.

The following representatives were elected officers of the Assembly for the winter quarter: Speaker, John Lang; Speaker pro-tem, Thomas Baldwin; Sergeant-at-Arms, Bert Haywood; Reading Clerk, Hamilton Hobgood; Assistant treasurer, F. M. James; Ways and Means Committee, G. P. Carr, chairman, James Wilkinson, and Edward Yarborough.

Speaker pro-tem Allbright, who has served in the absence of Speaker Speight, in his retiring address thanked the Assembly for its support during the quarter and expressed optimism for the work of the Assembly during the remainder of the year. Speaker Lang, in a short address, asked the cooperation of the representatives in an effort to continue the good work of the Assembly and promised his best efforts to that end. He announced that his inaugural address would be made at the opening session of the winter quarter.

At the conclusion of the business, a banquet was held in the rear of the hall. Representative Harris was in charge of the affair. Sandwiches and drinks were served to the members of the Assembly.

Anti-Peddling Law Passed In Good Faith By Aldermen

(By E. C. Daniel, Jr.)

Since a great deal of ill-will and misunderstanding has been created among the students, Chapel Hill merchants, and the municipal government by the recent passage of an anti-peddling ordinance by the board of aldermen, a few words in explanation of the act and the grounds of misunderstanding might help to clarify the situation.

An open forum letter appearing in the issue of this paper for Thursday, November 28, and written by a student, declared the ordinance to be an instrument of the merchants of the town, passed for their benefit and worked out by them. The writer of the letter seemed to think that the movement was made in an effort to prevent self-help students from selling football novelties, programs, etc., giving the privilege and profit to the merchants alone.

In yesterday's edition of the Daily Tar Heel an apology from this critic was printed. He retracted his previous statements, declaring that he had misinterpreted the tone and motive behind the measure.

The first of the letters would have one believe that the town merchants were assuming a greedy attitude, attempting to take every possible opportunity away from the self-help students. As a matter of fact the merchants were not actually connected with the passing of the bill; they were merely an accessory to the program planned by the University and the board of aldermen to rid the town of an undesirable element that every football contest brings to the Hill. On those occasions a horde of novelty vendors and peddlers descend on the town with the avowed purpose of taking away as much money as possible from the town, including the profits of merchants and student salesmen. Most of them employ objectionable methods in their dealings and use no discrimination as to personal and property rights. Possessing these characteristics, they constitute an unwanted class in the University community.

Consequently, the aldermanic council determined to rid the streets of these "pests," but in order to do so they had to pass a law prohibiting peddling on the streets of the town and requiring, of course, the support of the Chapel Hill merchants,

About the most convincing evidence of the liberalism of Bertrand Russell that we can imagine is the fact that he consented to speak in Swain hall.

From the reports of the Northern Tour we gather that politicking in Mexico, walking the streets of Chicago and motoring to Thanksgiving Day football games are perfectly safe pastimes in comparison to Playmaking around these parts.

The Soviets Show Their Teeth

Moscow surprised the world Tuesday when it unexpectedly made its own peace with Mukden over the Chinese Eastern Railway dispute in Manchuria, thereby enhancing the international prestige of the Soviet Union immensely. At same time the Soviets rebuked in emphatic terms the nations who had sought to interfere in the Russian-Chinese dispute by reminding the two countries of their obligations under the Kellogg anti-war pact.

Especially severe were the rebuffs handed the United States for Secretary of State Stimson's note relative to the dispute, most of which, it must be admitted, were justified. Secretary Stimson's note was described as "an unjustified attempt" to influence Chinese-Russian negotiations, coming as it did when these were already in progress, and surprise was expressed that the United States, which had refrained from official relations with the Soviet Union, should have undertaken to give "advice and direction."

The masterful manner in which the Soviet government has conducted itself throughout the Chinese Eastern Railway affair is indicative of its potential power and diplomatic shrewdness. Throughout the negotiations for a peaceable settlement of the dispute the American government has demonstrated a patronizing attitude of condescension toward both Russia and China. As a nation we have come to have a somewhat exaggerated idea of our own international importance; too frequently our diplomats have imparted the impression that we expect all the nations of the world to kowtow to us, to bow down in humility before the majesty of our great wealth, our marvelous natural resources and our powerful army and navy. Probably the independent attitude of the Soviet government toward our thinly-veiled commands during the Manchurian trouble will have a healthy effect upon Washington. Perhaps it may even bring the department of state to realize that we do not possess all the wealth and all the power in the world.

Another highly significant aspect of the Soviet Union's conduct in its difficulties with China is the augury of future world power that it predicates. The Russians have advanced more rapidly during the past few years than any other nation. They are building for the future; almost half of the wages and profits of Russian industry are utilized as new capital for the development of a greater Soviet Union. It is true that living conditions among the workers are deplorable, due to the fact that a large proportion of their earnings are turned back to the state as new capital. But these heroic measures cannot fail to build a strong nation. Russia is indeed the coming nation of the world. The Soviets have shown their teeth to the great international powers, and these powers have found them strong and extremely sharp.

The Liberal In Our Midst

Much food for thought was contained in the lecture of Bertrand Russell, delivered here Tuesday night. His points were carefully but almost casually made, yet they left a profound impression.

Nothing very startlingly radical was said by the English philosopher, and there can be few who objected to his remarks or any part of them. Bertrand Russell is known as a liberal thinker, so liberal that the faculty of the University of Wisconsin objected to his being allowed to speak before the Liberal Club of that institution. During the war, his government considered him dangerous enough to send him to China, in order to get him out of England.

What Mr. Russell said can be chiefly characterized as common sense, the type of common sense which is the result of careful thinking and a long and full life. His ideas appeared unusually felicitous and acceptable because they were the ideas most of us hold—but either cannot or are afraid to express. We are delighted to hear someone set forth our thoughts, particularly a speaker who is acknowledged one of the foremost philosophers of our day. If we find that we agree with the lecturer, we applaud him. In reality, we are applauding ourselves.

What Bertrand Russell has that most of us lack is courage—the courage of our convictions. We may believe that we agree with him, that he is voicing the opinions and ideas we hold or should hold, but we leave him to set forth those opinions. True, most of us never bother to think about truth, beauty, morals, culture, or patriotism, but there are some who do among the students and faculty.

If we are a progressive institution, or if we can truly be characterized by that glib phrase, "the most liberal university in the south," then we should extend our liberality to the people on the campus, as well as the speakers we invite to it. Therein lies the value of liberality—an actual practising, unafraid liberality which allows free play for personal convictions and a chance to form the ideas which will later be the background of life.—H. J. G.

Readers' Opinions

OUR DEAD RELIGION

Editor The Daily Tar Heel:

That was a fine editorial in last Wednesday's Tar Heel entitled "This Question of Religion." At last some one has spoken with plain horse sense and has not been afraid to tell all he knows. The idea of a freshman, a mere babe in arms, trying to preach to his mentally superiors—it was ridiculous.

Some people can't seem to realize that the days of purity, self-sacrifice, ideals and all that bunk are gone forever. We are living in a modern world—a world of "get out of life what you can and let the devil take the hindermost." Then too that phrase "doubtful pleasures." What could our freshman have meant by that. Doesn't he know that all that sort of thing is relative. There is no such thing as evil or wickedness—merely the standards of the times in which one happens to be living.

We have one thing to be thankful for: fewer and fewer people who possess the innate ability to think are going to church. It's a fine thing to tell children about love and righteousness; but when a boy goes to college, it is time that he woke up to the fact that he is a man. He will soon see that if he ever expects to get anything out of life, if he ever expects to enjoy the real things of life and make a lot of money, why he has got to climb the ladder of true success by stepping on the faces of others, though it may seem hard to him at first. Yes, "R. H.," that article of yours was great. We would all be a whole lot better off here in Chapel Hill if everybody would use any common horse sense he too might happen to have. Congratulations again.

Forever,
A DISILLUSIONED SENIOR.

ANOTHER WORD ON RELIGION

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

The very naive but utterly unconvincing editorial published in the Tar Heel last Wednesday and headed "This Question of Religion" is very illustrative of a group among us who would seek to justify their every action by calling it modern, and who would scoff at those who love religion as dogmatic Puritans or sad-faced Quakers.

The author stated that stories of faith, divine love, and righteousness in the modern world are fables and admonishments that are absurd. It seems just possible that such stories might not affect everybody in the same way. He went on to say that there is no place for monastic seclusion. As his letter was written in opposition to a previous letter advocating going to church once a week, we wonder if that is what he meant by monastic seclusion; or just what the devil did he mean. He then said that religion is being infused more and more with common sense in spite of the combative forces of the pulpit. This leads some of us to wonder when he last saw a pulpit. It would lead those of us who have had that opportunity to the unreasonable conclusion that it was some time during the middle ages. He stated further that we have ceased to draw stringent lines between good and bad. Some of us wonder if those who avail themselves of this convenience wouldn't find it more convenient to remove the lines altogether and justify themselves by their worn out slogan that there isn't any Hell. The author spoke of the absurd disputes between one Protestant denomination and another. This leads us to wonder whether he read of these disputes out of some medieval history book or whether he opened his eyes to life around him. If he had followed the latter path it seems just possible: that he might have seen all Protestant denominations at Chapel Hill uniting on various occasions in common services in Memorial hall, that he might have seen all the student societies of the various denominations meeting together to discuss their common aim, that he might have been surprised to see the number of Christians of one denomination attending the services of another.

The author then spoke of the big business church in which the financial magnate leads the congregation and adds, somewhat sarcastically, "What a group this comprises!" There are many of us who would rather have had him say openly just what a group he does think this comprises. If it were possible with his apparent knowledge of churches to state the exact figures it is probable that this group would not appear so enormous. That some few churches may have in their congregations those who take pride in an outward show of wealth and generosity, and that these individuals may deceive many is not denied; but this is neither a general rule nor the teaching of Christianity which says that the widow casting in her mite put in more than all the rest. The author continued in saying that religion will never be the idealistic dream one pictures in childhood. Whether this be true in the case of the author we do not know, but there are many of us who wonder if this gentleman isn't taking just a little too much for granted in assuming that religion is an idealistic dream to everybody and that those who hold contrary views are children. He stated that it will always be an idealistic dream because human nature is quarrelsome, trivial, petty, intolerant, and unthinking. Are these qualities in human nature arguments against religion or do they all the more emphasize its need? Did the author omit one important quality in human nature, "Love"?

A SOPHOMORE.

The College Honor System

ARTICLE IV.

Some Specific Problems

It is the hope of the National Student Federation that all colleges in the United States will give careful attention to the question of the Honor System and make an honest endeavor to do something of value about the question of honesty among students. A keen critic of student affairs and college administration has penned the statement "that the college that winks at dishonesty in scholastic work and other student relations is doomed." Colleges must assume the responsibility of inculcating into the students firm principles of right dealing with their fellows.

But the problem is not to know what the weakness is, but it is to determine how best to remedy this weakness. A large majority of the student representatives at the Fourth Annual Congress of the N. S. F. A. last December expressed confidence in the uplifting power of the Honor System. Therefore, the N. S. F. A. recommends this system to colleges that do not have it; and to colleges that do have it, the N. S. F. A. expresses an intense desire that they exert every possible effort to make the system as efficient as possible.

But the question arises: "Should every college attempt to institute the Honor System?" To do so would hardly display wisdom. There are some colleges in which the Honor System is not needed, e. g., institutions in which all the examinations are conducted orally. There are others in which certain local conditions militate against its successful operation. But in the vast majority of the state, city, denominational, privately endowed, and teachers' colleges, as well as the normal schools, there is opportunity for much development in this field.

However, before any college attempts to adopt the system, the field should be thoroughly prepared by faculty members and student leaders. There is reason to believe that this was done prior to its adoption at the University of Virginia, even, in the summer of 1842. Even that institution, where the Honor System works certainly and swiftly, and where there is a tradition against cheating that has existed for nearly a hundred years, does not urge a college to adopt the system before the field has been thoroughly prepared. They say: "We have the amplest faith in the Honor System and believe that with proper care it could be successfully introduced into almost every American university and would be a salutary influence; but before beginning its introduction, we urge thoughtful, thorough and patient preparation of the field:

"1. By such general, pervasive conferences with the students as would produce practically unanimous conviction of the merit of the system in the minds of the student body.

"2. By the election to the Honor Committee of men and women who enjoy the amplest confidence of their fellow-students as to integrity, courage, sanity and sagacity.

"3. By agreement upon impartial and inevitable execution of such a uniform penalty for violation of the honor code as the Honor Committee shall impose, with no mitigation, pardon or suspension of sentence.

"4. By the rigorous exclusion from the purview of the committee of all offenses which are not true breaches of honor.

"5. By securing the unanimous consent of the president, professors and officers of the University to cry hands off and leave the student body the whole responsibility for dealing with well-defined breaches of honor.

"To neglect any one of these five precautions will be, in our opinion, to invite shipwreck," says this great institution.

The installation or administration of the Honor System requires much work that is spiritual, inspirational and intangible. The students must be educated concerning principles of honor. It must be shown them that they are trusted, but that if they abuse the trust, they will surely be punished. The work of an Honor Committee should be educational instead of corrective; it should be their aim to prevent dishonesty, rather than to punish it.

One thing is beyond question. Before an Honor System can function successfully, a spirit of Honor must be inculcated into the students. An educational program extending probably over a period of three or four years will be necessary. A strong tradition in favor of the Honor System is its greatest asset.

The Campus

By Joe Jones

Of a recent afternoon Professor Koch and a small group of students were told by Dean Hibbard the difference between providence and fate. This is how it came about: Dean Hibbard and Professor Koch and several students came out of Old South and got into Dean Hibbard's brand new Ford. The dean choked the engine several times before he got it started, and Professor Koch chuckled.

"Don't laugh," said Dean Hibbard, "or I'll tell about your backing episode."

"Oh, I'll tell that myself," said Professor Koch. "Boys, Dr. Hibbard and I once had a narrow escape together. One day before Bingham hall and the new library had been built I parked my car among the trees down back of Murphey. Dr. Hibbard was with me when I got in to go home, and he was tickled when I was unable to make the car back after I had started the engine. It wouldn't budge. 'Well, she's simply got to back out of here,' I said, as I stepped on the gas quite heavily. She backed out, all right. She gave a sudden leap and went backward through the trees at full speed. It was certainly only by the grace of providence that we came through without hitting a tree."

"Calling that an act of providence," said Dean Hibbard, "reminds me of an experience I had in a classroom of Old East some years ago. You know Old East was once a classroom building with three big rooms on each floor. I was teaching an English class in one of these rooms one day with the members of the class scattered about here and there over the big room. I asked them to move over to the right side of the room as I could then address them better. So all the boys on the left changed their seats, and you would never guess what happened as they sat down. Well, the ceiling on the left caved in and crashed down on the seats the boys had just vacated. Now I call that an act of providence. Of course if the ceiling on the right had fallen in that would have been fate."

The young lady who sat in the tan alligator upholstered Isotta Fraschini parked on Franklin street for a few minutes on a recent afternoon may have felt like she was in a showcase, but she didn't appear that way. In fact, she was nonchalance supreme as the crowd of what she must have thought were boorish oafs gathered on the sidewalk and naively stared at her and her magnificent motor ultra de luxe etc. Her escort, too, when he put in his stylish Park Avenue appearance, was serenely oblivious of the gaping crowd. He expertly backed the great roadster out into the middle of the street, and drove around to the D. K. E. house, where he was visiting a relative. The car, by the way, cost about as much as thirty new Fords, something like fifteen or twenty thousand dollars.

New Dorms And Betas Clash For Campus Title

Leaders in Two Leagues Play This Afternoon for Tag Football Championship; Neither Team Defeated.

GAME CALLED AT THREE

Beta Theta Pi and New Dorms meet this afternoon at 3 o'clock in Kenan stadium to decide the campus tag football title. Neither the Betas nor the New Dorms has lost a game this season, both teams having won all games in their respective leagues.

The two teams will not only be playing for the campus title this afternoon but also for a turkey dinner. Dean Paulsen, proprietor of the Smoke Shop, has issued an invitation to the campus title holders to attend a dinner at his expense some time next week.

Beta Theta Pi defeated D. K. E. after the two teams had played a scoreless tie in the first game. Not only did these two teams tie in the score made but also in the number of first downs. In the second game with the Dekes, the Betas barely won by a margin of four first downs. D. K. E. had previously defeated Pi Kappa Phi, last year's champions, in a hard fought game.

New Dorms has come through the season with apparently easy wins in every game and have placed three men on the first all-campus team which was selected by the intramural department. Beta placed only one man on the first team but secured three positions on the second.

Due to the fact that the fraternity league has been playing seven men on their teams this year and the dormitories have been using eleven men per game the lineup for this afternoon will contain nine men on each team, leaving out the guards.

The probable lineups are:

Beta Theta Pi		New Dorms
Moody	End	Smith
Anderson, H.	End	Henry
Bradham	Tackle	Carpenter
Follin	Tackle	Williamson
Anderson, J.	Center	Hill
Race	Quarter	Dunlap
Glenn	Half	Choate
Waugh	Half	Love
Dresslar	Full	Higdon

Passing Game Likely

The Carolina-Duke clash in Durham Saturday promises to bring out two great passing attacks. Duke's Buie to Robeson and Buie to Warren combinations have produced many a thrill for the North Carolina fans this year and many a gain for Duke. The Tar Heels have three fine passers in Jimmy Maus, Jimmy Ward and Jim Magner and any number of fine receivers, who have accounted for 16 Tar Heel touchdowns by the aerial route this year.

Team Fifth in Nation

The Tar Heels' 298 points has put them in fifth place in the nation's scoring race, led by Southern California with 400. Only the Trojans, Colgate with 315, Ohio with 306 and Dartmouth with 305, stand above North Carolina. The Tar Heels will be fighting for a state title against Duke Saturday, but they will also be fighting to climb on up the scoring ladder.

Spen not where you may save; spare not where you must spend. —Anon.

("Heinie")

Jim Magner rose a notch among the southern all-stars when the Associated Press picked him in their selection of the All-Southern team. The United Press recently picked Jim on their third team while Branch was on the second All-Southern eleven.

In addition to Magner and Branch, five other Tar Heels were given positions or honorably mentioned for positions on the All-Southern teams. Ray Farris led the Tar Heels by being unanimously voted a guard berth mainly because he is one of the few triple threat guards in the country. Among those receiving honorable mention were Lipscomb, Holt, Adkins and Spaulding.

Jim Magner was probably selected for his All-Southern post mainly because of his outstanding work against Georgia Tech and Georgia.

Johnny Branch has shown such spectacular work all season and especially against Georgia Tech, that his large number of votes for All-Southern can be easily accounted for.

Lipscomb was not only picked for honorable mention by the Associated Press but the NEA service also gave him a claim to a pivot post on the All-Southern aggregation.

Holt, Adkins and Spaulding have shown up so well in every game that they played in that hardly any one or two games can account for their positions in the AP's All-Southern lineup. Don Holt has demonstrated his ability at the end by the small number of gains that opponents have made around his wing this season. Yank Spaulding has shown himself to be North Carolina's most consistent hard driving back and his line plunges and passing in nearly every game have accounted for several Carolina scores, while he has scored more than two-thirds of the extra points made by the Tar Heels.

Pot Adkins has used his two hundred and thirty odd pounds to such great advantage that the Tar Heel line can boast of three linemen mentioned in the various All-Southern selections.

public, particularly the parents, on the needs and on the usefulness of the school. T. W. Valentine, principal of Hendersonville high school, writes an article on "The Correlation of English and Latin Teaching in High School." H. D. Meyer, of the University faculty, explains the coordination of the boy scout movement and the high school, as practiced in several cities in the United States.

Special departments, conducted by members of the staff of the school of education, include the editorial comment by Dr. Walker, the Latin column by Professor J. M. Gwynn, the science column by Professor C. E. Preston, a Parent-Teachers' Association column by Mrs. Raymond Binford, a list of children's books by Miss Nora Beust, book notes, field notes, and a review of worthwhile articles in educational magazines.

Ned Lipscomb

Ned Lipscomb, Tar Heel center, has been selected by both the Associated Press and the NEA Service as one of the most promising pivot men in the South and honorably mentioned for the mythical All-Southern selection.

FROSH TENNIS OUTLOOK GOOD

Grant and Hines Head List of First Year Net Aspirants.

With two men going into the finals of the University tennis tournament, it looks as though the freshmen are going to have a better lineup than the varsity this season. For that matter there are several more frosh who can give the varsity all they want when it comes to putting a tennis ball over the net into the right spot at the right time. The freshman aggregation holds more individual titles than the varsity. Ed Yeomans, of the varsity net team, at present holds the state singles title and was runner-up in the South Atlantic meet. Bill Merritt, playing with Mort Schapiro, went into the finals in the state doubles last spring.

But let's look over the freshman accomplishments. Wilmer Hines, who hails from Columbia in the Palmetto state, holds the southern junior singles title, and is seventh ranking junior player in the United States. Bryan Grant, young Atlanta star, annexed the southern amateur title last year, and before he passed out of the age limit ranked fifth in national junior tennis. Lenoir Wright, Charlotte lad, holds the state prep title and is third ranking player on the freshman team. First and second places lie between Grant and Hines, who have yet to finish their University title tilt.

Other prominent aspirants for places on the freshman squad are: Lu Abels, West Lexington; Bob Barnett, who gives his home address as Shanghai, China, but took his high school work in this state; Al Lansford, Charlotte; Garrison Reid, Winston-Salem; and Billy McKee, Chapel Hill. Excepting Hines and Grant, practically all the freshman material comes from this state.

House Ready for Duke

After a season in which he has been hampered much of the time with injuries, Henry House, plunging Tar Heel fullback, is in his best shape of the year, and is being counted on for some fine work against Duke Saturday. House, the boy who ripped the Duke line up last year, is conceded to be the hardest driver on the Tar Heel squad.

All-State Team

Carolina students are urged to send in their choice for a mythical All-State team to the Tar Heel office at once. This is necessary in order that the student body's selection may appear in Saturday's issue of the Tar Heel.

RIVAL CAPTAINS OLD TEAMMATES

When Carolina and Duke line up in Duke's new stadium to settle the 1929 state championship, a couple of fellow townsmen and former teammates will be leading their charges from opposite sides.

Ray Farris, Tar Heel captain, and Henry Kistler, Duke captain, both come from Charlotte, and both played high school ball there.

Both men rate ace-high among individual performers on the rival elevens. Farris is making left guard on every all-Southern selection. He got more votes than any other lineman in the Associated Press poll. Kistler has been injured much of the season, but he has starred every time he was in shape.

It would be a great fight if the two were to be pitted against one another Saturday, but fans will probably see the scrappy linemen in action on different sides of the line.

Captain Farris plays left guard, and Kistler plays left tackle, so they will be on opposite sides when the two teams face across the line of battle.

It is odd enough that Farris, whose great college play ranks the Tar Heel captain the leading lineman in the South, was inferior to Kistler as a high school player.

The Tar Heel lineman was a halfback at Charlotte High and none too good at that. The coaches didn't think he'd make the grade in college.

Kistler, on the other hand, was one of Charlotte High's best linemen, but a recurring injury has greatly hampered his college career.

The rival captains are very nearly the same size and play very much the same type of smashing, charging game. Both are six-footers. Kistler weighs 190, Farris 185.

POLK CHAPTER OF U. D. C. MEETS

The regular meeting of the Leonidas Polk chapter of the U. D. C. was held at the home of Mrs. Harry Comer Tuesday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

Plans were discussed for sending Christmas boxes to the Old Ladies Home in Fayetteville and to the Old Soldiers Home in Raleigh. Mrs. J. H. Anderson gave a resume of the recent general convention in Biloxi, Miss., displaying numerous souvenirs of the convention.

Mrs. W. S. Bernard read an account of a Christmas in the '60's by Mrs. Ellis of Raleigh. This paper had won a prize at a former convention.

The next meeting of the U. D. C. will be held at the home of Mrs. A. A. Kluttz, Tuesday afternoon, January 7.

Three Backfields

With Magner and Wyrick, backfield aces, slated to return to the line-up, the Tar Heels will probably hurl three full backfields at Duke Saturday in their quest of an undisputed claim to another state title. Backs who seem slated to carry the brunt of the Carolina attack are Wyrick, Branch and Jackson, quarters; Ward, Magner, and Maus, left halfbacks; Nash, Slusser and Erickson, right halfbacks; and Spaulding, House and Harden, fullbacks.

Inter-Fraternity Conference Held In N. Y. Last Week

The Interfraternity Conference, which held a two-day session at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York last Friday and Saturday, urged hastening the affiliations of students with fraternities in order to help them to get down to the business of study.

The meeting decided, after examining reports from 122 various colleges, that "Three weeks is sufficiently long enough for a freshman getting acquainted and receiving a bid."

The meeting also recommended that initiation be deferred until the student has maintained at least an average of C in 12 credit hours.

The question of a definition of a house mother arose. The response was, "a woman old enough to have the judgment and understanding of a mother of sons of college age, who will act as a social mentor for a fraternity, help in the administration of its house, et cetera." To those seeking a house mother, it was suggested that they look for a woman who has the qualities summed up in the old fashioned word "breeding."

The discussion of a topic, "Resolved, that national Greek letter fraternities should cooperate to engage a salaried business man who will supervise the business affairs of the fraternities on the campus," was held and the only conclusion that was arrived at was that the college bursar assume those duties, without cost.

Y Officials Seek Payment of Pledges

Of the large number of students who made pledges to the Y. M. C. A. at registration this fall, about half have paid. At that time a number requested and secured extension of time for payment of the pledges. However, at the present time Y officials state that there is a definite need for payment of the remainder of the pledges. The chief source of income for the local organization is the student pledge.

Statements are being mailed to delinquents asking payment. It is also requested that students who cannot stop by the Y to pay and receive membership cards mail the amount of the pledges to the Y with a request that membership card be mailed.

At the Carolina

"The Hollywood Revue," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's musical extravaganza, received the most enthusiastic ovation ever given a talking picture in this city at its opening Wednesday at the Carolina theatre.

This new musical extravaganza proves to be a sensational follow-up for the immensely popular "The Broadway Melody." Designed on the order of a sumptuous Broadway revue, it contains not only the pick of song, dance and monologue talent from the M-G-M studio, but also a number of outstanding stage celebrities.

Twenty new songs make their appearance in this production. Sammy Lee, who staged a number of Ziegfeld shows as well as other New York musical productions, was in charge of the chorus of seventy-two carefully selected girls and boys and has turned out ensemble numbers that could not be beaten on any stage. Harry Rapf, unit producer, has accomplished something for which he may well be proud.

Rapf personally supervised and produced every scene in the big production, which Charles F. Reisner directed. Fifteen famous song writers contributed music—hundreds of players and dancers appear; there are twenty song hits, and stars such as Marion Davies, Norma Shearer, John Gilbert, Joan Crawford, William Haines, Buster Keaton, Bessie Love, Jack Benny, Conrad Nagel, Marie Dressler, Polly Moran, the Brox Sisters, Albertina Rasch Ballet, Natacha Nattova Dancers, Cliff "Ukelele Ike" Edwards, Karl Dane, George K. Arthur, Charles King, Anita Page, Oliver Hardy, Stan Laurel, Gwen Lee, Gus Edwards and many others of note.

SOPH Y CABINET TO HOLD BANQUET

The sophomore cabinet of the Y will give its quarterly banquet next Monday night at the Methodist church at 6:30. Tickets for this banquet may be obtained for 35 cents from Ed Yarborough, Bill Bliss, J. Elwin Dungan, Harry Finch and other members of the cabinet.

This banquet will be the closing feature on the program for the fall quarter of the cabinet. During the past two months the cabinet has had on its programs numerous speakers. For the first month the topic for discussion was "Religion," and then for the second month the "Present Labor Situation" was the main subject. Every Monday night some professor, familiar with the subject made a talk on the topic for that month. The cabinet voted with but one dissenting vote in favor of labor unions at its meeting last Monday.

For two meetings of the month the cabinet would have a speaker on the program, and then the last two meetings would be taken up with a thorough discussion of the points brought up by the previous speakers.

Many Attend Auction

The Bull's Head book auction held yesterday by Professor Howard Mumford Jones in Murphey Hall was attended by a good crowd. The bidding was lively although it did not run very high. Those present were able to buy the books they wanted at very low prices in comparison to the usual selling prices. Approximately 115 books were sold including late works in poetry, drama, fiction, biography, and essays by some of the recent American authors.

This sale will make room for the new Christmas stock which has begun to arrive.

ANTI - PEDDLING LAW PASSED IN GOOD FAITH

whose interests were involved. To be assured of their approval a petition was circulated among them, enlisting their support.

Because they wished to protect themselves and the students, and to relieve the town of undesirables, all of the merchants signed the petition.

As was at first erroneously supposed, the ordinance does not discriminate against student salesmen. Since the law prohibits the sale of any article other than farm produce on the streets of the town, the outside dealer is eliminated. However, the University permits students to vend their wares on the campus and University property. Thus the students and merchants are given exclusive rights in this respect.

A. M. Covington, who is connected with the office of the University athletic association, has given a word of criticism for those among the merchants who have permitted out-of-town peddlers to stand in their doors while selling their products. Otherwise he believes that "instead of cursing the merchants for unfair play we should thank them for their cooperation."

Scouting Fraternity Will Be Organized Here Today

Alpha Phi Omega Begins Plans For Organization at University; Scout Executive Seminar Began Last Night.

Having as its general purpose the discussion of a continuance of Boy Scout activities among college students, a meeting, to which all former Scouts and others are invited, will be held in the University Y. M. C. A. on Friday morning at 9:30 o'clock. The discussions will be led by C. D. Chadwick, regional scout executive, who is here to participate in the Scout Executive seminar that is being conducted here.

During an interview with H. F. Comer, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., who is in charge of the seminar program in the absence of H. D. Meyer, member of the regional education committee, Mr. Comer state the reason for the meeting was an effort "to continue a live contact with scouting on a college man's level."

In order to promote this activity a fraternity for former scouts has been organized, Alpha Phi Omega. This organization is in most respect similar to the professional fraternities which are common on many campuses and which do not in any way conflict with the associations students may have contracted with social fraternities. The main objective in founding Alpha Phi Omega, according to Mr. Comer, was to keep alive scout interests in college life, and to keep ex-scouts in work which would be beneficient to them, and vice-versa.

The particular purpose of the meeting this morning will be the organization of a chapter of the fraternity in the University. It is of interest to know that since its inception the Alpha Phi Omegas have placed chapters in the following prominent institutions: Layfayette College,

FRESHMEN HEAR DR. ABERNETHY IN CHAPEL TALK

University Physician Outlines Purposes and Regulations Of Infirmary.

Dr. E. A. Abernethy, the University physician, spoke in chapel Thursday morning to the freshman class. Dr. Abernethy discussed briefly the purpose and regulations of the infirmary and left with the men a word of advice on availing themselves of its services.

Dr. Abernethy said that there has been a remarkably small amount of sickness this year. Injuries, too, have been few, and the infirmary has not at any time been pressed. The physician predicted, however, that the coming cold weather would be the cause of many colds, and he urged the men to consult him on any indication of sickness. He was particularly anxious to impress them with the importance of taking precautions against infection.

Dr. Abernethy said that the staff at the infirmary wishes to serve the student body in the best possible manner. Although a student may meet with little hospitality if he is not really sick, he is sure to receive a great deal of sympathetic interest if he is, Dr. Abernethy promised. As a last warning he declared that out of consideration to one's self and to one's fellow students a dormitory is no place to stay when sick.

Odum To Be Chief Speaker Y Banquet

Dr. Howard W. Odum, Kenan professor of sociology and director of the school of public welfare, has been chosen as principal speaker of the sophomore Y. M. C. A. cabinet banquet to take place Monday night at the Methodist church.

Dr. Odum is the author of two novels—Rainbow 'Round My Shoulder and Wings on My Feet—in addition to textbooks, the principal one being Man's Quest for Social Guidance. Dr. Odum is considered to be one of the outstanding sociologists in the south and the nation as a whole. The exact subject on which he will speak has not been announced but his talk will be centered around the Christmas idea. Tickets for the event can be secured at the Y office for 35 cents or from members of the group.

The banquet Monday night brings to a successful close the quarter's work of the sophomore cabinet. Nine speakers have been heard, three of which have come from off the campus—Dr. F. D. Seerley, Dr. A. Herbert Gray and Eugene Barnett.

In October Dr. Frank Graham spoke at the organization meeting of the freshman friendship council, which was sponsored by the sophomores, and was followed by C. Excell Rozelle, E. R. Mosher and H. D. Meyer.

For November W. F. Ferger, and Miss Harriett L. Herring discussed in detail the problems of labor confronting the state at the present time.

Officers who are serving the cabinet this year are: J. Elwin Dungan, president; F. M. James, vice-president; J. D. McNairy, secretary; Craig Wall, treasurer, and William Bliss, critic.

Henderson Returns From New York City

Dr. Archibald Henderson recently returned from New York City, where he delivered an address before the League for Political Education in the Town Hall. This organization is one of the greatest lyceum groups in the world.

The subject of Dr. Henderson's talk was Eugene O'Neil as a Dramatist, and he discussed him from a standpoint of world literature and world drama.

O'Neil, it will be remembered, is the author of The Emperor Jones, The Hairy Ape, The Great God Brown, The Fountain, Desire Under the Elm and Strange Interlude. These six masterpieces are among the finest dramatic works of today. Dr. Henderson names Bernard Shaw, Eugene O'Neil, and Luigi Prandello as the three greatest living dramatists of today.

Dr. Henderson is the only member of the University faculty who has spoken before the League for Political Education.

Faculty Members Go A Hunting For Turkey; Bring Back A Deer

(By Mary Price)

Not so very long ago a couple of students went a-hunting. The object of the hunt was deer, not dears, in any form. The total bag apparently consisted of one very flat tire—all of which was duly reported in these columns. Students will be students, however. Something was wrong with their technique. And five members of the faculty thereupon went out during Thanksgiving and showed them how.

The five, R. E. Coker, W. C. Coker, A. W. Hobbs, A. W. Knight, and W. W. Pierson, shouldered their guns, and blithely set out for the great wide open spaces where animals are animals and hunting licenses can be used. The guns were loaded. The respective wives and children of the followers of Diana were duly bid farewell and the men started out—in search of turkeys.

It had to be turkey, of course. Who ever heard of Thanksgiving without turkey? They were also on the lookout for a few nice juicy cranberries, for cranberries are notoriously easy to kill and just as necessary for a successful Thanksgiving. So they set out.

The first one to spy possible quarry was R. E. Coker. He raised his trusty blunderbuss and fired, and there was a loud report. But wait. There was also a dead animal. For Mr. Coker, being a zoologist, knows his dead animals. In great excitement, the party ran to the place where the turkey or turkeys had fallen. The found a deer.

The deer was brought in to Chapel Hill in triumph. It was one of the largest and finest seen in these parts in a long time. But it wasn't a turkey. No matter how hard observers tried, they couldn't make a turkey out of it. It looked so different, to say nothing of the taste. Nevertheless, the party was voted a success, both before and after.

The previous hunting party went out after deer and brought home a flat tire. The faculty members, being more versed in hunting as in other branches of knowledge, went out after turkey and came home with deer. The difference is subtle, but it exists. Faculty members never come back empty-handed. They always catch something, or as numerous students will be willing to swear in three weeks, somebody. And nobody can now deny that Messrs Coker, Hobbs, Knight, and Pierson, are some hunters.

John B. Sale Tells Story Of Writing 'The Tree Named John'

(By Joe Jones)

Two Mississippians, two Virginians, and two North Carolinians were lunching together. John B. Sale, one of the Mississippians, was the guest of honor. His first book, The Tree Named John, was released from the University of North Carolina Press two months ago, and is even now going into its second printing. Written in an easy flowing dialect, and scupper brimmed with the quaint lore of the old plantation servants, The Tree Named John is, of all books having to do with the southern Negro, one of the most delightful.

Mr. Sale, a broad-shouldered and affable giant, without affectation, sat at the right hand of the hostess, and in the slowest and richest of southern drawls answered at length the ready questions concerning his book and his work in the field of the Negro folk ways.

"It was Professor Painter of Mississippi State College for Women who encourage me to attempt the book," he said. "He never tired of hearing me tell old plantation tales, and when I began to consider writing I went to him. 'Surely,' he said, 'go ahead; with all your knowledge of the subject you ought to be able to do it.'

"It was hard work for me at first, and even yet I can't write if I don't feel like it. I don't think anybody can write anything good if they don't feel like writing. My hunt and peck system of typing also slowed me up a great deal; but in due time the book was finished.

"Well, the Painters and I racked our brains for a name for it, but somehow nothing we could think of seemed just right. It was Mrs. Painter who finally had the inspiration. I used to read to the Painter children a great deal, and one evening when I was absent one of them said 'Mother, isn't the man named John going to read to us anymore?' 'The man named John—the tree named John!' said Mrs. Painter. 'There's the name for the book.'

"I considered for some time before deciding on the publishers, but I am well satisfied with the University Press. One of the bigger publishers would no doubt have pushed the book more at the outset, but only for a short time; whereas the Uni-

Why Men Go To College

Why do men go to college? This question has been considered in scores of magazine articles and books, it has been the chief topic of numerous education conferences and the subject matter of innumerable campus "bull sessions" during the past year. College students seem to be developing a greater interest in problems of the curriculum; they are devoting more thought to a consideration of what constitutes the real benefits of a college education than ever before.

A few years ago most undergraduates had a hazy idea of the real purpose for which they were attending college. Vague indeed were the reasons assigned by the average undergraduate for his decision to secure a higher education. But the present-day college generation seems to have a fairly clear-cut idea of why it is in school, of what constitutes the real opportunities and the real benefits of the curriculum and of college life.

Surveys conducted by the Dean of Students office here recently indicate that most University of North Carolina undergraduates have a definite conception of their own problems and those of the institution. The enhancement of their cultural capabilities, with an attendant increase in happiness and satisfaction, and the development of an increased ability to make money are the chief reasons given by practically all of the University undergraduates for their decision to enter college.

In this connection the recently published "ten-year book" of the class of 1917 at Princeton is of interest. A decade after graduation, these successful business and professional men (all of them with the exception of one or two have already attained some degree of financial success) voted overwhelmingly that a "Princeton education helped." "In general," the editors report, "the alleged benefits of a Princeton education were fairly evenly distributed under the following heads: general culture background, mental discipline, increased ability to think clearly, awakened appreciation of finer things in life, creation of a desire for further knowledge, friendships made and a better understanding of other men, technical equipment for professional life, self-confidence acquired, and a better scale of values established."

It is also of interest to note that the members of the class had an annual income of $7,800 each after they had been out of college ten years. The average salary of members of the class is $8,067, and the average total income $13,127. The figure of $6,000 is the median salary—the salary which is midway between the highest and the lowest. The distinction between the median salary and the average salary is explained by the editors of the book who point out that "a few abnormally high figures unduly inflate the general averge"; thus, "if three men receive $3,000, $5,000 and $70,000, the average jumps to $26,000 but the median remains at $5,000."

These statistics indicate that a college education is desirable from a financial standpoint, but the opinions of the members of the class as to what were the real benefits they secured from college are of greater significance. They are worthy of close study.

The student who comes to college for four years of week-end pleasures and indolence are fortunately decreasing in numbers, and the new undergraduate generation is interested primarily in securing the greatest benefits possible from their four-year sojourns at institutions of higher learning.

Freshman Caps At N. C. State

Recently at N. C. State college a freshman was found guilty of not wearing his regulation red freshman cap for 13 days and condemned by the student council to wear a dress for 13 days and to pay a fine. Later the sentence was modified so that the boy was forced to wear a conspicuous head gear instead of a dress; the fine remained the same. Such action was taken as the result of the regulation of the student government constitution.

This incident brought to the forefront the whole question of freshman caps. After an extensive discussion the students of the college voted to continue the practice of forcing freshmen to wear caps.

To us the whole business seems utterly ridiculous and far too much like a prep school to be becoming to any college. When we entered the University Mr. Hibbard greeted our class with the admonition, "Remember you are college men and not college boys. Of course you will have your jokes and pranks, but you are no longer boys." Making men wear conspicuous and unbecoming caps is neither dignified nor justifiable. It is wholly out of harmony with the whole spirit of college training and college student government; it is a remnant of the old practices of hazing, initiations, and similar horse play.

In forcing the State boy to pay some penalty, the student council was only carrying out the duties of its office. But we submit it is a pretty sorry state of affairs when a college group, supposedly the most intelligent, the most enlightened, the most cultured group of young people to be found anywhere, finds it necessary to make its new members go through humiliating practices, wear unbecoming and conspicuous clothes, and stand branded as queer boids. When a college group becomes like a high school fraternity, a prep school organization, a thoroughly puerile and childish thing, then indeed the aims and ideals of the student group have been submerged for petty regulations. How can a freshman ever come to feel that he is a real member of the group when always he is reminded by his cap that he is doing penal duty and is yet a sort of bastard son of the group?

Carolina is the only institution in the state not requiring the freshman cap; Carolina men have never felt it was in harmony with the system of student government and the general aspect of student life. Perhaps the other institutions of the state have not reached the point of development we have, or perhaps a tyrannical group is "lording it over" the members of the group. With the growth of all the educational institutions in size, we hope there will be a corresponding growth in the conduct of student affairs.

Readers' Opinions

AN OLD GRAD SPEAKS

For the past three years I have been deprived of the pleasure of seeing the Tar Heels play any football, since I have been living in the far South, where they have not played since 1922, when they met Tulane in New Orleans. Recently I returned to God's Country to live and saw Carolina play Georgia and Virginia. I am proud of this year's team. I have seen Tulane, Alabama, Vanderbilt, Kentucky, L. S. U., and several other prominent southern teams in action for the past three years, and I frankly say that this year's football team of Carolina can beat any of them when playing heads-up football, such as they displayed against Georgia. Right now, Carolina stands an excellent chance to lead the nation in points scored. Most of the leaders have ended their seasons, while Carolina has yet to meet Duke. Here's hoping the Terrible Tar Heels can run up forty or more points on the (Awfully Blue) Devils, to put them in the van of the nation's team in scoring.

Before I close, there's just one other thing I want to get off my chest. I know the students, coaches and players dislike to hear the alumni gripe about this thing and that thing, but with the best of spirit I want to say that I don't like those golden jerseys the team wears at times. To begin with, I can see no connection between the university and that color, and in the second place it is a very unattractive color. If the coaches must do something along these lines of psychology why not stick to the beautiful colors of Carolina and dress the team up in white jerseys, with light blue leather strips. The University of Alabama football team wear white jerseys with red leather strips and it makes a very pleasing appearance. I can think of no combination more pleasing to the eye than to see Carolina's Terrible Tar Heels strutting around in white jerseys with the light blue trimmings.

Here's hoping you will publish this in your Open Forum, and that Messrs, Woollen and Collins will adopt this type of jerseys next season.

Respectfully,
R. H. CAIN, '26

HALLELUJAH, WE ARE SAVED!

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

The soul-savers of Chapel Hill who are responsible for the law prohibiting the sale of all articles except food and drugs between 6:30 and 8:30 o'clock on Sunday evening have placed themselves in a class with the perverted blue-law makers of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and with the aborigines of Tennessee.

Last Sunday I attempted to buy a package of victrola needles at 7 o'clock, but the clerk, rather forlornly told me that I would have to wait until 8:30 to buy them. (I finally managed to secure some from him as a gift, though.) A friend who tried to buy cigarettes at the same time, also met with failure. (P. S. Although he was not sold any, a package was given to him.) The same person could not obtain an ordinary beverage unless he had a drop of ammonia put into it in order to bring it under the head of drugs.

Besides the obvious annoyances of such occurrences, there are the consequent inconveniences. Why, in a community like Chapel Hill, which calls itself progressive, are such stupidities tolerated? If only the moralists would let the damned be damned.

The College Honor System

ARTICLE V.

Editor's Note: This series of articles on the Honor System is being printed simultaneously in all the college newspapers in the United States. A series of five short articles dealing with matters pertaining to the Honor System will follow. This release is being made by the committee on the Honor System for the National Student Federation of the United States of America, with a hope that the students of this country will give serious thought to the problem of student honesty in our colleges, and that they will send to the Fifth Annual Congress of the National Student Federation representatives who have well-thought-out ideas concerning this matter. The Fifth Congress will meet at Stanford University on January 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, 1930.

These articles were prepared by James Theodore Jackson, chairman of the committee on the Honor System. The writer would be glad to hear from students concerning this problem. Please address him at P. O. Box 958, University, Alabama.

Hints on Organization of the Honor System

The term "Honor System" is used to connote the formal recognition and adoption by students and faculty of a system of mutual responsibility among students for honesty in scholastic work and other college activities. However, it has been said recently by an astute observer of students and a keen viewer of the trend of modern student thought that "the only way in which the problem of student government will ever be worked out successfully will be to perfect a joint organization among the students and faculty combined." This statement furnishes a challenge to American students. Is it correct? Cannot students now govern themselves successfully?

A majority of the students who discussed the Honor System at the Fourth Congress of the N. S. F. A. were of the opinion that the Honor System is more efficiently managed when the council is composed exclusively of students. However, in some institutions, a mixed committee functions successfully. The composition of honor councils ranges all the way from those composed entirely of students to those composed entirely of faculty members. Each institution must work out this problem for itself.

In order to be most effective, the Honor System should be somewhat limited in its scope. It should be made to apply to certain definite phases of student life, and it should be thoroughly understood by the students that, when the system is violated, punishment will follow swiftly and certainly. It is not the severety of the punishment that counts; it is its certainty. The penalty should be as severe as the exigencies of the conditions demand. In some colleges the only punishment for the violation of the Honor System is permanent expulsion; in others, it consists of a deprivation of college credits; in still others it consists in a deprivation of social privileges or in a simple reprimand. Some institutions publish the names of the convicted students; however, a majority of them favor withholding the name of the offender.

Generally speaking experience has shown that the regular student body governing council can administer the Honor System better than a special honor committee. However, in some institutions the duties of the student officials are so heavy that a special committee is a necessity. There are a number of notable exceptions to the general rule state.

The system of organization should be simple. A simple process should be worked out whereby a student can be given a fair and impartial trial. Some institutions provide for a second trial on appeal, which is public. Few public trials have been held within the history of the Honor System, but, when they have occurred, they have been gruesome things. It is generally thought best to provide for a final appeal to the president of the college, or to some designated faculty committee, before a student is permanently expelled.

Many students think that the aim of the Honor System should be to exclude cheaters; many believe that an attempt should be made to rehabilitate offenders.

Secret student spies whose duty it is to report violators of the system have been found to be of little value.

Regardless of what individuals may think about the salutary influence of the Honor System, it is a fact that students are crying out against the wholesale cheating that is going on in some of our American colleges which rely wholly upon the cleverness of the instructors or proctors to detect cheaters. Many of these students came to the Congress of the N. S. F. A. last December searching for something to substitute for the faculty espionage system, while some came hunting methods and information that would enable them to improve their Honor Systems. It is high time that something definite be done toward solving this problem of student honesty.

The N. S. F. A. is deeply interested in this question and it urges serious thought, expression, and action upon it. The Association of American Colleges is also interested in it to the extent that they are now conducting a survey of the system as it exists in the United States.

ANENT RUSSELL'S LIBERALISM

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I see in an editorial in today's Tar Heel on Bertrand Russell's lecture here a reference to his liberalism, "so liberal that the faculty of the University of Wisconsin objected to his being allowed to speak before the Liberal Club of that institution."

If this is true, I have not heard of it happening in the last year. I think probably the event referred to was the ban two years ago, not on Bertrand Russell, but on his wife, Mrs. Dora Russell, who was advertised to speak on matters entirely different from those considered by Bertrand Russell in his addresses—I forget the exact title, but her address was advertised in a most sensational manner as dealing with sex relations. My present object is not to argue the merits of the action taken regarding Mrs. Russell, but to point out that in this case the conflict centered, not around freedom of speech or liberality, but the propriety of the public discussion of certain matters. I had the pleasure of hearing Bertrand Russell that same year, not only in the University of Wisconsin, but under University auspices.

Sincerely yours,
W. F. FERGER.

NEW DORMS WIN FROM BETAS 7 - 6

Croson of "G" Dormitory Stars For Winners; H. Anderson Star Of Game.

By the narrow margin of one point New Dorms won the campus tag football championship from the Betas yesterday. The final score was 7 to 6. The game was fast and well played in spite of the fact that both teams were handicapped by the slippery turf of Kenan stadium.

Crowson kicked off for New Dorms, Anderson receiving the ball on his eight-yard line. Glenn's pass to Anderson fell short, but was followed by a second to Race for eighteen yards. On the next play Henry intercepted Glenn's pass and returned it to the Beta nineteen-yard line. Two passes, Higdon to Crowson, gave New Dorms a first down on the four-yard line. Choate lost five yards and Higdon passed over the goal line, the ball going to the Betas on the twenty-yard line. Race gained six yards around end, but two passes failed and Waddell punted to Higdon in midfield. Higdon passed to Crowson for ten yards as the quarter ended.

Two passes from Higdon to Dunlap failed, but Crowson completed a first down on the three-yard line, but Anderson tagged Smith for an eight-yard loss and Higdon's pass to Henry was broken up over the goal line. The ball went to the Betas on the twenty-yard line. Race lost three yards and Glenn passed to Anderson for forty-five yards. Two passes failed and Dressler punted to Higdon as the half ended.

Crowson kicked off to Anderson on the twenty-seven yard line. The Betas were unable to gain and Dressler punted to the New Dorms' forty-eight yard line. Higdon passed to Dunlap for eight yards. Two passes were broken up by Anderson and Crowson punted out of bounds on the one yard line. Dressler's punt was high and short and New Dorms got the ball inside the fifteen yard marker. A pass, Higdon to Dunlap, followed by another from Higdon to Crowson placed the ball six inches from the goal. Smith lost four years and Higdon passed to Crowson for a touchdown. On the try for the extra point, the Betas were offside.

Crowson kicked off to Anderson on the three-yard line. Dressler punted to Higdon on the thirty-five. Higdon's passes to Dunlap and Crowson were good for first downs, but on the third attempt he passed over the goal line and the Betas got the ball. Race lost seven yards, two passes were incomplete, and Dressler punted to Higdon. Higdon passed to Crowson for six yards. On the next play Waught intercepted a pass on his own thirty-yard line and ran seventy yards for a touchdown. The try for point failed.

Glenn kicked off to Higdon. The game resolved itself into a punting duel with the Betas having a slight edge. With a minute to play, Crowson punted to Waugh on the fifty yard line. A lateral pass, Race to Glenz to Bradham was good for twenty yards and was followed by a pass, Glenn to Follin which placed the ball on the ten-yard line. A pass failed as the game ended.

Higdon and Crowson starred for New Dorms. Henry Anderson of the Betas was the outstanding man on the field. He was in every play, breaking up passes and receiving passes for his own team. Glenn and Waugh were also good for the losers.

THEY SING THEIR SWAN SONG SATURDAY

Seven Linemen And Four Backs Don Uniforms For Last Time Against Blue Devils Saturday

Many Colorful Grid Careers To Be Ended In Duke Game Tomorrow.

HEEL LINE LOSES HEAVILY

Two Fullbacks And Two Halfbacks Play Last Games. Big Losses at Ends and Tackles.

Eleven of the University of North Carolina's most dependable gridiron warriors will carry the Blue and White colors for the last time in the Duke game at Durham Saturday. Their going will leave huge gaps for Coaches Collins, Fetzer and Cerney to fill next year.

The Tar Heel line will suffer the greatest blow for seven of the warriors who will be singing their swan song against Duke have earned their laurels in Carolina's great forward walls of 1926, 1927 and 1928.

The whole starting line, in fact, is to go, excepting the brilliant center Lipscomb and the fighting rookie guard, Fysal.

Losses in the line will be Captain Ray Farris, All-Southern guard; Bud Eskew, guard; Bill Koenig, Fenton Adkins and Puny Harper, tackles; and Don Holt and Julian Fenner, ends. All are lettermen except the gigantic 6 foot 6, 214-pound Harper, who has done fine relief work in this hs third season.

Backfield losses—Jimmy Ward and Phil Jackson, third-year halfbacks; and Yank Spaulding and Pap Harden, third-year fullbacks are less in point of number but just as heavy.

Ward, a triple-threater, has been running at a terrific clip all season, and is leading all Tar Heel and North Carolina scorers with 66 points.

Spaulding is second to Ward for Tar Heel scoring honorrs, third in the state, and one of the greatest defensive fullbacks ever seen in the south. Jackson and Harden are both hard, dependable runners and good all-round players.

One feature of the Carolina-Duke game will be the attitude of these men as they make their final bow to Duke.

During their years of varsity football the Tar Heels have never bowed to Duke and indeed have had Duke cross their goal line but once. Winning the game in Durham Saturday would make a clean record of three wins over Duke, and these boys are determined it shall be thus.

SOUTHERN CROSS COUNTRY CHAMPS AWARDED LETTERS

Eight Letters and Five Stars Awarded University Harriers; 12 Freshmen Get Numerals.

Awarding of monograms to eight members of the University's southern conference championship cross country team was announced yesterday by the University Athletic Council.

Both teams turned in exceptionally good records for the year. The varsity dropped a close early season meet to V. P. I., but won from State and Duke and placed second in the state freshman meet.

J. J. Alexander, of Charlotte, was awarded a letter for managing the varsity team, and monograms for cross country went to Captain Minor Barkley, Statesville; C. R. Baucom, Marshville; G. M. Cohen, Louisville, Ky.; J. J. Cohen, Chapel Hill; W. G. Lowery, Pineville; C. B. Phoenix, Greensboro; G. N. Pierce, Derby, N. Y.; and Creighton Wrenn, Garner. Stars were awarded Barkley, Baucom, G. M. Cohen, Lowery, and Wrenn.

The 12 members of the freshman team receiving cross country awards were J. C. Cox, Salisbury; T. L. Cordle, Greensboro; N. W. Lumpkin, Charlotte; M. M. Jones, Asheville; A. C. Jensen, East Orange, N. J.; H. W. Zelly, Roselle Park, N. J; J. C. Lewis, Fayetteville; F. M. Hawley, Portsmouth, Va.; J. G. Stikeleather, Asheville; W. W. Walker, Asheville; R. S. Caldwell, Charlotte; and W. M. Robey, Charlotte.

Bennett Improving

T. B. Bennett, Jr., a graduate student in structual engineering, went to Charleston, his home, just before the Thanksgiving holidays to undergo an operation for appendicitis. Latest reports state that he is improving as rapidly as can be expected.

A CORRECTION

It was stated in the Daily Tar Heel that Professor R. H. Wettach is the faculty adviser to the student editors of the Law Review but it should have been stated that he is editor-in-charge of the Law Review.

TEAM WORKS ON DEFENSE BEFORE MEETING DEVILS

Starting Line-up Intact, But Coaches Will Face Loss of Reserve Strength.

The Tar Heel football mentors concentrated yesterday on setting their defense lines for Duke, and on breaking in Phil Jackson at right halfback to replace the inujred Slusser and Erickson.

Slusser may play Saturday with a nose guard, but Coach Collins took no chances and worked the left halfback Jackson from the other side of the backfield all afternoon.

Coach Collins thought last night that there was little likelihood of Erickson playing Saturday. Erickson broke a finger Wednesday in the same scrimmage in which Slusser broke his nose.

The veteran starting eleven ran dummy scrimmage intact, but injuries to Slusser and Erickson have diminished greatly the Tar Heels' reserve backfield power.

Two elevens ran dummy scrimmage against freshman clubs running Duke plays today, while Jackson's eleven worked wholly on offense, to give the converted left halfback a look-in on the way the plays are run from the other side.

Dr. E. A. Abernethy Entertains Coaches

The coaches were honor guests at a dinner given by Dr. Eric A. Abernethy, physician to the football squad, and Mrs. Abernethy at their home last night.

There was no speech-making save a few words by Dr. Abernethy, who paid high tribute to the work of head Coach Chuck Collins and his chief assistants, Bill Cerney and Bob Fetzer.

The guests included Coach Chuck Collins and his brother Ed Collins, Notre Dame end; Coach Bill Cerney and Mrs. Cerney; Coach Bob Fetzer, Coach Jim Ashmore, Coach Rex Enright and Mrs. Enright; Coach Grady Pritchard and Mrs. Pritchard; Coach Dale Ransom; Coach John Kenfield and Mrs. Kenfield; President Harry W. Chase, Graduate Manager Charles T. Woollen and Mrs. Woollen; Trainer Chuck Quinlan and Mrs. Quinlan; R. W. Madry, director of the University News Bureau; Dr. Foy Roberson of the Athletic Council; and Dick Freeman, custodian of football equipment.

Charlotte And Goldsboro To Clash For State High School Title On Kenan Field Today

Teams Are Winners of East And West Class A Conferences.

KICK - OFF AT 2:30 P. M.

Both High Schools To Bring Bands; University Band To Play At Game Also.

The Charlotte-Goldsboro battle for the Class A North Carolina gridiron title, to be played in Kenan stadium here Friday, promises to pit against each other two well matched rivals.

Coach Skidmore's Queen City team easily proved the class of the Western Conference and came through its full league season undefeated, in addition to taking in tow such strong outside teams as Tech High of Atlanta.

Goldsboro dropped an early season game in the Eastern Conference, but fought its way to a percentage tie with Wilmington, then won a decisive 13-2 victory in the play-off with the team from the coast.

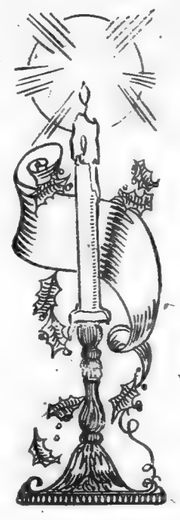
Goldsboro took over Wilmington's vaunted line attack, gained 126 yards to Wilmington's 86, rolled up 10 first downs to Wilmington's 6, and clearly had the better of the argument.

The Goldsboro team has been coming up steadily all year, while Charlotte has played tip-top ball all season. They stack up about even in size and weight, and both feature a varied driving and passing offense.

The game is to start at 2:30 o'clock, and from all indications Kenan stadium will seat a record high school football crowd.

A special holiday has been declared at Charlotte High, and large delegations from both cities are planning marches on Chapel Hill. Goldsboro supporters will have the South stands and Charlotte fans the North.

Freshmen Run Duke Plays For Varsity Though Season Over



The Carolina freshman football team officially ended its season sometime ago to complete their five game schedule (Southern Conference ruling) when they were defeated by the State frosh in Raleigh by the score of 19-0.

Although there are to be no more games, the Tar Babies will not disband until after the Carolina-Duke game. On Monday Coaches Enright and Sapp drilled the frosh with Duke formations to scrimmage the varsity.

Several hard scrimmages have taken place this week and it appears that the Tar Babies have succeeded in doing their duty towards helping to prepare the varsity for Saturday's contest.

In spite of the fact that the freshmen play no more games, there are still nearly 50 of the squad out for daily practice. A number of the players are still on the injured list, but none of them are in any way seriously hurt.

'A Christmas Carol' To Be Read By Koch

Professor Frederick Koch will give his 23rd annual reading of Charles Dickens' immortal ghost story, A Christmas Carol, at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon, December 8, in the Playmaker theatre.

To lend effective background to the reading, old English carols will be sung by Mr. and Mrs. George Lawrence and Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Harrer between the staves of the narrative. This has been a custom for some years.

The stage setting and the lighting will be under the supervision of Elmer Hall, technical director of the Playmakers.

The public is cordially invited to attend.

Thomas J. Wilson, Jr., registrar, has left for Lexington, Ky., where he will attend the annual meeting of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools of the Southern States.

Stanford Professor To Visit Dr. Trabue

Dr. T. L. Kelley, of Stanford University, will visit the University today to confer with Dr. M. R. Trabue, director of the bureau of educational research in the school of education, for the purpose of enlisting the services of this bureau in the work of the American Historical Association.

This association, of which Dr. Kelley is a member, is an endowed organization engaged in the investigation of history and other social studies in the schools.

The specific services which the University's bureau of educational research hopes to render this association are those of conducting a series of tests concerning the civic and social attitudes on the part of the students, and of standardizing and tabulating the results of these tests.

Annual Series of Weil Lectures Begins Today

Wilson.

The Weil lecture series grew out of an unendowed lectureship on American citizenship established by the University in 1914. Since that time this foundation, named the Weil lectures on American Citizenship, has been permanently established through the generosity of the families of Sol and Henry Weil of Goldsboro.

The first series of lectures was delivered by ex-President William H. Taft on "The Presidency: Its Powers, Duties, Obligations, and Responsibilities." The lectures for 1927-1928 were given by Prof. William H. Kirkpatrick, of Columbia University, on "Education and Citizenship in the Changing South.

Scouting Fraternity Will Be Organized

University of Pittsburgh, Cornell University, Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Northeastern Missouri State Teachers College, Stanford University, Northern Illinois State Teachers College, University of Virginia, Park College, Carnegie Tech, University of Kansas, and the University of Indiana.

This discussion and the organization of this fraternity should be of interest to a large number of former scouts in the University who still maintain an interest in the ideals and work. It has been found by the officials in charge of the Boy Scout program that there are a great many young men who lack but little of gaining high rank in the Boy Scout organization and who, if given encouragement and the means, would continue the program throughout their scholasitc careers.

All the former Scouts who have worked in one of the North Carolina Councils are acquainted with at least one of the group of executives who are attending the seminar this week. They are Thompson of Kinston; Brothers, the acting executive from Wilmington; Rivers of Goldsboro; "Country" Gorman of Reidsville; Stuckey of Wilson; "Uncle Jim" Girdwood, retired executive from Rocky Mount, and his successor, Nelson; Steere of Charlotte; Vaugh-Lloyd of Winston-Salem; Bunn Hackney, of Carolina basketball fame, of Kinston, and his assistant, Christopher; Humphrey of Raleigh; and Shield of Gastonia.

These men are taking work for credit requirements in the program for "The Growth of the Scout Executive." This year, under the direction of Mr. Meyer, they will attend two seminars, each giving 12 1-2 hours of credit. They are holding all their meetings in the Y. M. C. A. Last night was the occasion of their first conference. At that time Regional Executive Chadwick was in charge of the meeting, which was taken up with "a general presentation of the program and with putting the committees into operation," according to the program.

versity Press will probably give it good steady support for a long time.

"The book was finished about a year ago, and would have been published then, but there was some delay with the printers. Then it was to come out during the summer, but the University Press wrote me that they would like to illustrate the book, that they thought silhouettes would be good, and that Joe Cranston Jones of Augusta, Ga., was the man to do it. Well, I didn't like the idea of silhouettes; but I was tickled to think that my first book might be illustrated, so I told them to go ahead. The silhouettes turned out to be the very thing, and I have been extremely pleased with them.

"Joe Cranston Jones, by the way, is a most remarkable boy. In his infancy he experienced a sickness that left him crooked and deformed. He's now about twenty years old, and is unable to leave his wheel chair. Even his head is supported in a sling-like apparatus. His hands are the size of an eight-year-old boy's, but they are wonderfully developed otherwise. It is really marvelolus how he is able to make the silhouettes he does. He never draws or sketches them; just sits there and with his scissors cuts them from the blank paper. He has wonderful imagination. He has never been out of Georgia, yet he can make silhouettes of jungle scenes that are perfect, foliage and all. It is uncanny.

"Several reviewers have said that my own boyhood dialect in the book is too much like that of my colored playmate. The fact is, we talked alike. Until I was ten years old I scarcely heard any other language than the plantation negro dialect. I believe the reason my parents sent me off to school was so I would learn to talk properly.

"Henry Porter, my black playmate of forty years ago, died in Chicago last January with an attack of flu. If I had known he was so ill I would have gotten into my Ford and gone to him; but I didn't get word until it was too late. Henry was a desperate man and a wanderer, and somewhat like the negro in Dr. Odum's book he seldom lived within the law. The last time he was home he wanted me to go in business with him. He said we could get a house in Chicago and make big money by running an eating place in the front room, a gambling place in the back room, and a hotel upstairs.

"The tree named John died when it and I were about twenty years old. The winter that year was unusually severe, and the stock gnawed the bark off, and the tree died. Had Aunt Betsy been living then she would have been horrified in her firm belief that disaster to my name tree meant certain disaster to me. I have outlived the tree by twenty eight years."

The study of the southern negro and his beliefs has long been the hobby of Mr. Sale, and since the success of The Tree Named John he has turned his attention entirely to study and writing in this field. It has become his business. His knowledge of Negro folk ways and superstitions is illimitable. He can sing spirituals just as the Negro sings them. He knows the southern Negro as few white men do.

Deadline Senior Pictures Dec. 10; Not Be Extended

The deadline for senior pictures for the 1930 Yackety Yack has been set for the afternoon of December 10, and, according to present plans, will not be extended, according to an announcement of B. Moore Parker, business manager of the Yackety Yack. Parker states that approximately one-half of the class have had their pictures made to date, and that the remainder should be made as soon as possible in order to avoid a last minute rush.

All seniors who have had their pictures made and who have not yet selected proofs for them are requested by the business manager to select them by December 10. Otherwise Travis Brown, editor of the Yackety Yack, will make the selections.

Series Of Talks By Faculty Members Feature Meetings Of Scout Executive Seminar

Large Number of Scout Officials In Attendance; Fraternity To Be Organized.

The North Carolina Boy Scout Executive seminar that has been held here since Thursday evening was featured yesterday by a series of talks by members of the University faculty.

Beginning at 9 o'clock on Friday morning the executives and their assistants heard these speakers in the following order: Professor M. D. Taylor of the school of commerce, "Advertising and Publicity"; "The Boy and the Family" by Professor L. M. Brooks of the school of public welfare; Professor George McKie, "Public Speaking"; and a discussion of "Vocational Guidance," led by Henry Johnston.

Friday night at 9:30 a meeting of the ex-scouts of the University was held. The object of the meeting was the discussion of a continuance of scouting activities in college life among the hundreds of former Boy Scouts in the student body who are anxious to maintain an active contact with the work and principles of the organization.

The foremost object of the meeting last night was the organization of a North Carolina chapter of Alpha Phi Omega, a non-social fraternity to promote ex-scout activities among University students. There are ten chapters of the fraternity in prominent institutions of the nation. Among the best known of these are Stanford, Pittsburgh and the University of Virginia.

Since this seminar is one of the two that the executives have to attend to make their credit requirements for the year's educational program, all of the North Carolina leaders are in attendance at the meetings in the Y. M. C. A. In addition there are laymen, assistant executives, and scoutmasters who are taking the course.

The men are being housed in Steele dormitory in the quarters that are usually allotted to visiting football teams. In addition to attending the sessions of the seminar they are being permitted to observe the work of the University and hold conferences with faculty members. Several of them finished work on Friday in time to view a part of the state championship football game between the high schools of Goldsboro and Charlotte. There were boys on both teams who are members of the councils represented by Executives Steere of Charlotte and Rivers of Goldsboro.

Brooks Speaks At School Of Welfare

L. M. Brooks, of the University school of public welfare, was in Raleigh Thursday, where he spoke before the Bishop Tuttle school of public welfare at St. Augustine College for Negroes. His subject was "Modern Family Problems and Social Service."

Mr. Brooks' talk was the most recent in a series that has been made before the members of the Raleigh institute by members of the University faculty. These men are Howard W. Odum, R. M. Brown, G. H. Lawrence, H. W. Crane and W. B. Sanders.

Grail Dance

The Order of the Grail will stage its last dance of the quarter tonight in Bynum gymnasium. Tickets will go on sale at 8:30 p. m. in the rear of the gymnasium. The dance will begin at 9 o'clock. Music will be furnished by Alex Mendenhall and his Tar Heels.

BRAUNE RETURNS FROM TEST STUDY

Dean G. M. Braune of the school of engineering has returned from Boston where he has been observing a series of distortion tests on corrugated cast-iron pipe, made at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Dean Braune was invited to attend these tests as an observer because of the close similarity between them and a series of tests recently conducted by the University engineering school on culvert pipes.

The tests here were begun in 1923 and continued until 1927. Reports of the results are being published by the United States Bureau of Public Roads.

Henderson Receives Unique Wood Gifts

M. B. Aston of Goldfield, Nevada, recently presented to Dr. Archibald Henderson a penstaff, paper weight, and walking cane, all of which are made from wood of the tree made famous by Daniel Boone.

The tree from which these articles were made is located in Tennessee on Boone's Creek in Washington county. It was on this tree that the great pioneer and explorer inscribed with his hunting knife these words: "D. Boone cilled a Bar on this tree 1760."

This venerable tree, which was just recently blown down, was located on a plantation belonging to Mr. Aston's uncle. Daniel Boone spent much time hunting on the land which now comprises the plantation.

These three gifts are very highly prized by Dr. Henderson in that they are of a historic nature, and because the donor graduated in the class of 1898 with Dr. Henderson.

Mearns Visitors

Mr. and Mrrs. David C. Mearns, of Washington, D. C., visited the University last Wednesday, December 4, for the purpose of examining the library. Mr. Mearns is the chief assistant in the reading room of the Library of Congress, in Washington.

The visitors spent some time at the library, going over the whole place, and announced themselves as favorably impressed with their inspection.

Graduate Club

There will be two vacancies in the Graduate club beginning January 3. Professional students of advanced standing and graduates of the University are eligible. Application for reservation should be made to the manager, box 26, Chapel Hill, and should be accompanied by a reservation deposit of $5.

PRESS RELEASE GETS PUBLICITY

Special Edition of Sale's Book Disposed of Rapidly; Facing Oversubscription.

The University Press announces that all but two of the special edition of The Virginia Plutarch, 267 copies in all, have been disposed of and that there is a possibility of the edition being oversubscribed at any time. The regular edition of this volume of biography, by Philip Alexander Bruce, is being sold very fast, especially in Virginia, the home state of the author.

A great amount of publicity for the book has already been seen in the attention it has received from scholars interested in colonial history, on which Dr. Bruce is an authority, and in press comment. The Norfolk, Va., Virginian-Pilot used a picture and biographical information concerning the author as well as a discussion of his book.

The Virginia Plutarch, released late in November, is the newest of the Press books. Its predecessor, The Tree Named John, a book of Negro folklore by John B. Sale, is continuing to be in popular demand.

James C. Harper of Lenoir, writing for a copy of The Tree Named John, said in his letter: "The title alone would be sufficient to attract me to this book for it happens that my father and his only sister both had trees named for them in what was then their grandfather's yard, now the yard of my father's home. My aunt's tree did not long survive. A cow bit it off close to the ground. However, 'the tree named George' grew and spread its branches abroad and sheltered a good many of my own youthful escapades. I am sorry to say that it too has now gone the way of all good trees, and has long since furnished back logs for my father's living room fireplace."

Another comment about Mr. Sale's book came from a woman in Wilmington who heard him read from the book over radio station WPTF in Raleigh and ordered a copy of it immediately. The recent readings of Mr. Sale have been given in many towns in this and other states.

CHADWICK TELLS OF SCOUT WORK

Regional Scout Executive Speaks In Chapel On Citizenship Training.

C. D. Chadwick, regional scout executive, spoke in chapel Friday on some of the broader phases of scout work in their connection with life. While emphasizing a number of activities of scout work, Mr. Chadwick gave as the two main purposes of the organization character building and citizenship training.

Mr. Chadwick discussed freely some of the chief issues of scouting. He repeated the scout oath and declared it more potent and inclusive of more of the obligations of manhood than any he had ever known. Mr. Chadwick spoke at some length on service. This is a feature of the boy scout's life that is of much importance also in later life. Mr. Chadwick stressed particularly the fact that service rather than selfish aims makes for success.

Speaking of the work of the scout executive, Mr. Chadwick pointed out that it lay in a field of worthwhile service. He stated that its interest for him lay chiefly in the phase of character and citizenship training. Speaking of his profession as such, the scout executive said that the financial rewards were small but that the satisfaction of doing a good work was great.

PHILOSOPHY CLUB HEARS PAUL GREEN

Professor Paul Green of the philosophy department led the discussion at a meeting of the philosophy club held Thursday night in Murphey hall.

Shortly after the address by Bertrand Russell, the Philosophy club decided to hold another meeting in order to discuss several points that were made by the philosopher. It was also decided that because of the very small group interested in such a discussion, the Bull's Head book shop would be large enough to house the entire meeting.

Professors Jordan, Woodhouse, Evers and Metzenthin took active parts in the meeting. It was adjourned after a reading of some of Russell's works by Paul Green.

FOR SAFER TRAFFIC CONDITIONS

Beginning this morning, a widespread and unique plan to better traffic safety conditions in Chapel Hill is being inaugurated by City Manager Foushee, with the cooperation of E. Carrington Smith, manager of the Carolina theatre.

The town policemen are equipped with a number of passes to the Carolina theatre. Wherever a motorist with a Chapel Hill town license is noticed to take particular care, in driving at a low rate of speed through the town on Franklin street, in waiting for pedestrians after the light has changed to "Go," or in any other way evidencing cooperation with the police and town in driving safely, the motorist will be given a pass good for a performance at the Carolina theatre.

The plan was adopted at the suggestion of Mr. Smith, and will continue throughout the month of December. It is expected that the novel plan of rewarding special care, rather than punishing carelessness, will prove effective in putting across the safety campaign in Chapel Hill.

So far as is known, this is the first time and Chapel Hill is the first town in which such a plan has been tried, and City Manager Foushee expects it to arouse great interest among the city managers of the country. Although Mr. Foushee has just returned from a convention of city managers from all over the United States, the experiment being tried here is entirely original and is being carried out in accordance with Mr. Smith's ideas.

Rhodes Scholarship Committee Meets To Discuss Applicants

The Rhodes Scholarship Committee for the State of North Carolina met yesterday in President Chase's offices in the South building in order to interview and decide upon the eleven applicants of the University of North Carolina.

The members of the committee are: Dr. Harry W. Chase, president of the committee; President Hilley, of the Atlantic Christian College, secretary of the committee; Professor G. R. Voles of Davidson College; Dean W. C. Davidson of the Duke Medical School; Professor B. H. Brandscombe of Duke University; and T. J. Wilson, III of the University of North Carolina.

Stranger Fails to Swindle Registrar

Somebody called T. J. Wilson, Jr., University registrar, on the telephone from Washington, D. C., the day before Thanksgiving and told him that his son Pete was ill and needed $30 by telegraph at once. "My name is William H. Williams," said the caller. "I'm a friend of Pete's and he asks that you send the money to me." And he gave his address.

Mr. Wilson's suspicions were aroused. He had never heard of William H. Williams. Also, he didn't see why Pete, who is in the Reynolds Tobacco Company office in Washington, should be in such urgent need of $30. While he was puzzling about this another telephone message came from the same man. This time he said the money was to be sent to Pete's address, but in his—Williams'—name.

The registrar despatched the money but he sent with it an identification that would make it safe. The mysterious Williams did not get it.

Pete wrote later that he thought the would-be swindler might have been a Negro who claimed acquaintance with him recently and found out his father's name. But the voice over the phone did not sound like a Negro's.

The telephone charges were reversed, and Mr. Wilson accepted them because he did not want to run the risk of refusing a genuine message from his son. He saved the $30 by his caution, but he is out the telephone tolls.

TROPHY AWARDED

Thirty Members To Comprise Representation In Contest To Be Held In February.

Approximately thirty men will be selected from the University glee club to comprise the group which will represent the state university at the southern intercollegiate glee club contest to be held in Greenville, S. C., on February 7.

Twelve clubs, representing North Carolina, Virginia, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia and Florida are expected to enter the annual contest, the winner of which will receive the privilege of entering the national contest in New York. Any senior college or university meeting the requirements of the national council will be permitted to enter. The winner of the national contest will be awarded the trophy, valued at approximately $2500.

These annual contests have had twelve years of existence, but only since the last six years have they included a wide circle of schools over the entire country. Last year's winner of this contest was Dartmouth College which has been awarded the coveted trophy several times.

For the past two years the University of North Carolina has not entered the field of competition. In 1924 they were winners in the south. This year H. S. Dyer, director of the University club hopes to raise the glee club's standing in the south by re-entering. This year there will be no state glee club contest as under the present rules of the southern association it is unnecessary. This rule, however, does not prohibit the holding of the state meets.

At the contest in Greenville each club entered will appear three times. The first time the clubs are to sing songs of their own choice which must, however, be approved by the executive board. This song counts 30 per cent of the total score. The second song, called the prize song, this year will be Morley's "Hark, Jolly Shepherds," an intricate composition. This will count 50 per cent of the total score. In the last appearance of the separate clubs they will sing their school songs which must be original. The University's well known "Hark the Sound" has been rearranged so that it will be able to meet this stipulation. The combined singing of all the clubs of "We Meet Again Tonight, Boys" at the beginning of the contest and of a Flemish Folk song, "We Gather Together," at the close, will be a feature of the contest.

The southern association was reorganized during the past October, and the present officers are as follows: Max Noah, Guilford College, president; DuPree Rhame, Furman, treasurer, and J. Foster Barnes, Duke, secretary. Harold S. Dyer of the University is chairman of the board of control.

ENGINEERING SOCIETY TO FORM MODEL CLUB

The mechanical engineering society had its regular meeting Thursday night in Phillips hall. All regular business was transacted and the chairman of the program committee discussed the type of programs that the society would have.

Friendly Cooperation Or Inane Enmity?

It is extremely unfortunate that the undergraduates of North Carolina's two universities should inject a note of bitter animosity into the natural rivalry existing between them. During the past few days this animosity has been especially pronounced, probably on account of the game this afternoon.

Not only is the attitude of the student bodies toward each other prep-schoolish and unworthy of university men—it is detrimental to the mutual welfare of the institutions. An interchange of undergraduate ideas, utilization of the best men in the faculties for the advantages of both student bodies through exchange lectures, indiscriminate use of the excellent Duke and Carolina libraries, reciprocity of admission at athletic contests—almost without limit are the mutual benefits that might be derived by the neighboring institutions if a complete friendliness and spirit of cooperation existed between the administrations and student leaders.

The Duke-Carolina feud is a repetition in miniature of all the great national conflicts of history. Germany and France, England and France, China and Japan, Russia and China, all of the major national enmities have developed out of conditions similar to those in existence at Durham and Chapel Hill. Tremendous loss of human life and property, terrible suffering, has resulted from the senseless jealousies of men and nations. It seems that two of the presumably most progressive institutions of higher learning in the reputed-to-be most enlightened nation of the world could prevent a recurrence on their campuses of the primitive attitudes of mind that have demonstrated their capacity to wreck kings and countries throughout the course of history.

With a smooth twelve-mile ribbon of asphalt connecting the neighboring North Carolina universities, there is no logical reason why they should not cooperate to the immense benefit of each. After the football season has become history and the ardor of gridiron rivalries has abated to some extent, we suggest that the student body presidents of Duke and Carolina arrange a gathering of representative faculty members and undergraduates to perfect means of replacing the present ill-feeling with a close harmony of friendly cooperation.

A Prospective Duke Victory

This afternoon the Tar Heels terminate their most successful football season in many years. Strange as it may seem to those unfamiliar with the Duke-Carolina rivalry, considering the rather unimpressive record of the Duke team and the comparative excellence of the Carolina aggregation's achievements, the students here regard the game as the most important of the entire schedule. The intense rivalry between the neighboring universities is responsible for this attitude.

The Blue Devils are entering the game with a tremendous psychological advantage over the Tar Heels. They are the underdogs, fighting against almost overwhelming odds, with everything to gain and nothing to lose. Aroused into a desperate last stand by a disappointing season, Duke faces the alternative of completing their schedule in a blaze of glory by defeating Carolina, even holding them to a close score, or ignominiously contributing to the already great prestige of their keenest rivals by going down in overwhelming defeat. If the Blue Devils win or hold the Tar Heels to two touchdowns this afternoon, everyone will consider their season a success.

Two years ago the Carolina team was in the identical position in which the Blue Devils will start the game today. Everyone recalls how the Tar Heels, with a disastrous season behind them, staged a great battle with a Duke team rated several touchdowns superior. When the final whistle ended the hostilities Carolina had earned an entirely unexpected victory by a comfortable margin. Unless the Tar Heels realize the psychological disadvantage under which they will be playing, a Duke touchdown or two in the firrst half may prove disastrous. There is a possibility, and a strong one, that the occurrence of two years ago may be repeated with reverse english.

Swain Hall Fails As An Auditorium

When the tin can failed as a substitute for Memorial hall, the entertainment committee turned to Swain hall as a last resort. The acoustics in Swain hall are not bad. You can sit in the east end of the building and hear very well the speaker in the other end. At least this is true if the speaker has as good a voice as Bertrand Russell's.

But that is not the objectionable point about Swain hall. What mars the perfect hearing is the entrance of people at the main door after the program has started. The main entrance—and the only entrance except that which leads through the kitchen—being in the center of the hall not only disturbs the hearing of the audience in both front and rear, but distracts the attention of those in the center and rear sections from the speaker to those coming in.

Such a situation ruined Bertrand Russell's lecture for a great many people last Tuesday night. This is evident from the large number who left the hall from ten to forty-five minutes after the program had started. Swain hall, then, as an entertainment building and as a substitute for Memorial hall is a failure.

There are three remedies for the situation: non-admittance to those who present passes after the performance has begun; the cutting of an entrance in the east end of Swain hall, provided the construction of the building will permit; the building of a new auditorium. The first remedy is impractical; the second would afford merely a temporary relief. A new auditorium must come sometime in the near future, so why not now? Certainly the University is in much greater need of an auditorium than a gymnasium at the present time.

Creeds

College students are usually afraid to think or to profess a creed. Yet there is consolation in the thought that folly perhaps will save where creeds have failed. As long as youth is in quest of the most elusive and luring of all abstractions—Romance, there can be no real need for creeds. The gentle art of living can be greatly enhanced in beauty by merely being on a college campus. Things that are apart from books are not to be overlooked in this present age.

Golden Age?

Many claim that we are now living in the Golden Age of American literature. To be sure, the monetary side of the situation is an indication in this direction. Bulletin boards and newspapers are adorned with announcements of prizes for novels, awards for short stories, and poetry prize contests. The clinking sound and visual lure of golden coin urge everybody to write—write anything, in order that the great reading public may read. Yet the tastes of this great reading public demand popular, sentimental magazines rather than real literature. We feel that there is no risk in prophesying that a continuance of this sort of thing will deal the death blow to modern literature.

Dame Gossip Speaks

Personally, we've heard lots of rumors on the campus about big political frame-ups, unscrupulous plots, and all sorts of "shady business" that will have to be unearthed sooner or later. Let us have peace, however, as long as we can!

Reason For Fatness

Recent medical research has revealed the startling fact that four hours of hard thinking is as exhausting as ten hours of manual labor. It is highly probable that this accounts for some of the fat people on this campus.

An Observation

In the case of the average person the right ear is appreciably stronger than the left. We've noticed that on most occasions, however, the mouth seems to be stronger than any of the senses.

Last Chance!

"Last chance to have your picture taken for the Yackety Yack." Yes, we've heard that numerous times in former years. In fact, this notice appears several times each fall quarter. What the campus is interested in, however, is "Will the annual be out on time this year?" We'd like to see some announcement in this connection.

Today's Question

Circulars put out at Duke immediately following the Blue Devil-Wildcat clash read "Davidson 13—DeHart 12." How will the thing read this afternoon? Carolina ?—DeHart ?

Readers' Opinions

ARE WE GUILTY?

Less than six years ago a student made in one year his total expenses for the college year by operating "Honor Boxes" on the campus. Two years ago these boxes were operated by different students with a hope of making a few of his smaller expenses. This year the "dormitory store" has eliminated practically all of the honor boxes. However, two of these boxes offering fruits only were maintained in the Y lobby this fall. Today no honor boxes appear on the campus. A total loss of $6.96 in seven weeks of operation demanded the abolition of the last of these honor boxes. It is certainly a disgrace and a blotch upon our honor system that this situation exists. Are we guilty?

When two honor boxes in the Y lobby lose the said amount, not considering expense of operation, and the final blow which capitalized it all was the prizing open of the money box and escaping therewith, a student body using the honor system should be advised. I hesitate to attribute this false usurpation to the students of the University of North Carolina, realizing that those who enter and use the rooms in the Y comprise a rather heterogenous group. If we students are to blame, a system worn into tradition by sacred observance and obedience has been cast awkwardly aside and we are benedicts all. If outsiders are to blame, the matter is beyond student control insofar as action now is concerned.

Our honor system has been declared effective. I believe that it is, but such existing conditions as this one mentioned show a weakness not in principle but in practice. We are to be reminded that we are honor bound not only on a quiz but in daily life as well. Articles appearing in the Tar Heel clear up much along this line. They should be read.

Some person, or more likely persons, have deprived some student of needed cash which would have been earned through actual service. If we are guilty, we should be punished. Though we be not punished as yet, "whatsoe'er a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

DISGUSTING DISCUSSION

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

I think it is rather disgusting to see people discussing the "Question of Religion," when they don't know what it is all about. They're really foolish, and they go to the trouble to prove it in so many hundred words. I admit that some individuals like to smooth over their consciences by loudly attacking the thing that hurts, however.

Far be it from me to advocate going to church once a week, or dispensing with "doubtful pleasures" on week-ends, or observing the policies of our Christian churches. But I do wonder just how much our "Disillusioned Senior" and "R. H." know about the Bible. I wonder, for instance, if they have ever considered Biblical prophecy and its fulfillment, when they refer to Biblical "fables." Or did they ever hear of such a thing as Biblical prophecy?

Mr. "Disillusioned Senior," if the ability to think were "innate" I believe there would be a powerful mess on this old earth. However, my observation, scant as it may have been, shows me that the "fewer and fewer people who possess that innate ability to think" only think long enough to make themselves believe they can think, and then start spouting, after they've barely dipped below the surface. I regret the great number of thoughtless members of the Christian church, but I've seen some mighty thinkers there, too. If you're really interested in this "Question of Religion," why not get acquainted with the Bible, which is our real source-book of Christianity, and consequently make your attacks to better advantage? If not, then why bother to speak up?

Yes, I'm just another Freshman "babe in arms," but remember that "A little child shall lead them."

"AMERICANA" MATERIAL

My Dear Mr. Editor:

A fine example of pedantic hair-splitting took place the other night when a group, consisting mainly of almost-to-be retired school-teachers sat patiently listening to what was originally supposed to be a discussion of Bertrand Russell and his ideas.

Paul Green apologized for the large group, saying that it should originally have been only five or six. But a large number of undergraduates, quite thoroughly impressed by Bertrand Russell's address of the other night and wanting to hear more of this clear, and commonsensical sort of philosopher, also attended the discussion. They did nothing but sit quietly and become a bit more impressed with the truth of Shaw's statement about those that do, do-and those that don't, teach. A larger number of attendants were a group of women, I dread to use the term, old-women, but that's who they were, who went to the meeting for many reasons but Bertrand Russell and his works was not one of them. One young lady spent her time reading the "La Crosse, Wisconsin, News"....an estimable newspaper but hardly to be read in a discussion of the most interesting and vital thinker of today.

The general attitude at the meeting was one that made the undergraduates present there sorely disgusted with the proceedings. Bertrand Russell had impressed us with the fact that hypocrisy and cowardice were sorely all too common today. That there was too much misinformation and misconception about many things. That what was needed were courageous, intelligent, hardy young men and women, ready and willing to lead an active, honest life—and trying, in some manner, to make this short world just a bit better for those to come after us.

But the people over there in 111 Murphy, Thursday night, impressed the fact that the undergraduates on the University of North Carolina campus can not look to their faculty for the same inspiration that Bertrand Russell gave us. We can look to the Philosophy Club group and its meetings only as a graphic example of what not to do and be.

We must listen to the old-fashioned, assininely old precepts and morals that our professors insist on feeding us. And after a lecture or talk, where we are told to adhere to the standards of our forefathers—they knew best—we go home to read Bertrand Russell, Walter Lippman, Harry Elmer Barnes or any other of the countless number of men who realize that this is 1929 and that the Civil War and the gay Forties are all over—the good old days ain't no more; and then we realize with the power and force that contrast gives that our "intellectual leaders" are not doing much to remove the terrible connotation that "North Carolina" bears among intellectually enlightened people.

A little light—and a little action by those people who can best diffuse the rays—is wanted.

At The Carolina

Mystery drama has an odd fascination for Conrad Nagel, who plays the role of "Richard Crosby" in "The Thirteenth Chair," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's talking picture, adapted from the celebrated stage play, which comes today to the Carolina theatre.

"There is something," says Nagel, "about a role in a mystery play that seems to put the actor on his toes—perhaps the continual thought that to sustain a mystery one must literally live the role, no matter what it is, in the story. The whole secret of the mystery play is in the genuineness of portrayals, for, as a rule, a fantastic plot will not be convincing unless every bit of action is so accurate that the audience literally lives within the play itself."

Carolina Ends Football Season With Duke Game Today

Tar Heels Enter Battle Minus Backfield Stars

Magner and Wyrick May Play; Great Reserve Strength Lacking.

MEET IN DUKE STADIUM

The football teams of the University of North Carolina and Duke University are waiting tensely for the opening whistle at 2:30 today, the Tar Heels preparing to celebrate the first year of the new Duke stadium by an overwhelming victory and the Blue Devils determined to knock them from the State title and high scoring honors in the Southern Conference.

Minus two of their most consistent halfbacks, Rip Slusser, who suffered a broken nose in scrimmage Wednesday and Chuck Erickson, who sustained a fractured finger on the same afternoon, the Tar Heels with the best team in years discounted season records and waited for the fray in fairly good condition.

Jim Magner, scoring ace, and Pete Wyrick, veteran quarter, who have graced the side-lines for the past three weeks were ready to take the field against Duke. Either may suffer new hurts to their old injuries and be taken from the game in the early sessions.

From Chapel Hill, an army of two thousand students will begin this morning a trek to the new Duke Stadium by bus, by automobile and by bumming, to see their team, avenge on Duke the loss to the University of Georgia.

Feeling in both camps is running high. Loss or victory, today means successful or unsuccessful seasons for both institutions.

The crippling of the Tar Heel backfield means that the University of North Carolina will be without the great reserve strength which has enabled them to keep a 33-point scoring average and rank fifth in the nation's scoring. Branch, Ward, Nash and Spaulding, will in all probability start the contest.

Eleven veterans headed by Captain Ray Farris will fight for their alma mater for the last time against the Blue Devils. Only four of this number are from the backfield, while the remainder of the graduates are linesmen.

Probable line-ups were announced today as follows:

Duke		North Carolina
Warren		Holt
	Left End
Kistler (C)		Koenig
	Left Tackle
Carpenter		Farris (C)
	Left Guard
Adkins		Lipscomb
	Center
Thorne		Fysal
	Right Guard
Davis		Adkins
	Right Tackle
Peeler		Fenner
	Right End
Brewer or Rosky		Branch
	Quarterback
Buie		Ward
	Left Half
Murray or Beaver		Nash
	Right Half
Godfrey		Spaulding
	Fullback

THE DUKE - CAROLINA game this afternoon will hold the spotlight of interest in the state. Carolina's "comparative score superiority" will mean little in this game. Both teams want to win and both are determined to win. Duke is undefeated in the Southern Conference and has lost only to Davidson in the state. A victory today will give them a perfect record for their first year in the Conference and will also give them a tie for the state championship. Smarting under years of defeat, they have everything to win and little to lose. Carolina, attempting to maintain their high scoring average for the season, to bring to a successful close an excellent season, and to keep their record against Duke unmarred, will be fighting just as hard for victory.

ALL-SOUTHERN TEAMS are occupying their usual post-season prominence in the minds of football fans. For the first time in several years the experts have agreed almost unanimously on five positions. The backfield, consisting of Dodd and McEver, Tennessee, Banker, Tulane and Holm, Alabama, goes undisputed. The fifth position that gave pickers little trouble went to Ray Farris of North Carolina. He is rated as the most outstanding guard produced in the south in several years. Johnnie Branch and Jim Magner were placed on the second and third teams of various selections. Don Holt, Pot Adkins, Ned Lipscomb and Yank Spaulding were given honorable mention by several writers.

BASKETBALL will take over in a few weeks the throne now occupied by football. Carolina, four times Conference champions, will be an object of interest to followers of southern basketball. Always a strong contender, Carolina must be reckoned with by all aspirants to the Conference title. The loss of Satterfield and Hackney hurts and they will be hard to replace. But several dependable men are back and last year's freshmen furnished some good material. In spite of a gloomy beginning last year's season was a success. Coach Ashmore may make another championship team out of his material.

THE INTRAMURAL football season was brought to a close Thursday, New Dorms copping the campus title from the Betas in a close and hard fought game. Intramural athletics got off to a good start this quarter with football, the cake race, and the novice track meet. Next quarter will see the race for the basketball title. Carr dormitory won the campus championship last year. Who will win this year?

ELEVEN CAROLINA veterans, seven linemen and four backs, will sing their swan song against Duke today. They are: Captain Ray Farris, Bud Eskew, Tiny Harper, Pot Adkins, Bill Koenig, Don Holt, Julian Fenner, Jimmy Ward, Yank Spaulding, Pap Harden and Phil Jackson.

Charlotte High School Wins Class 'A' Championship 27-0

WILDCATS LEAD IN ALL PHASES OF TITLE GAME

Mason Is Star For Goldsboro; Ray Farris' Brother Plays Well At End For Charlotte.

(By K. C. Ramsay)

Before a crowd estimated at 3000, Charlotte high school clinched the state title yesterday afternoon in Kenan stadium, defeating Goldsboro by the decisive score of 27 to 0. The westerners outclassed the easterners in every department of the game with the possible exception of forward passing. Mason for Goldsboro passed many times for much needed gains, but the Earthquakes failed to possess the necessray drive for a score.

Laney, Landis, Myers and Funderburke starred in the Charlotte backfield. Captain Ray Farris' younger brother, Hubert, played well for the Wildcats. Mason and Edwards showed up best for the losers.

The half ended with Charlotte leading 7 to 0, Myers scoring the touchdown on a plunge of four yards. First downs were Charlotte eight and Goldsboro three.

Charlotte high school's band took the field during the half and strutted up and down the field in true military form. They formed C H for Charlotte and played their school song, then marched before the Goldsboro stands forming G H.

There was no scoring in the first period. Neither team was able to gain during the first few minutes, but at the end of the quarter Charlotte was beginning to find her stride. Charlotte made two successive first downs and Wilson went over for a touchdown, but Gadd was offside and the play was called back. The quarter ended on the next play with the ball in Charlotte's possession on the 25 yard line, third down and ten to go.

Funderburke and McCrachen replaced Wilson and Hinson as the second quarter began. Runs by Laney and Myers gave Charlotte a first down on the ten yard line. McCrachen made five yards and followed with a line play for two yards. Myers went off tackle for the touchdown. Funderburke kicked the extra point. Score: Charlotte 7, Goldsboro 0.

Liles replaced Peacock for Goldsboro. Daniels kicked off for Charlotte, Kelly, receiving the ball on his 20 yard line, returned it to the 30. Goldsboro was unable to gain and Mason kicked to Laney. The play was called back and Charlotte was penalized 15 yards for roughing. Mason kicked to Charlotte's 36 yard line.

Myers ran 23 yards, but fumbled on the next play and Goldsboro recovered on the 28. Goldsboro started a march to the goal line which was ended when Edwards' pass to Peacock was incomplete over the goal line. The ball went over. Charlotte, failing to gain, kicked to Mason on his 18 yard line. Goldsboro was unable to gain and Mason kicked. Runs by Shoupe, Myers and Laney netted Charlotte's fifth first down of the period. They were unable to gain and the ball went over on the 38 yard line. A pass, Mason to Edwards, was good for six yards. Mason missed a first down by inches as the half ended.

The second half opened with the original lineup. Daniels kicked off for Charlotte to Peacock, who was downed on the 11 yard line. Edwards failed to gain and fumbled on the next play, recovering for a loss of two yards. Mason's kick was blocked by Laxton and recovered by Moser for a touchdown. Funderburke kicked goal. Score: Charlotte 14, Goldsboro 0.

Charlotte kicked off to Matthews who returned to the 20 yard line. Two passes were incomplete and Mason kicked to Funderburke. Wilson gained 13 yards through the line, McCrachen got eight and Wilson made another first down on the 34 yard line. Funderburke made ten. Shoupe, Laney and Wilson made it a first down on the five yard line. Wilson took the ball over, but the play was called back and Charlotte given an offside penalty. McCrachen and Wilson took the ball to the foot line. Wilson failed to

GOLF FINALS HELD AT HOPE VALLEY

The finals in the University golf tournament were held Friday over the Hope Valley course, with B. L. Goodes of Burlington winning from Luther Steward, Washington, D. C., on the 18th hole. The course was soaked by a three-day rain and good scores were not expected.

Goodes got off to a good start, winning the first three holes. He held his lead to the 17th hole, at which point Steward tied him with a par four. Both drove to the edge of the 18th green. Goodes' chip shot was dead to the pin for a three and he won when Steward missed a ten-foot putt which would have halved the hole.

Student Ballot Results In Choice Of Eleven Carolina Men For All-State Berths

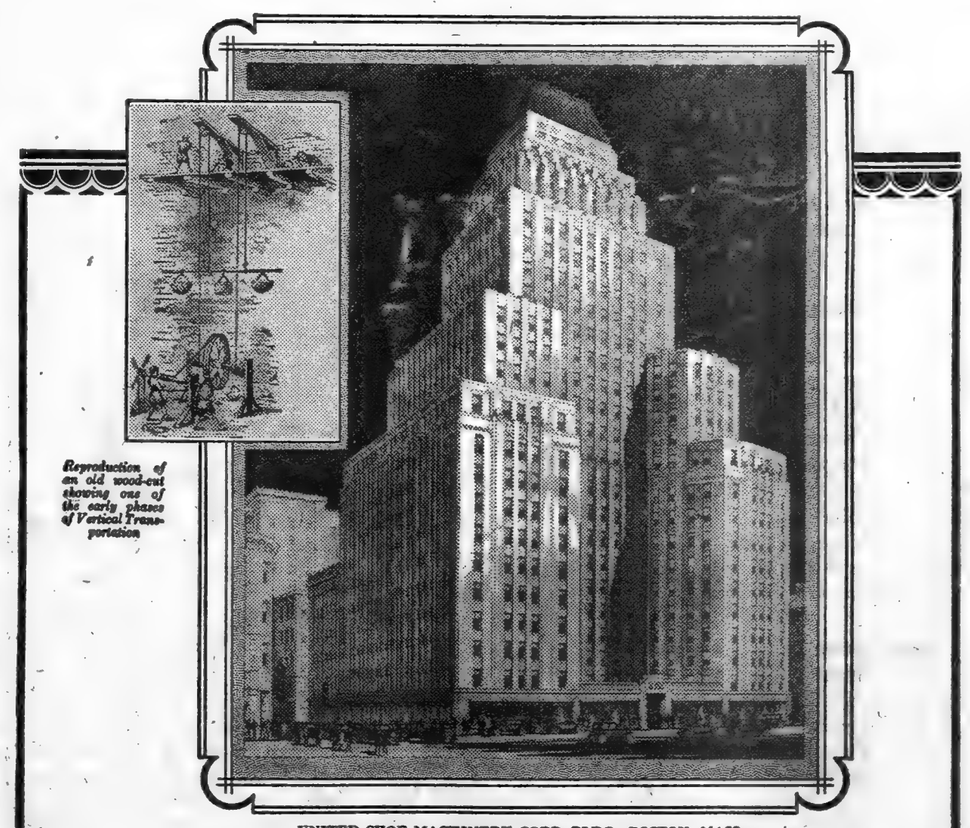
Close Vote Gives Duke Six, State Three, and Davidson and Wake Forest One Each On Two Teams; Farris Choice.

Tar Heel Backfield

The student ballot conducted by the sports department of the Daily Tar Heel resulted in the selection of eleven Carolina men for the first and second teams. Eight men were placed on the first team and three on the second. Duke, with two on the first and four on the second for a total of six, came second. Davidson was represented by one man on the first team. State placed three men and Wake Forest one on the second team. Three captains were placed on the first team and one on the second.

Captain Brock of Davidson was easily the most outstanding man on the Davidson team. His showing all through the season and especially against Duke gives him an undoubted claim to All-State. Don Holt, Carolina, given honorable mention for All-Southern, has been a shining light on the defense all season. Warren of Duke and Jordan of State had the next largest number of votes and are placed on the second team.

Captain Kistler of Duke has shown himself to be one of the strongest linemen in the state and although he has been handicapped by injuries he has proven himself to be of All-State caliber. Koenig and Adkins of Carolina ran a close race for the other tackle position. Koenig's consistent good playing merits him a place above Adkins. Adkins and Captain Lepo of State are placed on the second team.



Captain Farris of Carolina is the outstanding guard in the south. He is placed on the first team without question. The contest for the second position was close. Thorne of Duke is given the berth over Fysal of Carolina because of his more consistent playing and longer service. Fysal is a fierce charger, both on offense and defense. He is given a place on the second team with Stout of State.

Ned Lipscomb, Carolina, has been the outstanding center in the state. Gilbreath of Carolina and Adkins of Duke ran a close race for the second team berth, which went to Adkins because of his longer playing time.

An entire Carolina backfield was selected. Only two of the positions were contested. Sam Buie of Duke ran Johnnie Branch of Carolina a close race. Branch's spectacular play and his field generalship give him the berth. Buie is placed on the second team.

Strud Nash was almost unanimously picked for one of the halfback positions. He is Carolina's most consistent back and his all-round playing gives him the position. The other berth

Two Graduates Will Get Report Of Duke Contest Through Air

After the Virginia game Thanksgiving day news of the victory was flashed to two graduates of the University by the University radio station, W4WE, which is connected with the school of engineering, and it is the plan of the local operators to send a report of the Duke game to the mearly Saturday evening.

The day before the game last week, one of the local operators received a letter from T. (Peanut) Griffin and George Rose, which stated that they had assembled a station at Schenectady, where they are now working, and that if possible they would like for one of the local operators to get in touch with them after the game and give them the results.

As the time for making arrangements was quite short, the local operators sent two radiograms to Griffith and Rose, stating that the local station would give them the report at 7 o'clock Thursday evening.

When 7 o'clock came the local operators first called the station of the men in Schenectady, and then sent the story of the game on 40 meters. Then not receiving any acknowledgement of the message, the local operators shifted to 29 meters and repeated the story.

When the second report had been sent still no reply was received, and the local station was unable to tell whether the results of the game had been received or not.

Until Thursday this remained a mystery, but then the operators received a letter from Griffin stating that they had received both messages, but that their transmitter was not working as they had not at that time put up an antenna.

This second letter stated that if it were possible they would like to have the results of the Duke game Saturday evening; therefore the local operators are planning to arrange a schedule with W2WX, which is the other station, and to give a pair of graduates some real service on the results of the game Saturday.

TEAM FACES DUKE MINUS STAR BACKS

Shooting at a state title, a Southern Conference scoring lead and a new Tar Heel scoring mark for all time, chances today were that the Tar Heels will face Duke in Durham tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock without the great reserve strength which has enabled them to roll up their fine season record.

The big 191-pound veteran Blue and White line will be intact, but the backfield presents a different story. It looked today as if the Tar Heels would be playing minus the services of two of their finest ball-carriers—Rip Slusser and Chuck Erickson.

Slusser and Erickson sustained injuries at the last minute in the last serimmage that will probably bench both—Slusser with a broken nose, Erickson with a broken finger.

about through a series of letters and editorials calling attention to the carelessness of motorists on the main streets of the town which appeared in the Chapel Hill Weekly. Casting about for a means of controlling the situation without antagonizing car drivers, and if possible of providing them with an interest which would lead to cooperation, Mr. Smith hit upon the plan of recognizing and providing tangible evidence of the appreciation of the town for extraordinary care in driving by awarding tickets to the show.

From today on, motorists who are followed by traffic police and handed a ticket need not receive the pasteboard with fear and trembling. Instead, they will be greeted by a courteous cop, and informed that they have been watched for some time and found to be unusually careful, that the town appreciates this care, and that they are hereby invited to attend a performance at the Carolina theatre as the guests of Manager Smith.

The situation is without parallel in the annals of city government, and is expected to provide an effective check to carelessness by providing an incentive to drivers to think about the situation.

was closely contested between Magner and Ward, both of Carolina. Ward is given the first team selection because of his scoring ability and the fact that he has played more than Magner. Magner is placed on the second team with Mills of Wake Forest.

Yank Spaulding, Carolina, is one of the hardest driving backs in the south. He has secured nearly two-thirds of the extra points made by Carolina this season. He is placed at fullback on the first team. The second team position goes to Godfrey of Duke.

SOUTH RESPECTS WORK SAYS DR. WILL ALEXANDER

Second Weil Lecturer Here on Subject of Attitude of Southerners Toward Work.

The outstanding development in southern life since the Civil War has been the fact that all southerners, the leisure class as well as the masses, have come to have a genuine respect for work, Dr. Will Alexander of Atlanta, noted historian and sociologist, declared last night in the second of the annual series of Weil lectures on citizenship.

Taking as his topic "New Southerners," Dr. Alexander pointed out that at the outbreak of the Civil War only 30 per cent of the southerners were slave-owners and that the chief developments in the life of this section since then have been brought about not by the descendants of that 30 per cent aristocracy and semi-aristocracy but by the 70 per cent who had known only poverty and ignorance up to that time.

The Civil War gave this 70 per cent a new lease on life and made possible their release from economic and social bondage, Dr. Alexander asserted.

Dr. Alexander said that the south's progress in race adjustment since the Civil War has been encouraging, "although there is a good deal of fallacy in the statement that the southern white man understands the Negro." For it must be remembered that before 1860, 70 per cent of the whites did not own slaves and consequently did not have the best opportunity to understand them. Today the chief contacts between the white and the Negro communities is through white people who in the past had least contact with them."

Strud Nash, Stellar Halfback, Captain 1930 Tar Heel Team

Edmund Strudwick Nash, Jr., of Charleston, S. C., one of the University's galaxy of backfield aces, was last night elected captain of the 1930 Tar Heel team.

The election took place at a banquet given the squad last night at the Carolina Inn, with Coach Bob Fetzer presiding. Four ballots were required to name the new Tar Heel leader. Jim Magner ran Nash a close second.

Nash should prove a great leader for the 1930 edition of the Tar Heels. He is regarded as one of the outstanding all-round backfield men in the south and has been named on several All-Southern selections.

He began his football career at the Charleston, S. C., high school, and before coming to the University was captain of the All-State prep school team at Woodberry Forest for two years.

"Unk" Follows Tar Heel Team This Year

"Unk" isn't so well known on the campus. But several members of the football team know him. He is the uncle of Yank Spaulding, fullback on the varsity football team this year. "Unk" hasn't missed a game in which the Tar Heels have participated during the past three years. Although a native Pennsylvanian, he is all for Carolina. Jimmy Ward, Pete Wyrick, Strud Nash, Jimmy Hudson and several other members of the team know him. His "career" ended last night when Yank got his letter, but "Unk" avows he's all for Chuck Collins, Carolina coach, and the Tar Heel football team.

NASH LEADS TEAM WITH 18 POINTS

Ward and Branch Turn in Long Runs to Thrill Crowd of 13,000; Kid Brewer Scores Lone Duke Counter After Penalties Put Ball Close to Goal.

Durham, Dec. 8.—North Carolina's driving, high scoring Tar Heels closed their 1929 season this afternoon by administering a 48-7 licking to Duke University, rivals of nearly 40 years.

The game gave the Tar Heels their ninth victory for ten games, and their seventh Southern Conference victory out of eight Conference games.

The 48 points ran the Tar Heels' season total to 346, to assure their place at the lead of all Southern Conference teams, and above the fifth place in the nation which they held prior to today.

A driving line attack which netted 214 yards, with a flashy attack of end runs and passes interspersed at the crucial moments, gave the Tar Heels the game from the very beginning.

They scored on the ninth play of the game, on a 22 yard fake and off tackle thrust by Strud Nash, Tar Heel speed king, and after that the touchdowns came with monotonous regularity.

Nash scored two more in the second quarter on short passes across the goal line after the

Negroes Entertain Crowds With New Kind Of Music

(By Frank J. Manheim)

Hark ye—ye who say the old days of troubadors are no more—ye who say the wandering minstrel will ne'er be seen again. Were you on Franklin street in front of the Welcome Inn Cafeteria Friday night between the hours of nine and twelve? If you were, you've been shedding tears of gladness at the welcome sight of a troupe of four, dusky, dirty, entertainers who kept a crowd of about fifty people continuously asking for more music.

Where they came from no one knows. The first that Chapel Hill heard of them was when a crowd started to collect about the quartet of darkies—dressed in the most outlandish, and also tattered, costumes. One young musician, not one of them was more than twenty years old, wore an old, battered derby, which was gayly bedecked with a wide band of what was once bright red ribbon. Another, he of the shuffling feet, looked far smaller than he actually was because of the large, mildewed fedora which fell about his ears in an attractive insouciant manner.

The drummer, who appeared to be the "moral force" of the four, played the most ingenious and fascinating instrument. Two others strummed conventional guitars. The third occasionaly rendered solos on his mouth organ, when not dancing; but the drummer—his instrument was a creation. He had a right to the impassive, sombre mien of his. An inventor—a scientist, would be fitting terms of defining the drummer.

His musical contraption had no name. When asked what he called it, he replied, "That thing wha, ah, ah,—tha'ss jus' ma' thing." But his thing was more than a mere thing. It was primarily an old washboard. Across its two sides had been placed several wires and strings. These, when plucked, gave forth a most resonant and pleasing sound. Atop the place where once some industrious house-wife placed her wringer, there now was nailed a large pan of the simple, home-like kind. Attached to it in a curious fashion was a dinner-pail sort of container, with its lid still on. These pans or tins, gave forth—well, hardly to be called music but it was sound. Beneath the "brasses" was arranged an old headlight—with a bulb still in it. Under

University Has Distinctive Atmosphere Says John Sale

Mississippian Discusses Negro and Other Subjects in Interview; Thinks Negro's Need Is More Social Pride.

By J. P. Huskins

Seated comfortably before a blazing, open hearth fire in the reception room of the Episcopal parish house, John B. Sale, noted folklorist and author of "The Tree Named John," recently published by the University Press, blew smoke rings and discussed literature in the south, Negro education, college presses, the University of North Carolina, and H. L. Mencken.

Mr. Sale, a Mississippian by birth, spent a large portion of his life on a southern plantation and has a rare store of first-hand knowledge of the many characteristics, superstitions, and beliefs of the Negro. A favorite topic of his is the place of Negro education in our educational scheme.

More Racial Pride Needed

The Negro, to Mr. Sale, is "the adolescent of the human family—a baby at any age." He represents an "inferior" race that has not yet had time to assume the "veneer" of civilization. "The education that will do him most good is one that will teach him not to put white powders on a black face and red rouge on black lips, but one that will instill in him more racial pride rather than racial scorn."

Mr. Sale is not quite sure how this can best be accomplished. It calls, of course, for the seperation of the races in schools and for the Negro's ceasing to antagonize the white race.

"Dammit," said he in a perfectly pleasing southern way, "the Negro is here and should realize that if he is to get any aid it must come from the white race."

Praises Odum and Johnson

The conversation shifted to folklore and negro studies. Dr. Howard W. Odum's "Rainbow Round My Shoulder" and "Wings On My Feet" were thought to be "wonderful" by the author of "The Tree Named John" while Guy B. Johnson's "John Henry" "must be good." Mr. Sale praised the work of these two University professors and was of the opinion that their research in the field of folklore and Negro traditions would play an important part in the literary development of the south.

When asked what he thought of what H. L. Mencken thought of the south, Mr. Sale smiled and

A Unique Plan for Traffic Safety Promotion

It is difficult to conceive of a traffic cop who approaches motorists in a friendly manner, compliments them upon their careful driving, and shows his appreciation by presenting them with theatre passes, yet such a personage appeared in Chapel Hill yesterday.

Most traffic officers are pugnacious individuals, addicted to severe reprimands and caustic comment. It is indeed a relief to meet a few of the blue coated brethren who adopt an attitude of friendly cooperation instead of belligerent coercion. Chapel Hill policemen have completely altered their methods of promoting traffic safety since Friday.

This transformation has been brought about by City Manager Foushee and E. C. Smith, manager of the Carolina theatre. Mr. Smith supplied the novel idea for promotion of careful driving while Mr. Foushee placed it in operation. In the brief space of 24 hours the plan has already demonstrated its practicability, and we predict that it is destined to spread to every section of the country.

A Few Well-Deserved Plaudits for the News Bureau

During the football season which the Tar Heels brought to a brilliant termination with the devastation of the Duke Blue Devils yesterday afternoon, the University News Bureau staff produced a prodigious amount of copy. Indeed the Bureau has been directly responsible for for most of the publicity received by the team.

Very few persons realize the important part an efficient news bureau plays in the development of a great university. In the intense competition of modern educational institutions for funds from state, private and "foundation" sources, wide publicity of an unassuming nature is requisite to the maintenance of a first-rate college or university. But the utmost finesse and journalistic discreetness must be employed in preparing the copy; it must not be too blatant, it must not constitute mere free advertising for the institution. College news bureaus must be real news gathering agencies if they are to fulfill successfully their purposes; a reputation for honesty in treating the news, without distortion or exaggeration, is essential.

Newspaper men throughout the south are unanimous in the opinion that the University of North Carolina News Bureau is one of the most efficient news gathering agencies in the entire section. They do not hesitate to publish anything that Director Madry and his corps of well trained journalists produce, for they are confident that the copy is accurate and has real news value.

The News Bureau is performing a service of inestimable value to the University. Functioning without ostentation in the process of developing a university of international importance here, the news bureau staff is making a highly significant contribution to the University's advancement.

Intercollegiate Rivalry

For a number of years the University of North Carolina has been a participant in numerous sectional meetings and conferences of all sorts and descriptions. It is only right that it should be. Faculty and student body alike are benefited by the lessons learned from such contacts and affiliations. Without question the students of this university should life their eyes beyond the pale of the campus. They should diligently seek to inform themselves of student movements elsewhere. Intercollegiate rivalry is helpful so long as it does not go beyond these limitations.

On the other hand, when colleges or universities enter upon policies of "lording it over" their rivals, then the real aim of education is smothered by the lust after fame and recognition. We believe that in the majority of cases intercollegiate relationships bring about constructive and enlightening understanding. At the same time, however, even the most casual observer cannot fail to recognize the constant growth of factors which tend to accentuate feelings of rivalry which spring from the dark recesses of ignorance and flourish in the minds of those who cannot see beyond their own limited sphere.

Colleges and universities were never meant to be operated on a competitive basis. We make no reference here to forensic, dramatic, athletic, or other types of intercollegiate relationships. Their value is so well recognize as to warrant no comment.

To be specific, the writer feels that the tendency to introduce competition and bitter strife into the relationships of the colleges of this state is enjoying an alarming development. Such "cut throat" rivalry, we contend, is a hindrance to educational advancement.

Readers' Opinions

IS RELIGION BUNK?

Mr. Editor:

May I break in from my position of a peaceful reader to the circle of religious warfare? I think that this subject (religion) is a rather dangerous one to be discussed in a newspaper, but when one possessing such radical opinions as does "A Disillusioned Senior" begins to flay the people who have held sway over the nations of the earth for centuries, and are still growing and expanding—despite his arguments that they do not possess the ability to think—it is time for those who still believe in God and the power of prayer to take a hand.

First, I wish to say that, in my opinion, the whole trouble with "A Disillusioned Senior" is not the change that has taken place—so he says—in religion, but the fact that a mere insignificant Freshman dared to express his beliefs and to criticize the upper classmen who might be involved in his charges. "The idea of a freshman, a mere babe in arms, trying to preach to his mentally superiors—it was rediculous." Mr. Senior, I am quite sure that the entire freshman class realizes and acknowledges the high and mighty position that the upperclassmen occupy, that they should be mere ornaments in the life of the school, and that, when they have successfully passed all freshman examinations, they will suddenly be transformed from the "babes in arms" to the rank of the "mentally superiors." Have you progressed so far on the road of mental accomplishment that you can no longer learn or be criticized? Or have you become so narrow-minded (I take it that you were once more broadminded than you appear to be now) that you cannot stand for people to tell you where they think you are wrong and wherein you may improve yourself, even though those people may be so unfortunate as to be in a class lower than you? When we get to the place that we can no longer learn, then all progress ceases!

"Some people can't seem to realize that the days of purity, self-sacrifice, ideals and all that bunk are gone forever." No, Mr. Senior, and I thank God that they can't! Do you really think that such a thing has come to pass? True, the generations that have gone by were often greater dreamers than we of today are, but did the morals change when one generation replaced the other? Is there no more purity and self-sacrifice? Look to your mother—would you stand by indifferently while someone slandered her and her purity? Where would you be today if she had not slaved and sacrificed for you? It may be, as is the case with many students here, that your parents are denying themselves the very necessities of life to keep you in school. Again I ask: Have we lost all our purity and self-sacrifice? And as to the ideals of the modern people: I grant that they (the ideals) are not what they should be. But, Mr. Senior, look at the men of today in whose hands rests the leadership of our country and of the world. You will find that the majority—a very large majority—of them possesses ideals of the highest type, and that it is because of these ideals that they have been able to accomplish so much. But consider the man of today who is absolutely without morals or ideals: At first, it may seem a bit hard to find him but if we are diligent, we shall succeed. We discover him behind prison bars, sentenced to the electric chair and to life imprisonment for deeds that he has committed because of his lack of high ideals. He is the murderer, the thief, the blackmailer, and the criminal in general. "We are living in a modern world—a world of 'get out of life what you can and let the devil take the hindermost.' " It is the "Modernists" that are raising the most disturbance today—a small crowd making a big noise; the "hindermost," those who possess the innate ability to think, also possess the majority in numbers. When we come to the point where we rush madly into Life to get out of it what we can, no matter at whose expense, then the devil will not only take the hindermost—he will take the entire lot of us! Let us not forget the history of other nations which have forgotten God and turned to barbarous living. They head-

Pen Points

By H. J. Galland

In an old, abandoned cabin on Laurel Knoll we came upon tangible evidence not long ago that the times have changed. Included in a mass of old papers, bills, receipts, and ancient yellowed calendars illustrated with pictures of befurred and hatted ladies with piles of hair, there was a copy of "A Memoir of the Rev. Elisha Mitchell, D. D., Late Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy and Geology in the University of North Carolina," a memorial containing resolutions and a full account of the Professor's tragic attempt to ascend Mt. Mitchell on the 27th of June 1857, and his death on the mountain near its summit.

There, too, was found a pamphlet containing "Obituaries, Funeral and Proceedings Of The Bar in memory of the late Hon. Wm. H. Battle, printed at Raleigh, 1879," and two copies of the University Magazine for 1890 and 1891. It is the magazine which chiefly supplies food for musings and pulling of reminiscent gray beards.

In 1890, the Magazine was issued by four editors, two from the Di and two from the Phi. It was published six times a year, and a subscription cost one dollar. In the back of the magazine are rules and regulations concerning discipline. One of them is a copy of the Applicant's Contract, which runs as follows: "In presenting myself as a candidate for admission to the privileges of the University, it is with the agreement that so long as I may be a student in the University, I shall make good use of my opportunities for education, and shall conduct myself in a manner that is friendly to its interests. This is not intended to be a pledge of honor, but a contract, the breaking of which shall be a forfeiture of all rights to membership in the University."

There were 18 men on the faculty roster in 1890. Attendance at prayers was required, and the hour was 8:45. Classes began at 9. There was a special charge for rooms in South building, but all others were free to those who paid the entrance fees. Law, medical and special students might occupy rooms without joining the societies—all others had to.

Jefferson Davis was eulogized in an article in the 1889 issue, and biographies of the University's Confederate dead were still being run. This advertisement appeared: "D. McCauley would respectfully call the attention of the young men of the University to his Elegant Stock of Clothing, Hats, Shirts, Collors, Cuffs and Shoes. He is also prepared to take orders for any kind of Suits of Clothing and will guarantee a fit."

Forty years in the life of a University in Europe is not a long time. But here in the United States, where a college 200 years old is considered ancient, forty years is a long period. No longer is the University small enough to allow the Magazine to run personal items with the assurance that every member of the class will know the boy mentioned. We have progressed, but sometimes we become a bit doubtful about some of the progress. It is then that sighs of regret escape, and the Old Grad begins his "I remember when. . . ."

SIDELIGHTS ON THE GAME

("Heinie")

THE ESTIMATED CROWD of 13,000 spectators at the Carolina-Duke game didn't look much larger than the rooters at the Charlotte-Goldsboro high school game. The two ends of the stadium were practically empty and the curve in the horse-shoe was just so much white space.

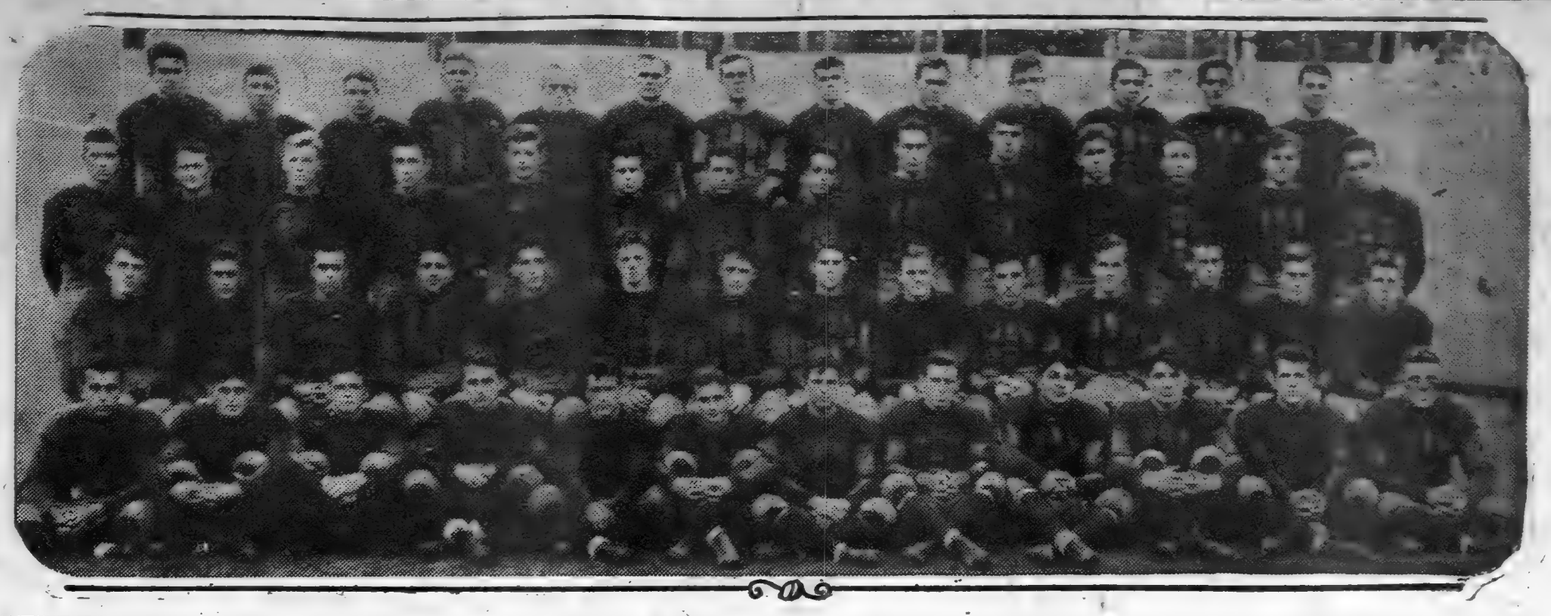
THE CAROLINA DRUM MAJOR, Bill White, vied with the Blue Devil and the free-for-all fights for sidelight attractions. The Blue Devil pranced up and down the sidelines all during the game and also cavorted about with the Duke band.

DESCRIPTIONS of the Duke team and stadium would read like a social affair. The stadium was beautifully decorated with pennants of the various Southern Conference teams, while the Carolina and Duke colors floated over the two rooting sections. Even the Duke team carried out the color scheme and were attractively dressed in white helmets and blue panties.

THE BLUE DEVILS acted like saints for the large part of the game but were given a break in the latter portion of the second quarter when a 25 yard penalty placed the ball in their possession on the Carolina four yard line. Here the Carolina defensive showed their power and held the would-be Devils for three downs, a fourth barely taking the ball over for Duke's only score.

THE ONLY REAL THREAT that Duke made was when Hayes almore got loose after receiving a pass from Buie. Carolina's safety man, Branch, stopped him on U. N. C.'s 19 yard line.

CAROLINA'S OUTSTANDING RUNS of the day were made by Johnny Branch and Jimmy Ward. Jimmy's 47 yard dash off tackle for a score was easily the most outstanding performance of the game. Five or six would-be-tacklers were very much embarrassed after Ward's little jaunt to another score. Johnny's return of a punt from mid-field to the four yard line took second honors in the long runs of the day. The quick formation of Carolina interference showed up well in both of the long strolls made.



JIM MAGNER'S PASSING to Strud Nash in the second quarter raised the Carolina score directly by seven points and indirectly accounted for many more. Carolina not only ruled the ground but also reigned in the air, partly due to Carolina's great pass defense.

JIMMY MAUS received an ovation from the Carolina stands as he retired from the game after Duke had been penalized for tackling out of bounds. This 15 yard penalty was duplicated a few minutes later because of holding and added to Rip Slusser's big gain gave Phil Jackson a chance to raise the Carolina total to 48.

IMPROMPTU FREE-FOR-ALLS seemed to draw quite a few participants as well as spectators. Apparently all the entertainers hailed from Duke University (?).

The 1929 Tar Heel Squad

High Scoring Carolina Team Assaults Duke Contingent

Tar Heels had worked the ball down by crashing the line.

Fullback Spaulding drove center for a fourth late in the third quarter after a sensational 46 yard punt return by Johnny Branch, diminutive quarter. Jimmy Ward, triple-threat high scoring Tar Heel, added another a moment later on a 48 yard off tackle thrust in which he fought his way through the whole Duke team.

The fourth quarter produced two more, the first following a straight goalward, line-crashing attack that netted three first downs with Fullback House crashing it over; and the sixth and final on a short end run by Halfback Jackson after the Tar Heels, aided by two penalties on Duke for roughness, had mixed passes and runs to put the ball in scoring position.

The Tar Heels got six of seven extra points. Spaulding placekicked two. Branch dropkicked one. Jackson hit tackle for another. Duke was offside twice.

A crowd estimated at 15,000 saw the North Carolina triumph and the Duke humiliation, in which the Tar Heels ran the usual 30 men, and rolled up 15 first downs to Duke's 7, and a net gain from scrimmage of 338 yards to Duke's 105.

The Tar Heel backs ran wild, and Captain Ray Farris, All-Southern guard, led a great line in which principal stars were Lipscomb, center; Koenig and Adkins, tackles, and Holt, end.

Starring for Duke were Buie, quarter; Robeson, half; Brewer, fullback; Adkins, center, and Thorne, guard.

Carolina's distance aces had a great day, and long runs featured often.

Little Johnny Branch brought the stands up on his 46-yard punt return through the whole Duke eleven, only to be downed by the Duke punter on Duke's 4-yard line.

He gave them another on a 40-yard thriller around right end which started from punt formation.

Ward's slashing 48-yard battle through tackle for touchdown was another highlight, as also Nash's 22-yard off-tackle gain for touchdown in the first quarter, and several pass gains.

The Tar Heels let up on their passing attack and beat Duke with straight football. Only 8 passes were thrown, six good, for a net yardage of 73 yards. Duke hurled 17, of which but three were good, for 56 yards.

A Great Captain

Ray Farris, two years all-state and this year practically unanimous choice for all-southern guard, has proven one of the greatest captains ever to lead a Tar Heel eleven. One defeat marred the record of the 35-point Carolina team this year. The high scoring record was made possible by a great forward wall led by the greatest guard ever to wear a Carolina uniform—Ray Farris.

CANDIDATES FOR BOXING TEAM ARE SHOWING UP WELL

Under the tutelage of Coach Crayton Rowe, a score of mitmen are fast rounding into shape. Archie Allen has moved up a notch from lightweight to welterweight, and he is looking better than ever this year and is expected to be another champion.

John Warren, brother of the famous Addison "K. O." Warren who captained the first University boxing team and was southern intercollegiate heavyweight champion, has been handicapped all the fall because of science courses. John had a fine season last year and is expected to bring back the S. I. C. title in his weight this year. Obie Davis, falling into the middleweight class, had the misfortune of losing his father in the early fall which necessitated his return home. Obie is expected back after Christmas and can easily uphold this class. Noah Goodridge is an exceptionally fast and clever boxer. Noah had a wonderful season last year, losing only one fight. Jimmie Gattling, from last year's freshman team, and Hoke Webb of the varsity are both very good lightweights. Sheffield is a hard-hitting featherweight and he is expected to run up a string of k. o.'s. Clark is also showing up well in this class. Vaughn has been out of school on the account of illness. When he returns he will take care of the 119 pound division. Edmond Grey, from last year's freshman team, is showing up exceptionally well in his weight. Frank Smathers is looking good in the 160 pound class. With a little more experience, Smathers will make an excellent boxer. There is an obvious weakness in the light heavyweight division, and Coach Rowe is very anxious for more candidates in this weight to try out. Avery and Rosenfelt, with a little more experience, will make good men for this weight. Bill Suggs is a prospective heavyweight.

The freshman team this year has some unusually good material in Grey, Levingston, Jackson, Stallings and Hubbard. These men are loking good for next year's varsity.

Boxing at the University dates from 1926. Add Warren captained the team of that year. In 1927, Crayton Rowe became coach of the team, which was undefeated in dual meets. This was the first Carolina team to attend the Southern Conference Tournament, which is held at Charlottsville, Va. Ox Shuford, Add Warren, and Ed Butler won first places that year, but Virginia won the tournament by a narrow margin. In 1928, Ed Butler was the captain of the first Carolina S. I. C. title team. Crayton Rowe was absent during the season of 1929, but the strength of the team of the preceeding year and with the addition of more experience won the second Carolina S. I. C. title, by a narrow margin over Florida. Archie Allen received the deciding points.

Hard luck trailed Yank Spaulding for two years. This fall he shook his jinx and stepped into the role of first string fullback for Carolina. Yesterday he played his last game for Carolina. He has proven a great fullback, his defensive work marking him as the best back in backing up a line in North Carolina. Yank was awarded his first letter last night at the football banquet. He also received a service sweater last night.

Valuable Books Added To Hanes Library Collection

The Library announces recent acquisitions to the Hanes Foundation for the Study of the Origin and Development of the Book, founded last spring by the children of John Wesley and Anna Hodgin Hanes as a memorial to their parents.

The Library has acquired for the Hanes Foundation a collection of over five hundred volumes from the library of the Reverend Aaron Burtiss Hunter of Raleigh. A set of fifty volumes of the extra illustrated edition of the "Chronicles of America," published by the Yale University Press, has been presented by John Wesley Hanes of New York City. Other additions are a two volume folio French atlas of the eighteenth century and a publication of the first Paris press.

The collection of five hundred volumes recently acquired from Dr. A. B. Hunter of Raleigh were published between the years 1500 to 1900; the bulk of the collection lies within the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries and comprises Bibles and religious works, several works on geography, treatises on medcine, and medaeval law as well as a number of items from the Aldine and Bodoni presses, both well known publishing houses of that time. This is the second purchase made by the foundation from Dr. Hunter, the first having been five hundred incunabula, or books printed before the year 1500.

The Atlas is composed of two hundred and forty large maps published mostly in the eighteenth century. These maps were compiled by two famous French geographers, Delisle and Jaillot. Among the maps is a plate of North America showing the Carolinas.

At a recent auction sale in New York City the Library acquired for the Hanes Foundation a copy of the Speculum Humanae Vitae by Rodericus Zamoriensis. This book was a popular philosophical treatise of the Middle Ages and in this edition was published by what is probably the first university press. In the middle of the fifteenth century the University of Paris felt the need for textbooks and, as a result, established a publishing house. This was the first press to print in Paris, and the example the Library owns is the thirteenth publication of that press. The book has an interesting history, having belonged to William Harris Arnold, a well known book collector and the author of several books on book collecting, and later to John Camp Williams who died last year, who was the most prominent collector in the United States of English literature.

took a long, thoughtful pull at his cigarette. Admitting that actions speak louder than words and using what few words Mr. Sale did speak, one would gather that this Southern author thinks that Mencken does not really believe the things he says about the south, but that he waits until the time is ripe to throw a bomb and enjoys throwing it.

Likes the University

Mr. Sale likes the University of North Carolina because it has a "dignified air" and because there is nothing about it that suggests "high-schoolishness." "It is different," said he, "from other universities and colleges I have visited. It makes one have the feeling that he is at a center of culture, that he is at a university."

Strud Nash Is Captain

Nash is a Tar Heel by birth. He plays right halfback, is five feet eleven, weighs 170, and will be 22 years old tomorrow. He is a leader in social and athletic activities at the University and is a good student.

It was not announced that the election would be held last night until the squad was returning from Durham by bus yesterday afternoon.

At the banquet at which Nash was elected captain, Peter Ruffin and Jack Lindley, assistant managers this year, were selected as managers of the 1930 team. Ruffin and Lindley will succeed Bowman Gray and David Craig as financial and equipment managers of the team.

IS RELIGION BUNK?

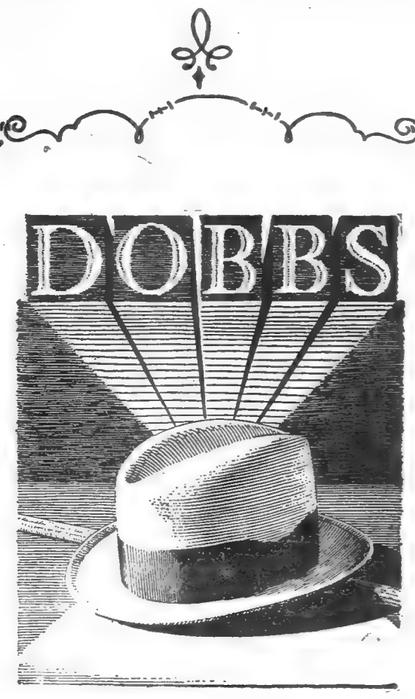
ed for and plunged into destruction. To use a comparatively modern illustration: What happened to France when, some years ago, she turned from God? If you know your history, you know the answer—that France plunged headlong into desolation, and that she did not rise again until she adopted once more creeds of purity, self-sacrifice, and high ideals. Did not God punish the countries and nations of old which turned from Him? Did He not say that those that He destroyed would not be re-built? And are they not still heaps of ruins?



"We have one thing to be thankful for: fewer and fewer people who possess the innate ability to think are going to church." If such a terrible condition existed, why should we be thankful for it? Mr. Senior, your signature is certainly fitting; you are one of the most disillusioned persons that I have ever heard of, although perhaps you yourself are not to be criticized for it. You show very plainly that you have not seen the inside of a church in quite a long time by the above quotation from your article. If you had studied the situation before making your comments, you would have discovered that the situation, at present, is just the opposite from the way you pictured it. I cannot see why people who attend church and believe the principle that have lived for ages upon ages should be accused of not being able to think, when there is so very much evidence in our every-day life that there IS a God and that those who follow Him eventually come out on top, and that those who ignore His teachings sooner or later pay for it.

I think that the freshman who wrote the article to which you referred is, perhaps, taking the matter a little to the extreme when he says that we should go to church on Sunday morning and stay in and read our Bibles all Sunday afternoon. I agree with him in that we should go to church every Sunday, and that we should read our Bibles. But I do not think that it is necessary to spend our entire Sundays in so doing. However, that freshman is, in my opinion, not in the least disillusioned; on the contrary, he is headed down the right road. Personally, I should like to know who he is; he is to be congratulated. Another person who deserves favorable notice is "A Sophomore," the writer of "Another Word On Religion." His arguments are right; how can you get around them?

We of today need to watch our steps. We are getting too far away from God—some of us. Some of us are getting to the place where we recognise no higher being than ourselves, and, as a consequence, something is going to happen, sooner or later. It has always happened in past times, and it will most surely happen in the present and future. We had best "look to our laurels."

Pardon me, Mr. Editor, if I have taken up too much space. I had that on my chest and had to get rid of it. Thank you.

MARY D. WRIGHT DEBATE TONIGHT IN GERRARD HALL

Smoot-Hawley Tariff To Be Discussed By Di and Phi Speakers.

The annual Mary D. Wright debate will be held tonight in Gerrard hall, beginning at 8 o'clock and lasting for approximately one hour and a half.

The query which will be debated is "Resolved, that the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill should be passed as introduced to the special session of congress which convened last June." The representatives of the Phi assembly, R. E. Stanton and J. C. Harris, will uphold the affirmative side of the issue. J. C. Williams and C. A. Shreve, representing the Di Senate, will present the case of the negative. The coveted Mary D. Wright medal will be awarded to the better speaker of the winning team. Last year it was won by B. C. Moore of the Di senate.

Both the Di and Phi will attend the debate in a group. Three faculty members will judge the contest, picking the winning team and the better speaker of that team, in addition.

Chase and Walker To Attend College Conference Today

The regular representatives of the University are Dr. Harry W. Chase and Dr. N. W. Walker, who are respectively president and secretary-treasurer of the conference. As officers of the conference, Dr. Chase and Dr. Walker have been engaged for several weeks past in the preparation of the program.

Other faculty members who will be present include Dr. M. R. Trabue, who is to take part on the program, and Dr. T. J. All students who wish to remove conditions this quarter must make their applications to the Registrar's office this week. This is the last opportunity for those who received an "E" in any of their courses last December to remove it.

MEMORIAL HALL DECLARED UNSAFE

Building To Be Torn Down Or Rebuilt To Prevent Collapse.

Historic Memorial hall, the large auditorium which is used for chapel exercises, commencement and other public exercises, has been pronounced unsafe for use, Dr. Harry W. Chase, president of the University, declared in a statement issued Saturday night.

A thorough investigation over a period of weeks has led to the conclusion that the building must either be rebuilt practically from the ground up or torn down to prevent collapse, Dr. Chase's statement said.

Memorial hall was completed in 1883 during the administration of President Kemp P. Battle and was so named in commemoration of the illustrious dead of the University.

A month ago, on the advice of engineers, the building was ordered closed, pending a complete investigation. Since then the University has been without an adequate auditorium for public exercises.

Dr. Chase's announcement came as the result of a long series of investigations undertaken by the building committee of the University trustees since weakness in the structure was discovered early in the fall. The hall has been examined not only by the University's engineers, Atwood and Nash, but by Sherwood Brockwell of the state insurance department and by Professor Thomas Gregory, head of the department of civil engineering at Johns Hopkins University, a recognized national consultant on such matters. University authorities have been exceedingly slow to reach a conclusion because of the historic importance of the structure, which, the engineers agree, must

Erroneous Impressions Of Medical School Corrected

All "Stiffs" Are Not Electrocuted; No Man Can Sell His Body And Then Spend The Money; Respect For Deceased Is Required.

One of the main points of interest to the first year man is the so called "stiff room" in the medical building. The majority of the students do not know what procedure is gone through by the medical school and consequently imagine many wierd and untrue things.

There is a common belief that all of the bodies are those of criminals electrocuted by the state. This is untrue. Only a small majority of the bodies are of those who have been electrocuted.

An undertaker takes an unclaimed body, at his own risk, to his shop and keeps it there at least four or five days. Meanwhile he is required to attempt to find relatives or friends of the deceased, then if at the end of that period the body is still unclaimed the undertaker is required to bury the body at his own expense or to notify the department of public welfare that he has an unclaimed body. That department then notifies the school and the school negotiates for the body. The average body in good condition sells for fifty or sixty dollars.

There is a common idea that a person may sell his body to a medical school and then spend the money. This is a very false one.

When a body arrives here it is put into a preserving fluid which is made up of formaldehyde, borax and salt. It remains in this fluid for a number of months and is then placed on a table for dissection. After dissection the remains are collected and placed in a coffin and buried by the University. Some of the bones are cleaned and kept for purpose of instruction.

A class is divided into groups of six and sub-divided into groups of three students. These two groups then begin dissection on a single body, one group beginning at the abdomen, the other beginning at the neck and head. One half of a body is thus dissected by a group of three in one school quarter.

At the beginning of the winter term new bodies are placed on the table and the groups reverse so that at the end of the winter quarter each man has assisted in the dissection of an entire human body.

Most of the bodies that the University gets come from this immediate section: Durham, Raleigh, Sanford, and occasionaly Winston-Salem and Greensboro. A number come from the state prison at Raleigh. Most of those electrocuted are obtained.

The students in medicine are instructed and required throughout the course of gross atanomy to maintain a respectful attitude toward the subject on which they work. Medical students soon learn to work in a mechanical way and consequently they do not view their work with the gruesome aspects associated with it by the layman.

Staff Changes

Several changes in the Daily Tar Heel staff organization were announced by Editor Glenn Holder at the regular weekly staff meeting in the Tar Heel office Sunday night.

Robert Hodges of Winston-Salem was promoted from the reportorial staff to an assistant editorship, succeeding Elwin Dungan of Chapel Hill, who becomes a city editor. Dungan replaces Sherman Shore of Winston-Salem, who will be out of school for the remainder of the quarter. J. G. deRoulhac Hamilton, Jr., of Chapel Hill was promoted from the sports reportorial staff to assistant sports editor. He takes the place left vacant by the resignation of Crawford MacKethan of Fayetteville.

Several beats were reassigned and two men dropped from the staff for failure to perform their duties satisfactorily.

Theatre passes for excellent work during the past week were awarded to City Editor K. C. Ramsay of Salisbury and Reporters Louis Brooks of Greensboro, Jack Riley of Chapel Hill and Assistant Sports Editor J. G. deRoulhac Hamilton, Jr., of Chapel Hill.

Meyer Says Scout Seminar Successful

According to H. D. Meyer of the University department of sociology, the North Carolina Boy Scout executive seminar held Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week was a great success. Mr. Meyer was in charge of the program of the seminar, acting in this capacity as a member of the regional educational committee. Although he was absent from the University during Friday and Saturday, the work of the seminar was well directed by H. F. Comer of the Y. M. C. A. and Morgan F. Vining of the extension bureau, he said.

The program for the year's work for "The Growth of the Scout Executive" provides that another seminar, also giving 12 hours of credit, shall be given in the month of February. Other educational activities of the scouts, which are being sponsored by the University, include a patrol leaders' encampment during the first term of the University summer school.

Regarding the publicity given the seminar by the Daily Tar Heel, Mr. Meyer said that copies of the paper would be sent to university and scout officials in Georgia and South Carolina encouraging them to sponsor similar activities in their states.

H. F. COMER TALKS TO SOPHOMORES

Sex Problems Are To Be Solved Rationally Says Y Secretary In Chapel.

That sex problems are to be solved by considering them from a rational viewpoint and in the light of certain known facts, is H. F. Comer's answer to certain questions which students felt were left unanswered by Dr. Seerley and Dr. Gray, recent speakers at the University on sex problems.

Speaking to the sophomores in chapel Monday morning, the Y. M. C. A. secretary outlined his opinion under three questions that have been most frequently asked by students on the subject of sex. To his questioners he replied that all sex problems are to be faced and solved. Neither for "mental fear," pure neglect, nor for any other reasons are they to be ignored. It is his contention that a rational consideration of such matters will usually clear away one's difficulties.

Mr. Comer cautioned against the confusing of natural and abnormal impulses, the latter of which is apt to develop from the former. The failure to deal properly with matters relating to sex, he said, may result in an abnormal condition of the impulses that will hamper greatly the effectiveness of one's efforts in his business, profession, or other interests in latter life.

Clock Installed In New Library

The University library has recently installed an electric clock over the middle doorway leading from the main circulating desk on the second floor to the stack rooms.

This clock was specially designed for the library by the International Time Recording Company. The face of the clock is of polished Tennessee golden grain marble. The hands and figures of the dial are made of statutory bronze.

This clock is operated in connection with the other clocks on the campus, and is included in the system operated from South building.

AIRPLANE MODEL IS ON DISPLAY IN PHILLIPS HALL

Machine Is Used By Curtiss-Wright Ground School In Raleigh; Threadgill Also Here.

A great many students have been attracted to the vicinity of the engineering laboratory in Phillips hall, by a very interesting machine which is on display there through the courtesy of the Curtiss-Wright flying service located at Raleigh.

The machine consists of a flying model airplane operated by full controls such as are used on a full-sized plane, the control surfaces being worked by cords running through the plane to the control stick and rudderbar, which are located in a cockpit back of the model. The power is furnished by a one horse-power electric motor, operating a fan in a wind tunnel which gives the same effects as a propeller blast on the plane.

Within certain limitations this model has all the reactions of a real airplane. It takes off and lands, does turns to the right and left, just as a larger plane would do.

This model is a part of the equipment of the Curtiss-Wright ground school being conducted at Raleigh. It is used in the class room to demonstrate the action of the propeller blast on the various control surfaces, and is said to be as instructive as it is interesting. It was brought to Chapel Hill through the efforts of Professor Neil P. Bailey of the mechanical engineering department of the University.

With the machine is Henry Threadgill of the sales department of the Curtiss-Wright flying school. Applications are being received by Mr. Threadgill for enrollment in the new ground school class at Raleigh which begins tomorrow.

Professor Bailey and Mr. Threadgill have extended an invitation to the public to visit the engineering laboratory and see this machine at work. Co-eds and ladies of the community are also invited.

The group photograph of the Di Senate will be taken this morning at the chapel period immediately in front of the Law Building. Every member of the senate is requested to be present.

Scrooge Lives Again While Koch Reads Dickens Story

(By Louis Brooks)

The stage was gloomy. Christmas trees bordering either side reached back into an impenetrable darkness. The only furnishings were a table and a chair. On the table burned a single candle.

Marley was dead. The distinct voice of the man seated at the table reading aloud had carried the fact to the mind of every member of the audience. However, the gloomy setting seemed ample invitation for the appearance of the ghost of the deceased Marley. The more imaginative of the audience momentarily expected it.

Then the ghost came. If the audience didn't see it at first, at least the terrified Scrooge was well aware of the sinister presence. Scrooge didn't like the affair at all, and didn't hesitate to say so, though he made a pass at being pleasant to the visitor.

While Scrooge and the ghost were settling the question—not exactly to Scrooge's liking—the sound of Christmas carols added realism to the yuletide setting. The singers were Mr. and Mrs. George Lawrence and Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Harrer, and the place happened to be the Playmaker theatre, but it might have been London at any Christmas time.

It was the last stave. Scrooge had seen enough to soften the heart of the most confirmed miser. Spirits had come and gone, and the ghost of Marley—why the ghost of Marley had turned into . . . a bed post!

The reading Sunday afternoon was Professor Frederick Koch's 23rd reading of Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol." Judging from the enthusiasm of the crowd that filled the Playmaker theatre the story never grows old.

PURLOINED PARAGRAPHS

Strange as it may sound, those who remain on the level are usually those who rise the highest—Christian Science Monitor.

Old guards and young guards at Washington seem to have been no more successful in making themselves intelligible than the guards on the subway.—New York Times.

Tar Heel Topics

Fifteen days until Christmas, but what is more to the point, eight days until exams!

Perhaps Secretary Stimson's note has had a beneficial effect upon the Chinese after all. They have had only one civil war in the last four days.

The editor of the Carolinian at N. C. C. W. has been hailed before the powers-that-be for exhibiting radical tendencies and other evidencies of a turn of mind not quite the thing in a discreet young lady editor; but they forgot to call her a communist. Congratulations on your editor, Carolinian.

What with the rebels raising merry Hades in Haiti, the Chinese government tottering as badly as Memorial Hall, Judge Stacy boomed as an opponent for Senator Simmons in the approaching campaign, and Hoover planning to carry on the World Court question where Woodrow Wilson left off, it looks like a hard week for newspaper editors.

A former University of North Carolina student, Dr. P. H. Carr, now a graduate student at Cornell University, has made a new discovery which makes possible the taking of pictures on cold, hard, untreated metal without the usual photographer's medium of a sensitized plate. We always did say that the physics department was going to turn out somebody who would do something some day.

The Architectural Nightmare's Doom Is Sealed

Now that the doom of Memorial Hall, impending since weakness was discovered in the structure early in the fall, has been officially sealed by the engineers' reports, prompt action by the building committee of the board of trustees is imperative. The "architectural monstrosity" must be scrapped or completely rebuilt at an expense probably in excess of its original cost, according to the experts.

Although the condemnation proceedings have left the University with not even the excuse for an auditorium represented by the grotesque hodge-podge of architectural notions which is Memorial Hall, they have been welcomed by nearly every one on the campus. A few sticks of dynamite would have achieved the same result, but dynamiting is not a healthy pastime. It is entirely unlikely that the building committee will decide to reconstruct Memorial Hall; the members will certainly feel compunction for the aesthetically inclined who avert their eyes whenever they pass the architectural nightmare.

Memorial Hall should be cheerfully consigned to the oblivion which it has richly merited since it was first utilized as an auditorium. But in the meantime the University is left without the semblance of an auditorium. The building committee should set about the task of securing the necessary funds and drawing up the plans for an auditorium here without delay. And no half-way measures should be adopted; the modern conception of University building should be adhered to in drawing up the plans, which involves the ancient standards of poise and dignity embodied in the new library.

Wisconsin's Proposed Innovation

The placing of students upon their own initiative is no distinctly new educational idea. English universities for some time have practiced the system of informality whereby the student studies as he wills and has conferences with faculty members with whom he works out his own peculiar problems. Such a system, of course, necessarily must embrace some class room work such as special lectures and laboratory experimentation. This, however, does not eliminate the factor of the individuals responsibility—a responsibility which rests entirely upon him—in his development of his intellectual faculties.

American institutions, notably the University of Wisconsin and Rollins College, have tried the plan with apparent success. According to President Glenn Frank of the University of Wisconsin, "the experimental college has proved itself with amazing success during its three years of existence." The authorities of Rollins College likewise find the system highly satisfactory.

An interesting development in the situation recently came to light when it was learned that President Frank of Wisconsin was placing before the people of the state a proposal which would enable him to administer to the entire University the new methods worked out in the experimental college of the school. He stated that it was in the main a stimulant for college education with student interest as the principal ingredient.

Under President Frank's program, the student's "intellectual awakening" will be hastened; forty percent of the time now devoted to set classes will be replaced by the informal methods of the experimental college; sixty percent of the time will be devoted to a varied course; optional class attendance will gradually be established; and examinations and quizzes will not retard the rate of the advancement of students.

Whether the people of Wisconsin will manifest their approval of the plan is another matter. It nevertheless affords an interesting speculation. Should a state university exclusively adopt a plan which, in comparison to academic methods, is radical in the sense that it is something new, by the approval of the tax-payers, it would obviously be an advance for the system in the field of American institutional education. Adoption by Wisconsin of President Frank's program no doubt will have no negligible influence in the future upon the methods employed by other state universities and similar institutions.

CO-EDS

Always so full of pep
Making the most of life
What a pleasure to look at
But never for a wife.

They've usually seen everything
And want only just the best
After they've had the pick of the boys
Home girls can have the rest.

All women are natural gold diggers
But at that art the coeds excell
And if they don't drive a man to drink
They make his life a living hell.

Always they have that undefinable look
All men with it they tease
It brings them around their feet
Their sole aim being to please.

They wander over our campus paths
Mainly to attract attention
But how they affect our noble profs
It wouldn't do to mention.

They sit on the front row
And reply to all questions
Even though they haven't the answer
They always have a suggestion.

But though coeds we detest
As on through life we skim
I can't help but wonder
What would life be without them.

Art Exhibition In Raleigh This Week

The North Carolina Art Society, through its officers, Mrs. Harrington and Mr. R. B. House of the University has extended a cordial invitation to the students and faculty members of the University to attend the third annual exhibition of paintings and statuary being held in the Sir Walter hotel in Raleigh during the next ten days.

The Grand Central Art Galleries of New York, which enjoy an extensive reputation for their fine art works, have sent down to the Society an excellent exhibit and one that is said to be as estimable as their previous exhibitions.

Universal Language Club To Meet Today

The Esperanto Club will have its fifth meeting of the year today in Murphy hall at 5 o'clock.

Dr. E. C. P. Metzenthin, who is instructing the members of the club in Esperanto, recently received a letter from Dr. F. Haman, of Wisconsin, who is the official representative of the International Esperanto Society. The writer commended the University in establishing a club of interested persons in the universal language.

Merely Meandering

john mebane

Judging from the editorial columns of the Carolinian, certain members of the faculty of North Carolina College for Women believe that the young ladies who publish the paper are of a radical and overly-critical turn of mind. The chief points of attack (which we derive from an editorial) are features, editorials, and The Copy Cat. Being a benevolent and sympathetic youth, we feel a necessity for defending a fellow (speaking metaphrastically) columnist. The Copy Cat is quite a delightful column; and as for being radical in tendency! Who ever heard of a columnist being radical? Why, they are the most pitifully harmless creatures in the world. And the feline tendency for meowing gratuitously at all hours can be forgiven if the note is so delightfully harmonious as that of Felix!

—mm—

We also notice in the paragraphics of the same paper this statement: "As ballet dancers the Carolina band isn't so hot. We suggest a co-ed band to perform on the field at football games." Why not let the co-eds' performance feature and throw in the game as an added attraction?

—mm—

This plan, if put into effect, would at least center attention on the field. As it now is, the attention of the audience is divided between the football game and the co-eds' performances in the grand-stand.

—mm—

(We swear that the above statement does not apply to Carolina co-eds.)

—mm—

Yuh know, the other night we was walkin' home jus' when the tall trees was waylayin' dusk, and the fallin' of the leaves was murderin' silence, and we was makin' verses to ourselves and everythin' was so soft and purtty, and—my Lord! where was we at? Anyway, here's what come of it:

THE BARD SOBS

My love is like a red, red rose
That blooms in summer every year;
My love is like a red, red rose
When winter comes, the blossom goes:
My love is like a red, red rose
Until the signs of frost appear.

My love is like the petal there,
Too delicate to paint in rhyme;
My love is like the petal there,
And when it falls, the bough is bare:
My love is like the petal there—
It clings until it's winter-time.

—mm—

Bobby Burns must 'ave been a great chap.

—mm—

Well, here's a petition:

O, columnists are funny chaps,
They sling mud in each other's laps,
And then across a paper fence
They toss each other compliments.
They're careless with their leisure time
(And yet more careless with their rhyme!)
And when they should be reading Keats,
They're writing verses to their sweets.
O, Copy Cats, and Pen Points, too,
The Campus, Pointer—all of you,
Let's start a campaign and coerce
All columnists to give up verse!

U. D. C. PRESENTS Y WITH LEE'S PICTURE

A portrait of Robert Edward Lee has been presented to the Y. M. C. A. by the local Leonidas Polk chapter of the U. D. C. This portrait, which was given to the local chapter by Mrs. John H. Anderson, is now hanging on the west wall of the main floor lobby of the Y building. "The portrait, a reprint of the famous W. Haskel Coffin's painting of Lee, adds much to the appearance of the lobby, and the Y is very grateful to the local chapter for giving it," states Mr. H. F. Comer, general secretary of the Y.

"The painting from which this portrait was copied is one of the most famous ever painted of the great Confederate general. It gives a very good three-quarters view of Lee. The great art critics say that this picture is, without a doubt, one of the best likenesses of the great general that has ever been exhibited," states a member of the local chapter.

Ray Farris Named On All-American Teams

Recent selections of All-American gridiron warriors placed Ray Farris in a guard position on the second team in one news service selection and in a third team berth on another selection.

The NEA service's pick for members of the mythical All-American team for 1929 placed Captain Ray Farris, triple threat Tar Heel lineman, on the second team, while the Associated Press found a place for him on the third team.

The members of these mythical All-American teams are chosen not only for their outstanding individual play, but according to the strength of the aggregation with which they play. The season's scores find the Tar Heels in second place among the nation's high scorers and also credit the Tar Heels with one of the strongest offensive teams in the United States.

THREE CAROLINA MEN LEAD STATE

Carolina's meteoric backs, flashing for 48 points against Duke Saturday in the final battle of the gridiron campaign for the state, established a new all-time scoring mark for grid machines of North Carolina to shoot for in the future.

The scoring orgy sent the Tar Heel mark for the season up to 346 points for 10 games, and boosted two of Coach Collins' backs into second and third place in state individual scoring. Ward, Tar Heel halfback, had clinched first place before the Duke game. Spaulding and Nash took second and third respectively.

State players scoring 30 or more points follow:

Player	School	TD	EP	T
Ward,	N. C.	12	0	72

Branch,	N. C.	5	2	32
J. Waggoner,	Elon	5	0	30

In the Conference Gene McEver of Tennessee clinched honors by running wild over South Carolina. Ward, Spaulding and Nash also boosted their positions in the scoring heap. Ward tallied once and vaulted into third place with 72 points. Spaulding, fullback, scored once and kicked two points after touchdown to take sixth position with 58. Nash led the Tar Heel barrage with three touchdowns and advanced to eighth place with 56.

Farris, Branch and Magner To Play In New Year's Contest

Captain Ray Farris, Johnnie Branch and Jimmy Magner, leading Tar Heel gridiron warriors, will accompany the northern squad of the Southern Conference team to Atlanta on New Year's day according to a recent announcement made by Dr. W. D. Funderhouse, secretary of the Southern Conference.

Because of the outstanding positions which Farris, Magner, and Branch held in the recent Southern Conference all-star teams picked by the S. I. C. coaches, they have been invited to participate in the charity football game in Atlanta on New Years' day. This game will be tween the north and south divisions of the S. I. C. and each squad will be composed of 25 men.

The northern division is composed of teams from North and South Carolina, Kentucky, Maryland, Tennessee and Virginia. The southern division will be composed of teams from Florida, Georgia, Louisiana and Mississippi.

Farris has been chosen almost unanimously for a first team berth on the southern all-star teams picked while Branch and Magner tie up with a call for the second all-Southern team on one selection and a position on the third choice by another. Magner was awarded a halfback position on the Associated Press' selection while Branch took a third team berth. On the NEA service's pick Branch took second honors while Magner came third.

High Scorer

Jimmie Ward, brilliant Tar Heel back, finished his gridiron career Saturday by leading all North Carolina players and ranking third among Conference players in scoring. His play during the past three years marks him as one of the greatest backs in the state.

MONOGRAMS GO TO 35 FOOTBALL MEN

Three Full Teams Get Awards For Fine Work; 35 Freshmen Win Numerals.

Following one of the most successful football seasons in history, the University athletic council announced the awarding of 33 monograms to members of the state championship varsity team and 35 "1933" numerals to members of the freshman squad.

The Tar Heel varsity, besides bringing a second consecutive state title to Chapel Hill, led the south and east in scoring, won more Southern Conference games than any other team, finished third in Conference standings, placed second among the nation's scorers, and set a new Tar Heel scoring average of 34.6 points per game.

Special awards were made to Leon Spaulding and Marshall Snyder. Spaulding, star fullback, narrowly missed winning a monogram last year due to injuries. For meritorious service this year he was given two monograms and service stripes. Snyder, a star on the 1926 freshman team and a great varsity prospect, underwent an operation to make him a better football player and became crippled. This was to have been his final year. He was awarded a full varsity monogram.

Letters with two stars denoting three years of service went to Captain Ray Farris and Jimmy Ward.

Letters and one star, for two years of play, were awarded to D. S. Holt, W. S. Koenig, F. A. Adkins, W. E. Eskew, J. S. Hudson, J. B. Fenner, C. L. Wyrick, J. E. Magner, J. R. Maus, Captain-Elect E. S. Nash, Philip Jackson, C. P. Erickson, H. C. House, J. T. Harden, and Leon Spaulding.

Those receiving letters for the first time were Herb Nelson, W. S. Tabb, Gavin Dortch, George Thompson, W. L. Harper, S. E. Crew, H. S. McIver, N. R. Lipscomb, J. U. Gilbreath, E. D. Fysal, R. A. Parsley, T. R. Brown, J. D. Branch, C. M. Redfern, F. W. Slusser, and D. M. Snyder.

Two football managers received manager's letters, Bowman Gray and David Craig. Peter Brown Ruffin and Jack Lindley were announced for managers for 1930.

The 35 members of the freshman football team receiving their 1933 numerals were: B. A. Allen, F. F. Adkins, S. H. Abrams, W. E. Beale, W. D. Croom, Stuart Chandler, Allen Cole, C. W. Collins, J. W. Daniel, G. S. Donnell, A. K. Davis, E. C. Ferebee, B. K. Grier, D. P. Henry, H. M. Hodges, J. W. Jackson, P. Landis, R. A. McDade, J. D. McNeil, Charles Nichols, E. H. Newcomb, J. Margolis, A. Oliverio, B. C. Philpot, J. G. Peacock, T. S. Redding, W. S. Petree, E. T. Robinson, W. B. Sickler, James Sharkey, Frank Smith, K. Thompson, E. G. Walker, A. H. Wornam, Alexander Zovesus.

NEW DORMS' WIN RULED VOID; TO PLAY GAME TODAY

Winners of Campus Tag Football Title Will Be Decided In Kenan Stadium at 3 O'clock.

The game between New Dorms, champions of the dormitory league, and Beta Theta Pi, champions of the fraternity league, has been declared void by the director of the intramural department.

A ruling of the intramural department allows dormitories to recruit men living in town. Men living in one dormitory may not play for another dormitory. Through a misunderstanding of this rule several men not living in New Dorms participated in the championship game last Thursday.

The deciding game will be played this afternoon at 3 o'clock in Kenan stadium.

N. C. Coaches Pick All-Opponent Team

With the end of the football season and the naming of all-sectional teams, the Daily Tar Heel believes that an all-opponent team selected by members of the Carolina coaching staff would prove interesting as well as instructive to grid followers.

Accordingly, the coaches have selected the following team:

Smith, Georgia ..... Left End
Lepo, N. C. State ..... Left Tackle
Hubbard, V. P. I. ..... Left Guard
Beale, South Carolina ..... Center
Adkins, Duke ..... Right Guard
Maree, Ga. Tech ..... Right Tackle
Heagy, Maryland ..... Right End
Downs, Georgia ..... Quarterback
Sloan, Virginia, ... Left Halfback
Thomason, Ga. Tech, Right Half
Rothstein, Georgia ..... Fullback

All men interested in varsity track are requested to report to Coach Bob Fetzer this afternoon at five o'clock in 103 Bingham hall.

Otherwise they will report to the gymnasium.

Track and field tests will be substituted for the regular gym work. The following events will be held: 50-yard dash; 50-yard low hurdles; high jump; shot put; discus; javelin.

Each man will report to the desk just inside the main gate of Emerson field and receive a number.

Two Fire Alarms Cause No Damage

Two alarms that came in at the same time gave the fire department a busy few minutes Saturday at 6:15.

Firemen first answered an alarm on Franklin street. A Ford roadster owned by Tom Mitchell caught fire from an unknown source in front of Jack Lipman's clothing store. The damage was slight, amounting to not over four dollars.

Immediately after leaving this blaze the firemen answered a call for a leave and brush fire in the woods on Columbia street, opposite the Phi Delta Theta house.

No alarms were sounded Sunday.

Walker and Wilson Return From Meeting

Dean N. W. Walker of the school of education and Dr. T. J. Wilson, Jr., registrar, returned Saturday night from the annual session of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, held in Lexington, Ky. last week. The session, which opened Monday, December 2, and adjourned on Friday, December 6, was attended by approximately 25 regular delegates from this state.

During the meeting, Dr. Walker served as a member of the Commission on Secondary Schools, while Dr. Wilson filled, on the Commission on Institutions of Higher Learning, the position regularly held by Dr. Harry W. Chase. These Commissions, between which the work of the Association is divided, are charged with important duties and powers in their respective fields.

Dr. Walker, in addition to this work, was chairman of a committee appointed for the purpose of recommending a definite policy in regard to the Bachelor of Music degree. In this capacity, he presented a report to the meeting favoring the recognition of the Music degree as a strictly professional one, which policy was adopted by the Association.

President Few of Duke University and Dr. Walker extended the Association an invitation to hold its next annual session at Durham, but in consideration of the lack of hotel facilities in that city, the Association voted the invitation down.

MEMORIAL HALL IS DECLARED UNSAFE

either be entirely rebuilt or torn down.

The building is supported chiefly on two great wooden arches, and lacks altogether any concrete or steel reinforcements. Bulging of the roof of the building early in the fall led to the discovery that distinct movement had taken place in the roof timbers of the building since the last engineering check some months earlier. At one point movement had carried heavy timbers as much as eight inches out of line. At other places bolt heads had been drawn a half-inch or more into the wood, and great cracks were opening up at many joints. The building committee therefore ordered the building closed for a thorough examination. This revealed a very serious condition, as it was found, after a removal of sections of the encasing brick-work, that at all four points where the two main arches rest on their foundations extensive dry rot had set in, and the examination Friday by Professor Gregory showed that one of these main supports is beginning to sink as a result of the disintegration of the timbers. Only the brick-work encasing the base of the arches has so far prevented a collapse of the building, in the judgment of the engineers.

The weakness which has been revealed is so fundamental that, in the opinion of the engineers, the building must either be rebuilt practically from the ground up, with steel trusses throughout, or it must be torn down to prevent collapse.

"On account of the historic and sentimental importance of the structure we have tried to make the most thorough and careful checks," Dr. Chase said Saturday night. "In addition to inspection and checking by our own engineers, Mr. Brockwell, of the state insurance department, has made two examinations, and rendered written reports. As a final measure of precaution, after discussion with Governor Gardner, it was determined to employ a consulting engineer of national reputation for an examination, and Professon Gregory, head of the department of civil engineering at Johns Hopkins, was chosen for the purpose. He made Friday a thorough examination of the building, and has pronounced it unsafe and impossible to recondition except by the substitution of an entirely new and adequate system of structural supports which involves practically rebuilding the structure.

"We are thus faced with a very serious decision regarding the building, which is important, not only as our only large auditorium, but as a memorial of University history. The erection of the building at a time of great poverty in the University and the state was the work of the devotion and vision of President Battle, with the assistance of Dr. George T. Winston and Paul C. Cameron of Hillsboro, who financed the completion of the building when funds from other sources were exhausted. It was, indeed, the only building erected on the University campus during the administration of President Battle, and whether the decision of the trustees is to rebuild the present structure or seek provision for a new auditorium, the memorial features which he conceived and which are the greatest single tangible record of the achievements of University men, will, I am sure, be retained and enlarged. In the meantime the difficulties of the University without an adequate auditorium may be easily imagined."

DEAN CARROLL DELIVERS TALK

Advances Reason For The "Low Levels of Business Exploitation Against Which the Public Mind Rebels."

Delivering a public address to the students and faculty of Davidson College on Monday night, Dean D. D. Carroll of the school of commerce advanced two reasons for the "low levels of business exploitation against which the public mind rebels."

These reasons—the absorption of isolated, small scale, individually and family owned industries, large scale systems of interrelated establishments, and an increasingly detached interest by stockholders—were the high spots in the treatment of his subject, "New Wines in Old Bottles," which he interpreted as an industrial readjustment in North Carolina.

In the early part of his address Dean Carroll stated that agricultural economy was fast giving ground to a process of industrialization, with the result that "our life is becoming more complicated and our outlook and opportunities broadened. Individualism is giving way to group relationships and conscious interdependencies," he said. The absorption process meant that intimate relationships, a feeling of personal responsibility, and warm, paternal sympathy which characterized the earlier stage of industrialism were gradually being replaced, he said, by impersonal, indirect, cold calculating policies. He did not blame any person or persons for this situation but maintained that it was inherent in the nature of highly organized, large scale competitive, corporate ownership and operation.

Temptations of the public to buy goods at the lowest price available, irrespective of the integrity of the business policies responsible for the low prices, and the attitude of the stockholder who determines and judges success of management largely by the size of the current dividend were factors supplementing his earlier and broader statements of causes responsible for the low levels.

"The people of North Carolina must recognize that our economic development under competitive pressure will give rise to more and more practices which menace the integrity of business endeavor or undermine the social welfare.

"Safety lies in two directions," continued Dean Carroll, "the better elements in industrial fields may cooperate to eliminate unscrupulous practices. This still leaves some of the more stubborn and deep seated exploitation uncontrolled. The all persuasive and sovereign power of society, expressed through social legislation, may be a necessary safeguard even to the more far sighted, civic minded business men themselves."

Business Manager

President Greene Asks Seniors To Get Pictures Made

Ralph Greene, president of the senior class, has issued an appeal to all seniors to have their pictures made before Thursday, December 12. Yackety Yack officials have extended the deadline for senior pictures two days at the request of senior class officials.

The complete letter of President Greene is as follows:

"We would like for the senior section of the Yackety Yack to include the picture of every member of the class. The business manager has extended the deadline to Thursday, December 12. So if you have not already done so be sure to drop by Wootten-Moulten this week and have it made. Our total class dues for the year are $10 for each member allocated to the three quarters as follows: $4 fall quarter, $4 winter quarter, and $2 spring quarter. $6 of this total goes to the Yackety Yack and the remainder takes care of the senior dance to be given in the spring, the various smokers and other incidental expenses.

"Please don't forget to utilize the dues which you pay and have your picture made this week."

'The Show Off' Cast Has Been Selected

At the tryouts held at the Playmaker theatre Monday afternoon the tentative cast was chosen for the Playmakers' coming production of George Kelly's comedy, "The Show-Off."

"The Show-Off" will be presented here on January 30, 31, and February 1. It is considered by critics to be one of the outstanding American comedies of recent years.

The tentative cast is: Clara, Miss George Wilcox; Mrs. Fisher, Miss Penelope Alexander; Amy, Miss Anne Melick; Frank Hyland, E. D. W. Davies; Mr. Fisher, J. P. Fox; Joe, Whitner Bissell; Aubrey Piper, R. P. Bond; Mr. Gil, D. B. Roberts; Mr. Rogers, George Stone.

Safety Fence Erected Around Memorial Hall

Since information from engineers indicates that Memorial hall is in an unsafe condition and that it cannot be used as a place in which to hold public meetings, workmen have erected a fence around the building to prevent students from walking near the structure. At one time there was a rope stretched there to prevent students from trespassing, but as this was not sufficient to keep them out the new fence has been erected.

Student Notice

Students may gain admittance to the basketball game tonight between the Tar Heels and the Raleigh Y. M. C. A. by entering at a special student gate, athletic officials announced. This plan will be followed in all games before the Christmas holidays.

Coach Chuck Collins

Chuck Collins Called South's Wonder Coach

Genial Tar Heel Mentor Being Given Chief Credit For Team's Success.

WIN FOR ROCKNE SYSTEM

Collins Is Only 26 Years of Age; Fetzer and Cerney Able Assistants.

(By R. W. Madry)

An Irish gentleman by the name of Chuck Collins is being hailed as the wonder coach in the southland these days.

For this man Collins is the boy coach—he is only 26—who has been the chief tutor for the University of North Carolina football team which has smashed so many records this year.

A check-up reveals that the Tar Heel team, with 346 points, now ranks second in the nation's scoring, preceded only by Southern California with 400 points, and leads the east and south; that it has set a new all-time scoring record for University teams, with an average of 34.6 points a game as compared with the 32-point average made by the 1914 team; that it has won nine of its 10 games, the only loss being to Georgia by a 19 to 12 score; and that it has won more Southern Conference games than any other team.

It is generally conceded that but for a let-up in one quarter of the Georgia game the Tar Heels would today be hailed as southern champions.

The 1929 Tar Heels beat Wake Forest 48 to 0, Maryland 43 to 0, Georgia Tech 18 to 7, V. P. I. 38 to 13, South Carolina 40 to 0, Davidson 26 to 7, N. C. State 32 to 0, Virginia 41 to 7 and Duke 48 to 7. They lost to Georgia 19 to 12.

The defeats of Maryland, V. P. I., Virginia and Duke were by the largest scores any Tar Heel team has ever piled up on these rivals.

So much for scoring records, for the central theme of this piece is Chuck Collins, a young man from Oak Park, Ill.

Collins is a product of Notre Dame, a pupil of the famous Knute Rockne. Collins played end on the national championship Notre Dame team of 1924, and Rockne will tell you today that this former pupil was one of the greatest ends ever to don a uniform for any school.

If in a communicative mood Rockne might also tell you about a most interesting moment in the life of this pupil and coach.

Music Department Of Community Club Holds Meet Today

The music department of the Chapel Hill Community club will hold its semi-monthly meeting this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock in the music building. Mrs. F. B. McCall has arranged a program on modern French music, which will be carried out according to the following plan:

First, a very brief resume of the period from 1850 to the present day will be given. It will merely mention the outstanding composers and will give a general idea of what France has contributed to the musical world during this time. This will be followed by a discussion of modern music, in which illustrations of the works of modern French composers will be used for the purpose of analysis.

The last division will consist of a program of selected compositions from three of the most noted French composers: Cesar Franck, Claude Debussy, and Maurice Ravel.

Those who will take part in the program are: Mrs. T. Smith McCorkle, Mrs. Claudius T. Murchison, Mrs. Earl D. Strong, Mrs. Robert H. Wettach, Mrs. P. H. Winston and Mrs. A. S. Wheeler.

FRESHMEN HEAR TALK BY COMER

Says Principles of Modern Industry May Be Well Applied In Life.

The modern industrial policy of using by-products is based on principles equally well in life through the utilizing of excess effort and passing opportunities, H. F. Comer told the freshmen in a talk in chapel yesterday.

Attempting to give the freshmen a clearer understanding of some of their problems and difficulties, particularly those around examination time, Mr. Comer held up to ridicule some more or less fallacious ideas that students frequently evolve. He said that students prize highly their personal liberty and their pride in not being hypocrites. Due to prejudice against interfering with personal liberty, according to his observation, little can be done if a student neglects his work and risks failure. However, in spite of avowed frankness, the student himself is frequently hypocritical in his attitude toward his negligence.

Mr. Comer said that such conditions showed more and more responsibility to rest with the student. He urged his hearers to take note of their duties and to apply themselves to them. Most students, according to the speaker, can greatly increase the effectiveness of their work by exercising only a negligible amount of energy.

Preventing the growth of a large "casualty list," the list of students who drop out of school, is one of Mr. Comer's concerns. He advised the freshmen yesterday to resort to work in their difficulties and not in any manner, hypocritical or otherwise, to resign themselves to defeat.

TRABUE SUBMITS REPORT AT MEET IN GREENSBORO

Believes That High School Examinations Are Very Successful.

Dr. M. R. Trabue, director of the bureau of educational research in the school of education, submitted yesterday to the North Carolina College Conference, which is meeting at Greensboro, the report of the conference committee on college admissions, of which he is secretary. The subject of this report was the North Carolina high school senior examination, prepared annually by the committee on college admissions, and administered on February 14, 1929, to 13,000 seniors in the high schools of the state.

Dr. Trabue, in his address, compared the 1929 examinations, both in extent and in the nature of the questions asked, with those of last year. He showed in this connection that the number of high schools giving the examination and the number of seniors taking it had increased, and that several changes which had been made in the examination had proved very satisfactory. Following this comparison, Dr. Trabue also showed that, in the median scores of high school seniors, according to the sizes of their schools, the larger high schools have almost invariably excelled the smaller ones. Another interesting fact gathered from the results was the general excellence of the younger seniors over the older ones.

Sophomore Cabinet Ends Quarter's Work With Supper Meeting

The final meeting of the sophomore cabinet was replaced by a supper served at the Methodist church at 6:30. J. Elwin Dungan, president of the sophomore cabinet, was the toastmaster for the occasion.

The speaker for the supper was Dr. Howard W. Odum, Kenan professor of sociology and head of the department here at the University. Dr. Odum, speaking on the subject of "Creative Work," stated that he looked forward to a time when the south would produce students who would not only scintillate in the brilliance of their intellect, but who would work and create, building a new and permanent culture for the south. "The existing conditions which necessitate the importation of farm and industrial products from other parts of the country demand rectifying," continued the speaker. "It is my belief," stated Dr. Odum in closing, "that the south has started along the right lines to create, but there still remains an unbelievable amount of work to be done."

Delegates Leave For Mott Meeting

Delegates to the Mott conference in Raleigh will leave the Y at 11:30. This conference is to be held in the State College Y. M. C. A. It will be attended by delegates from Duke University, State and a few of the larger women's colleges.

The New Proposal For America's World Court Debut

In Geneva Monday an event of potentially great importance in determining the part that the United States will play in future world affairs occurred. Three statues providing for American entry into the World Court were formally signed by Jay Pierrepont Moffat, American charge d'affaires at Berne. His signature accompanied those of representatives of 53 other nations.

The World Court is really an outgrowth of the first Hague Conference in 1899, when the American delegation was active in establishing the so-called Permanent Court of Arbitration. Although this Court is still in existence and the United States is a party, it amounts to very little, since it does not hold regular sessions or have permanent judges. The first attempt to establish a real World court was sponsored by Theodore Roosevelt and Elihu Root in 1907, when they undertook to develop the Hague Court into a permanent tribunal with full-time Judges, Their efforts were productive of nothing more than a gigantic flop. But in 1920 the League of Nations, at the suggestion of Woodrow Wilson and others, instituted such a court. The League was instrumental in the formation of the World Court, but it contains members who are not members of the League and the protocol was drawn up by members of the Court and not by the League.

President Harding submitted to the Senate in 1923 the proposal for adhesion of the United States to the Court. After the usual protracted consideration and long-winded discussion, the Senate finally approved adhesion, with five reservations. The first repudates any relation of the United States with the League of Nations. Reservation 2 gives the United States participation on an equality with other nations in the election of judges. Reservation 3 leaves the fair share of the United States in the expenses of the Court to the discretion of Congress. Reservation 4 permits the United States to withdraw at any time and asserts that the protocal of the Court shall not be amended without the consent of the United States. Reservation 5 states that the Court shall not render an opinion except publicly after due notice and until all interested states have been permitted a hearing, nor without the consent of the United States shall it give an advisory opinion on any question in which the United States has or claims to have an interest. All of these reservations have been accepted by the members of the Court, with the very justifiable exception of the portion of Reservation 5 contained in the "claims to have an interest" clause.

The three statues signed Monday were the original World Court protocol, the revised statues of the Court, and the Root protocol providing for acceptance of the United States Senate's reservations to membership in the court. Opposition has already developed in the senate to America's entrance, chiefly centering around the argument that it is designed to take the United States into the League of Nations "by the back door."

The worn-out argument that entry into the World Court would lead to membership in the League of Nations, which would "involve the United States in political questions strictly of a European character" is already being employed by opponents of the latest World Court participation plan. Granting that such would be the case, would this country suffer from an active participation in world affairs of vital consequence to us, as are many "political questions strictly of a European character?" We are inclined to think that the results of such a participation would be on the benefits side of our international ladger.

The United States can hardly hope to hold itself aloof from participation in the solving of the great international problems of the day and maintain the respect of other nations or a prominent place in world affairs. We Americans have opportunities, with our great resources and power, for exercising more influence than any other nation in preventing wars and oppressions. The World Court represents the most effective of all means yet evolved for arbitration of international disputes. Only the opposition of near-sighted, narrow-minded politicians can prevent the ratification of the proposal for America's entry into the World Court.

This Lawless Land Of Laws

America is notorious for its countless — and ineffectual — laws. There are statutes against this, that, and the other, laws against pushing a man over a cliff, against two bathing in the same tub at the same time; there are laws that even presume to dictate the distance that shall separate twin beds. There are dozens upon dozens of such absurdities on the books of the states composing the nation—all of them, presumably, to be obeyed. An eminent jurist once made the statement that no intelligent child over ten years of age could possibly avoid being a criminal in the American sense of the word. If one says "damn" he has committed a crime; if a person drives a car over a certain limit he is a criminal—and if he drives it under a certain speed the law steps in harshly. Let a man keep a dog without a muzzle in one town—he has violated a law; let him keep the animal without a leash in another location—he has viloated another law. If rain freezes on the sidewalk in front of a citizen's house he is held responsible. And so on and on into the fantastically absurd; our laws have made the United States a laughing stock. Uncle Sam seems to have become a witless humbug, Uncle Sham.

Nothing is so hypocritical as the typical American attitude to law making—and law breaking. Certain smug New England communities bolstering up an anachronistic puritannical strain, pass "blue laws" preventing the showing of moving pictures on Sunday as well as the Sunday sale of tobacco, drinks, even gasoline. Yet rum running from vessels outside the limit right through these same communities is rife, and prohibition there is as much of a farce as international peace pacts. Boston bans Strange Interlude, making its presentation illegal, —yet there are innumerable smutty burlesques and filthy vaudevilles in that same complacent center of righteousness. The choicest morsel of all for the ironist is offered by the spectacle of Chicago, the roaring, tearing center of gangland, of hi-jacking feuds, of bloody gang massacres, of the infamously enormous crime bill, gravely making it illegal for the picturized version of "The Trial of Mary Dugan" to be shown. Apparently the good city must protect the morals of its citizens. So the good citizen, mildly annoyed but subservient, sits down to read in his tabloid about the latest murders and "love nest" slayings and bank robberies and machine gun battles among the gentlemen who advertise the city so extensively.

Such a farcical demonstration of legislation, municipal, county, and state, can be paralleled almost anywhere in the country. As a people we seem to teeter frantically between two extremes; we seem utterly incapable of adopting a middle ground of firm reason coupled with sane legislation and just enforcement. In an excess of moral feeling public opinion (sometimes only those powers-that-be who can afford to disregard public opinion) pass these perversely intolerant and foolish "blue laws," making anything aside from worship illegal on the Sabbath. Contrasted to that is the bootlegger, this bloated, unwholesome plant that has grown up in our midst, eloquent tribute to our law making inconsistency — passing the idealistic 18th amendment and then, almost universally, flaunting it openly, scornfully, shamelessly.

This deplorable situation could lead one very easily into a discussion of democracy and its faults—for American legislation is obviously one of the more apparent faults of democracy. Through the halls of our law making chambers there passes one continuous line of pompous asses, conceited nincompoops, egotistical wind bags, politicians, the law makers of our republic. In the face of the constant flow of new laws one would imagine a sedulous application to duty on the part of these office holders—until upon looking deeper they are revealed as dunces whom the temporary mantle of authority has inflated beyond all sense of proportion and values. An excellent example of this type (might one refer to him as the chief dunce?) is the far famed William Hale Thompson of Chicago, whose remarkable antics while mayor of that hapless city provoked a gale of mirth and great tempests of disgust.

It has long been time for America to put a stop to the tragedy of her legislative incompetence and her legal impotence. There are, of course, numbers of worthy legislators mixed in with the mob of mediocrity—but why leave so much to chance? And why, after electing someone, anyone, to office, do the people let the matter drop, their attitude seeming to say, "They may pass what they wish. If we like it, very well; then only criminals will break it. If we don't like it, then it shouldn't be on the books, anyway. Why observe it—except in a superficially patent way?" —R. H.

Y Cabinets Hold Last Meeting Of Quarter Monday

The last meeting of the freshman cabinet was held Monday night at the Y at 7:15 o'clock. Tom Worth, presiding in the absence of Alex Webb, opened the program with the devotional. After the minutes were read and the roll called, announcements were made concerning the Mott conference that is to be held in Raleigh today. The meeting was then turned over to Aubrey Perkins, who led a discussion of some very interesting topics. The discussion was considered the best that has been had this year. After discussing plans for a banquet for the first part of next quarter, the meeting was closed with a word of prayer.

The program for the junior-senior cabinet opened with sentence prayers. Jimmie Williams, presiding, then announced the Sunday afternoon tea that is given every Sunday at the Episcopal parish house. After announcements were made concerning the Mott conference, Mr. Comer spoke of some of the coming Y speakers. Plans were then discussed for the Human Relations Institute, held every four years, that is to be held here February, 1931. After revising the roll the cabinet adjourned until next quarter.

With the approach of the Christmas season, one of two sublime religious festivals in the Christian world, the student body here evinces its interest in the form of countless Open Forum letters anent the subject of religion in general, with the same finality of treatment that all Open Forum letters exhibit, and little of the tolerance for another person's view, which characterized the founder of their religion.

For some of the men attending the Sophomore Y cabinet supper at the Methodist church Monday night, which event was the last on the cabinet program for the quarter, it was a genuine Last Supper for some time to come in consideration of the fact that only one-third as many attended as were prepared for. Only two cases were reported to the infirmary, however.

Many in the audience which heard Bertrand Russell were agreeably surprised at hearing the shorter lecture which proceeded the main event, and for their benefit we take this opportunity of informing them that this "lecture" was merely an introduction of the speaker by that scholar and gentleman —Archibald Henderson.

In the course of his introduction, however, Dr. Henderson ran afoul the instruction of the local English 1 specialists with his now famous "The reason was because I had come all the way from North Carolina."

Beverly Moore, editorializing in our paper, arrives at the conclusion that both the Tin Can and Swain hall are illy suited for use as auditoriums, with which we agree. Instead of going to the expenses of erecting a building to replace Memorial hall which is falling apart like the famous "one-hoss shay," it would be far more economical and modern merely to wire each room on the campus and equip them with loud speakers. A one-hundred percentage coverage of the campus at little expense and effort could be obtained. Classes might even be conducted in this manner, individual professors broadcasting on different wave lengths.

One of our young lady reporters recently asked, "What Price Turkey Hunting When You Can Get a Deer." In answer it can be said that a turkey is a bird which deceives one little in comparison to dears.

The prince of the house of Wilson is T. J. Wilson IV who arrived Monday and for whom we wish a long and prosperous life.

Varsity Five Opens With Raleigh Team Here Tonight

Three Y. M. C. A. Teams Will Play Pre-Holiday Games With Tar Heel Basketball Team This Week.

Opening the 1929-30 basketball season, the varsity basketball quintet, four times southern champions since 1922, meets the strong Raleigh Y. M. C. A. five in the Tin Can at 8 o'clock tonight.

Frank Goodwin, captain of the victorious State College team last year, will lead the Capital City team in the contest. He was for three years one of the biggest threats the Tar Heels were forced to watch.

Coach Ashmore has been drilling the bulk of the squad for three weeks now, but has been handicapped by the extended football season. Several of his best prospects were members of the pigskin squad. These boys reported for practice Monday, but will face the next few games with but two days' work.

Three games will be played on successive nights against strong Y. M. C. A. teams from neighboring towns which, boasting a number of former college stars of first rank, should give the Tar Heels three fine pre-season tests. Greensboro follows the Raleigh team with a game on Thursday night, and Durham on Friday. All games will be played here in the Tin Can.

The Tar Heels will show a pair of veteran guards in Brown and Marpet, but youngsters will man the forward posts. Coach Ashmore lost four star forwards last year and will more than likely use a large number of prospects in these practice games to get the best line possible on their respective abilities under fire.

Gym Classes Will Have Field Meet

All those having gym on Monday, Wednesday and Friday will report today at 3 o'clock to Coach Ranson and Doctor Lawson at Emerson field instead of the gym. The clerk inside the main gate will check each individual and issue him a number.

Those having gym on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday will report at Emerson field on Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock. As soon as each individual finishes his track tests he will be released.

Attendance at these tests is not optional, but governed by the same rules as regular gym attendance.

The purpose is to give variety to the gym exercises and to uncover possible track material. Several promising candidates for track are discovered in this way each year, and the coaches will be on the lookout for likely looking material.

Permanent records of each individual's performance will be kept for reference.

HEFFNER'S CLASS GIVES PRODUCTION

Recently Professor Hubert Heffner's class in play production gave a studio production representing the best talent in the class. This course, known as English 34, gives instruction in dramatic interpretation, characterization, stage technique, and other prerequisites to acting. The studio production is the outstanding event of the course during the fall quarter.

The winter quarter course, also taught by Mr. Heffner, is devoted to theatre organization, theatre management and stage direction.

Mr. Elmer Hall teaches the course during the spring quarter, and gives instruction in theatre arts.

Co-eds Elect Ida Currie Captain Of Basket Ball Team

Ida Currie was elected captain of the co-ed basketball team at the regular practice on Monday night. Managers for the season were also elected. Ludie Lee is the manager from Mrs. Lawson's; Sydney Curry and Clyde Johnson were elected from the co-ed shack.

The team has been holding practices five nights a week under the direction of Coach Carl Farris. The first game of the season will be played sometime during the first week of the new quarter.

Frosh Boxing Team Prospects Are Good

This year's frosh boxing team has excellent prospects for a successful season. Although the squad is not as large as it should be, there are several men out who give promise of becoming outstanding stars. One of the best of these is Levinson, a 119 pounder from Waterbury, Conn. He is fast and aggressive, with the punch of a middle-weight. Added to that, he has had plenty of experience, having boxed several years, and can take loads of punishment. Under the skilled guidance of Coach Crayton Rowe, he should develop into one of Carolina's best mittmen in a year or two.

"Virginia Plutarch" Being Well Received

The special edition of "The Virginia Plutarch," a book of Virginia historical biography by Philip Alexander Bruce, was received by the University Press on Monday. There were 200 copies of the edition, specially bound, printed and bearing the author's autograph. Except for 33 copies that were retained by Mr. Bruce and the Press officials, all of these volumes had been subscribed for upon their arrival.

A shipment of the regular printing of Mr. Bruce's book was received late in November, and the set of two volumes which make up the work was declared by the publishers to be one of their best jobs in typography and binding. They were enthusiastic in having produced what they considered one of the foremost book values of the year. They were still more pleased with the volumes of the special edition.

From all indications—press comments, the opinions of experts in the field which "The Virginia Plutarch" embraces, and the early sales of the book—the popularity of the book will be as great as that of any former volume of scholarly appeal that the Press has published.

Sales of "The Tree Named John," the Negro folklore book by John B. Sale which has become so widely known since its issuance by the Press earlier in the year, are continuing at the same rapid pace. The reading tour that Mr. Sale recently made in this state is undoubtedly responsible for much of the prominence that his book has received in North Carolina. Besides appearing in several important communities under the sponsorship of well-known organizations, he gave a reading over radio station WPTF in Raleigh. According to the last news from Mr. Sale he is scheduled to appear soon to a vast radio audience over the National Broadcasting company in Washington.

COACHES DISCUSS PLANS FOR TRACK

Fetzer Urges Men To Begin Work For Hard Schedule Including Princeton and Penn State.

Aspirants for the 1930 track squad met in 103 Bingham hall yesterday afternoon to discuss plans for the coming season and especially the indoor track meet to be held early in March.

The schedule for the coming track season is one of the hardest planned here in several years and two-year contracts for dual meets have been planned with such outstanding teams as Penn State and Princeton. Both teams are noted for their strong track teams and it was only because of Carolina's high place in southern track that such a schedule has been obtained.

Last year the Tar Heels were forced to take second place in the Southern Conference meet in Birmingham by a very small margin, but they won the state championship track meet held in Greensboro. In addition to that the Tar Heels came out ahead in all their dual meets and also won the indoor invitation meet held in the Tin Can in the early spring.

Approximately 60 candidates for the varsity squad of 1930 heard Coach Bob Fetzer, Rev. Mr. Lawrence, Captain Dave Nims and Assistant Coach Vernon Cowper explain to them the plans for the coming season and encourage them to start taking track workouts at once.

Coach Bob stated that he had seen the University track team rise spectacularly during the past eight years. He said that Carolina had made splendid records in track and that the Carolina time records compared favorably with records of other outstanding college and university track records.

Rev. Mr. Lawrence, one of the most enthusiastic backers of the Carolina track team, stated that in his opinion track was the best athletic sport that he knew of. His admiration for track rose out of the fact that there was a chance for every one to show his individual talent and to have unlimited competition.

Vernon Cowper urged all the track candidates to begin training at once with the spring track schedule in view, but especially for the indoor meet to be held in the Tin Can March 1. Last year the Tar Heels won an invitation meet in the Tin Can but few teams entered. However, this year, it is planned to make this meet a Southern Conference indoor championship meet and men are urged to prepare for it by starting training immediately.

Captain Dave Nims urged those present to encourage as many of the student body as possible to come out for track and start training during the winter months in the Tin Can. He asked for the support of all present to aid in the preparation of a Southern Conference championship team and to raise the interest of the Carolina student body in track.

Coach Bob stated that in order to participate in track four things were necessary: a candidate must pass his work; the candidate for the U. N. C. track squad must live clean in mind and body; in order to obtain best results think about achieving what seems now almost impossible in regard to track records; get out of lazy habits and get down to hard work on the track. In addition to these four points Coach Bob announced that the regular season was so short that complete preparation for track hould be made only by starting early to get in shape for the meets in the spring.

CAROLINA, in winning from Duke Saturday, brought to a close her most successful football season in over a quarter of a century. Winning nine games and losing one, the team amassed a total of 346 points, ranking second only to Southern California in the nation's scoring. This high total also sets a new scoring record for future Carolina teams to shoot at. The 34.6 point average is 2.3 points better than that made by the 1914 team. The state championship goes to Carolina for the second successive year, and the seven conference victories give the team a larger number of victories in the conference than any other team. Not only was the performance of the team as a unit of superior quality, but certain individuals played throughout the season with constant brilliancy. Several members of the squad have been mentioned for All-American honors and three members of the team, Jim Magner, Johnnie Branch, and Ray Farris were selected for the squad which will represent the northern division of the conference in the New Year's day battle between All-Star teams representing the northern and southern divisions. The most outstanding individual honor goes to Captain Ray Farrris who was picked on NEA's second All-American and was placon the A. P. third team.

THE BASKETBALL season will open tonight when the Raleigh Y. M. C. A. team will be met in the Tin Can. This game will be followed by one with the Greensboro Y. Thursday night and the Durham Y. will be played on Friday night. These preseason games against Y. M. C. A. teams are not to be taken lightly, especially at the beginning of the season. The teams are made up largely of former college stars who know the game thoroughly and play it well. The basketball schedule has just been announced and we believe that Carolina will go to the Southern Conference tournament on March 3 with a good record behind it. Two intersectional contests will be engaged in, one with Navy at Annapolis and the other with Loyola of Chicago here. The rest of the games are against South Atlantic teams, no team below the southern boundary of the state being scheduled. In the race for the state title, Carolina will will meet each member of the Big Five in two games. Carolina won the state championship last year and the year before. The team wants to repeat and the student body is behind them.

DUKE UNIVERSITY will be the strongest obstacle in the race for the state championship. Last year, in the regular season, Carolina and Duke divided honors, each winning one game. The two teams met in the tournament at Atlanta and Duke overwhelmed the Tar Heels. Duke's team is as strong as it was last year, while Carolina is an unknown quantity at present. Whether the potential strength of the reserves and the new men make up for the losses incurred through graduation can not yet be determined.

THE TAG FOOTBALL title was definitely settled yesterday when Beta Theta Pi won from New Dorms by one touchdown. The issue was re-opened due to a ruling on the eligibility of certain players who played in the championship game last week.

Betas Defeat New Dorms 6-0 For Campus Tag Title

Beta Theta Pi won the campus tag football championship yesterday afternoon by defeating New Dorms 6 to 0 in the playoff games between the winners of the fraternity and dormitory leagues. The outcome was never in doubt, contrary to the impression to be gained from the close score. The Betas made eight first downs to New Dorm's one. The lone New Dorm first down resulted from a beautiful pass from Higdon to Walk for about 20 yards.

Dunn for the Betas was probably the outstanding offensive player. On defensive Henry Anderson was the star. It seems as if this boy is always within reaching distance of the man receiving a pass.

Higdon's passing, which has been responsible for most of New Dorm's wins, was up to par but his mates couldn't hold them for some reason. The punting of Hampton for New Dorms is also worthy of comment.

The Betas scored their touchdown after H. Anderson had intercepted Higdon's pass on New Dorm's 35 yard line. Dunn passed to Race for four yards and then to Follin for five yards. Another first down was gained when Dunn again passed to Race for a two yard gain. Hampton grounded Race's pass, but Follin was loose on the next play to take Race's second pass for a touchdown. The try for point was bad.

Most of the play throughout the remainder of the game was in New Dorms' territory, but the Betas never got another chance to score.

Before the touchdown the victors had made three first downs. Race's pass to Waddell scored the initial first down of the game. From this point on the Betas held the edge in play.

Following the touchdown the dormitory champions loosed passes in abundance in an effort to score. But most of Higdon's heaves found no receiver as the Betas had their defense well organized for a passing attack.

The lineups follow:

New Dorms		Beta Theta Pi
Henry	L. E.	Follin
Carpenter	L. T.	Waddell
Love	L. G.	Waugh
Hill	C.	J. Anderson
Choate	R. G.	Follin

Chuck Collins Called South's Wonder Coach

Rockne didn't think so much of young Collins when he came out for the team at Notre Dame. He thought the youngster from Oak Park was capable of playing far better football than he had shown. So one day, early in the season, so the story goes, Coach Rockne proceeded to tell Pupil Collins that he considered the latter a pretty rotten player and admonished the latter to do better or get off the squad. There was no room on his squad, Mister Rockne explained, for men who cluttered up the path of glory that better men were anxious to travel.

Rockne's lecture got under Collins' skin and stayed there. So Rockne thought he was a rotten player, did he? Well, maybe Rock was right but he didn't think so. In fact, he was going to prove to Rock that the master was wrong.

Young Collins reasoned something like this: Rock says I have the goods, but that I haven't delivered. To quit the squad would be to prove conclusively that I haven't got the old "guts," that I'm yellow. No, I'm not going to quit. I'll stick in there and fight and I'll show Rock a few things.

And that Pupil did show Master Rockne "a few things" is clearly indicated by the great record that Collins made at Notre Dame.

Collins spent his first year after graduation at the University of Chattanooga, where he was assistant to Frank Thomas, another Notre Dame product. Incidentally, it seems quite a coincidence that this same Frank Thomas, now backfield coach at Georgia, should be tutoring the only team that the Tar Heels have been licked by this year.

Collins came to the University of North Carolina in the spring of 1926. The Tar Heels at that time were in a football slump. They were winning the majority of their games, but they had not produced a really great team since the famous South Atlantic championship outfit of 1922. North Carolina was winning Southern Conference basketball titles galore, and a southern track championship was ready to be harvested, but the football team wasn't kicking up much dust in southern competition. The alumni were beginning to set up a howl, and Head Coach Bill Fetzer, who had a sizeable income from his Brevard estate, and consequently didn't have to depend on coaching, chose not to fight back and instead handed in his resignation. Bob Fetzer, his brother, who had been Bill's chief assistant, quickly let it be known that he was not a candidate for the job.

The University athletic council then spent several months in casting about for a new football mentor. They investigated the qualifications of several hundred men from all sections of the country. Don Miller and Harry Stuhldreher, two of the "Four Horsemen" and teammates of Collins, spent several days here in conference with the University's athletic moguls. But the salary they asked was about twice what the University was willing to pay, and the negotiations were off.

But Miller and Stuhldreher had sold North Carolina on the Notre Dame idea, and the Tar Heels began to cast about for other prospects from the Rockne school. Along came Chuck Collins, and after he had been here for a while he was requested to wire for Bill Cerney, another teammate. That was in the spring of 1926.

Collins and Cerney held spring practice that year, and they realized at once that they had tackled a tough job. Good material was scarce, and the boys didn't seem adept at getting wise to the Notre Dame style of play.

When the season opened that year with Wake Forest, Messrs. Collins, Cerney and Fetzer trotted out four teams on Gore field. The quantity was there, but it was soon discovered that quality was sadly lacking. The way the Tar Heels handled Notre Dame tactics that day would doubtless have made Knute Rockne hide his face in shame.

The best that Collins could do that season was to develop an "in and out team." The line was good but the backs didn't come through. Virginia cracked the Tar Heels 3 to 0, the Tar Heels licked Duke, and Davidson won the state title.

The 1927 season was just a little better. The Tar Heels again lost the opener to Wake Forest, this time by a bare point, and licked Maryland by the same margin, 7-6. Then followed five other losses to Tennessee, South Carolina, Georgia Tech, N. C. State and V. M. I. By this time alumni were crying for victories or the Collins scalp. The Tar Heels had three more games to go, and they turned around and won all of them, licking Davidson, Virginia, and Duke in succession. The Virginia game dedicated the Kenan stadium.

This glorious wind-up made the students and alumni feel that the season had been a success. Close observers recalled that it had taken Georgia several years to get the Notre Dame system working effectively, and they pictured the Tar Heels going through the same trying experience. The result, in brief, was that Collins signed a new two-year contract.

The Tar Heel football house was in much better order when the 1928 season opened. North Carolina started off by licking Wake Forest 65 to 0. Hard games were dropped to Harvard, Georgia Tech and V. P. I., and there were ties with N. C. State and South Carolina, but the Tar Heels licked Maryland, Davidson, Virginia and Duke, and got possession of the state title again. Things were improving.

The details of the rest of the story have been recited in the opening paragraphs. There is no getting around the fact that the Tar Heels have this year a team that stacks up with the best in the country. Several of their players have been named on outstanding all-southern selections, and for the first time in many years they have placed a man on all-American.

Chief credit must go to Chuck Collins, but it would be a great mistake to overlook the able work of his two chief assistants, Bob Fetzer and Bill Cerney. Coach Fetzer is director of athletics and has always held up before Carolina athletes the highest ideals in sportsmanship. During the football season he gives most attention to developing linemen. He has long been regarded as one of the best line coaches in the south. Coach Cerney, a teammate of Collins at Notre Dame, has concentrated his attention on the backfield, and the results clearly indicate what his teaching and genial personality have accomplished. Collins acts as field general in charge of the squad. These men work together in harness.

Coach Collins has impressed upon the Tar Heels that they must take their football seriously. He is a great believer in discipline. His men must toe the mark or quit the squad. He wants boys who have in them what the students like to call "the old fighting spirit." He believes in developing a great reserve strength. He uses 30 or more in all of his games. There are three backfields and three lines. When men are laid up with injuries, there are good understudies to take their place. The system makes for versatility.

Coach Collins has never been accused of playing favorites. He believes in giving every man every possible chance, and his large squad enables him to do this.

Approximately 85 per cent of the squad members are native-born Tar Heels. This does not mean that boys from other states don't get an equal chance. On the contrary, they are welcomed, for the belief is that outside blood makes for keener competition and hence better football.

Koch's Class Gives Two One-Act Plays

Studio productions of two one-act plays written by students in Professor Frederick Koch's Playwriting course were presented in the Playmakers theatre Monday and Tuesday during chapel hour.

The play given Monday, Blood, a melodrama, was written by Herbert T. Brown and directed by Eveland Davies who was also a member of the cast. She was assisted by Penelope Alexander and Hoke Webb, both members of the playwriting class.

The second demonstration, Hollyhocks, a new England folk play, was given Tuesday and was written and directed by Joseph P. Fox. Those cast in the play were Irene Fussler, Margaret Howe, Kent Creuser and Dixon Carnegie. The production of the two plays was under the supervision of Robert Dawes. It is expected that the plays will be formally presented for the public by the Playmakers at a later date. The plays are picked with others as representative of the work done by the class.

Casts Chosen For Playwriting Class

Tuesday and Wednesday trial productions of two new one-act plays, written by students in Professor Koch's playwriting course, were held at the Playmaker theatre.

The plays were "Blood," a melodrama by Herbert T. Brown, and "Hollyhocks," a New England folk play by Joseph P. Fox. The scene of "Blood" is lodging quarters in a metropolitan underworld. A small New England cottage is the scene of "Hollyhocks."

If these plays are considered successful they may be read at an author's reading later in the season.

The characters for "Blood" were as follows: Sadie, Penelope Alexander; Mike, Hoke Webb; Spuid, Eveland Davies.

The characters for "Hollyhocks" were: Grannie, Irene Fussler; Millie, Margaret Howe; Fred, Kant Creuser; Sonny, Dixon Carnegie.

New Photo Process Invented By Former Graduate Student

Dr. P. H. Carr, whose recent discovery of a process of making pictures directly on metal plates without the usual photographic emulsion was announced from Cornell University Sunday, was at one time a graduate student of physics in the University.

In commenting on Dr. Carr's work, Dr. E. K. Plyler of the physics department stated that he was here during the year of 1925-26 working on electronic theory, and at that time he proved himself one of the best students in physics at the University. He took a masters degree in physics in the spring of 1926.

In addition to being a capable student, Dr. Carr is an accomplished musician, and he was, at one time, assistant organist of Cornell University.

Dr. Plyler has pictures in colors of samples of the work done by the process discovered by Dr. Carr. In addition to being a distinct contribution to science in itself, this new process will prove a great value in the promotion of other scientific work, stated Dr. Plyler.

Sigma Xi Meets

The Sigma Xi fraternity held an informal dinner in Smith building recently. The dinner was followed by a discussion of the research activities of the department of mathematics and the department of physics.

In the absence of Dr. Henderson, who was on a lecture tour, the math department discussion was conducted by Dr. A. W. Hobbs who described the work on the application of a type of general deferential equation whose solution would include all the fundamental phenomenon of mechanics. This was followed by a description of several pieces of work in which Dr. E. T. Browne has been interested in the past two years.

The second half of the program was devoted to a discussion of three problems in which Dr. Otto Stuhlman, head of the department of physics, and his students are active in interpreting.

NEXT BUCCANEER NAMED CHRISTMAS NUMBER BY EDSON

College Comic Magazine Will Appear Just Before Beginning Of Examinations.

The last issue of the Buccaneer before the holidays will be distributed before the beginning of examinations. This is the third issue of the year and will be called the Christmas Number. The majority of the drawings and the humor in this number will be in direct keeping with the Christmas Spirits, hanging up the sock, Santa Claus and kindred subjects, says Cy Edson, editor of the college comic.

The cover for the Christmas issue was done by Gil Pearson, the art editor, and is said by the engraver to be one of the best student covers that he has ever engraved for the Buccaneer. The color scheme is particularly striking. The drawings on the interior of the book are said to be some of the best thus far submitted this year. This number was edited under the supervision and direction of Kermit Wheary, associate editor.

The January issue of the Buccaneer which will appear on the 20th of that month will have a new subject for its theme; the Vitaphone. This fourth edition of the comic will be termed the "All-Talkie Number." A special section in this issue has been set aside exclusively for the review and criticism of the outstanding shows that will be booked by the Carolina Theatre next spring. Like a regular Vitaphone production the Buccaneer will have its own theme song for this number.

The Girlie's Number will appear in February and it is slated to be one of the best numbers of the year. Even at this early hour a stack of contributions knee-high has been submitted by the feminine admirers of North Carolina's only college comic, according to Editor Edson.

WILLIAMS WINS WRIGHT MEDAL

Protective Tariff Subject of Annual Memorial Debate; Medal to Best Speaker.

The ancient rivalry between the Di senate and the Phi assembly was continued Tuesday night by the annual Mary D. Wright debate, which was held in Gerrard hall. John Wilkinson, winner of the contest in 1927, presided.

The query of the debate was: "Resolved, that the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill which has been pending before the recent special session should be passed as introduced." The Di senate speakers, J. C. Williams and C. A. Shreve, won a unanimous decision over the representatives of the Phi assembly, R. E. Stanton and J. C. Harris. The Mary D. Wright memorial medal was awarded to J. C. Williams, the better speaker of the winning team. The award was won last year by B. C. Moore, also of the Di senate.

The arguments presented by the debaters hinged around the general feasibility of the protective tariff, the affirmative being in favor of high tariff and the negative opposing all protective tariff measures

Attractive Window Displays Tell That Christmas Is Drawing Near

(By B. H. Whitton)

The stores of Chapel Hill, at this time of the year, are serving as more than mere subjects of controversial price-discussions or as targets of bitter epithets directed at them by irate students who feel that too much of their money is finding its way into the tills of the merchants. In the balmy, spring-like weather that we are now enjoying, the shops are performing a real service to the community in bringing before its eyes the fact that Christmas is almost upon us—only 13 more days till Christmas Eve.

Which store deserves the credit for being the first to draw the public's attention to the holiday season is a matter that cannot be settled in an instant. The Student Supply Store brought out its rack of Christmas cards very early but then, on the other hand, the people in the University Book and Stationery Company at about the same time could be seen dusting off the new suitcases and bookends that had arrived to be sold to seekers of Yuletide gifts.

The Eubanks Drug Company is said to have spent the early fall in arranging their attractive, wintry window. Sutton's became "Christmas conscious" a bit later than the others. The "cotton-picking" in that haven for toe-scratchers began only last week. But now all the shelves are realistically made-up. The snow on the shelves is more than three inches deep—a record fall.

The old Yuletide spirit has even invaded the precincts of the University Book Exchange. Here may be purchased cartons of cigarettes, all attractively wrapped in holly-wreathed paper and red twine. Indeed, this annual good cheer celebration has touched the remotest merchants. It is said on good authority that Harry, he of the sandwich fame, intends to wrap his sandwiches in gayly bedecked coverings and instead of merely inserting a slip of paper with "Pimento Cheese" or "Ham" written upon it, he is to have a little card attached to the sandwich which will not only carry the name of the material which constitutes the sandwich but which will also convey the season's greetings. Thus, we will see inscribed "A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year—Goose Liver."

The staid clothing stores are getting into the swing of the holiday. Jack Lipman announces, in a border of holly and chimes, that it is now time to do your Xmas shopping. Even Pritchard-Patterson are cognizant of the time. A 25 per cent discount sale is now in progress. And the Stetson "D," with its banner swinging in the summer breeze, faithfully promises that all suits purchased now will be ready by the time when plum pudding with rum may be consumed.

The United States post-office has added the last conclusive argument that will convince those skeptics who doubt the nearness of Christmas. On its "special delivery" car, and on the drop-boxes, posted upon the bulletin-board, are these famous words: "Do your shopping early and mail early. Tie your packages securely."

Although it is very probable that Santa Claus will have to borrow a light linen suit for his work this year and that the choristers will have to mop their brows as they sing "God rest ye, merry gentlemen," there can be no question over the fact that Christmas is here.

BRADSHAW TALKS ON CAREERS TO FRESHMAN CLASS

Dean Advises Students to Remain in College; Stresses Honesty.

"Think in terms of a long range of time," was Dean Bradshaw's injunction to the freshmen yesterday in a chapel talk concerning making plans for a college career or for life.

In his talk the dean brought out particularly the point that ability to visualize events and conditions of the future frequently governs success. He declared the man wise who allows his actions today to be governed in part by careful considerations of tomorrow.

Dean Bradshaw directed his remarks on this point especially to students who may be planning to drop out of school. His appeal to any such students was that they look ahead a few years and consider the difference a college education may make in their positions.

Remarking briefly on a different subject, Dean Bradshaw made a plea against dishonesty on examinations. He reminded the freshmen of the importance of maintaining one's own self-respect as well as the respect of others and a good reputation.

Dean Bradshaw announced that there will be no chapel today or tomorrow. Chapel will meet, however, on Monday and Tuesday of next week for the groups assigned on those days.

UNIVERSITY RADIO STATION TALKS TO BYRD EXPEDITION

The University radio station W4WE was in communication with the base station of the Byrd Antarctic expedition at little America for a short time Tuesday evening beginning at 8:45.

This is the first time that the local station has worked any of the Byrd expedition stations this fall. Last spring the station had a schedule with the expedition and carried on communication regularly.

During the course of the short contact with WFA, the operator there, Peterson, stated that the University station had a readibility which is very good for such distance. He also said that this was the first fourth district station that he had ever worked on 20 meters, the wave length used.

Little America, where WFA is located, is the base station of the expedition and is at approximately lattitude 82 south and longitude 150 west.

Stanley Preston, the operator who carried on the communication with the antarctic station, stated that part of the time during the contact the signals from WFA were so loud that they were read from the loud speaker laboratory.

University Professor Issues New Book On Legal Practice

Professor A. C. McIntosh Discusses All Phases of Legal Practice in Recent Release.

CONTAINS INDEX

Copies of a book recently published by a member of the law faculty have been received by members of the law school. This volume is considered by many to be the most important book written by a member of the faculty of the law school since it was founded here.

Professor A. C. McIntosh is the author of the volume, which is entitled "North Carolina Practice and Procedure in Civil Cases." The volume deals with the courts and their jurisdiction and with the various steps in a law suit, including the pleadings, the trial and the appeal. The volume is 1200 pages in length, includes an elaborate and detailed index which will greatly facilitate its use for quick reference in the court room.

Professor McIntosh is qualified to write on the subject of North Carolina procedure. After graduating as the valedictorian of his class at Davidson, he studied law and then engaged for 16 years in the active practice. Since that time he has been professor of law at Trinity College and at the University for 25 years, during most of which time he has been actively teaching the subject of civil procedure. Professor McIntosh served as a member of the general assembly and took an active part in compiling the present consolidated statutes, and in the preparation of the annotations to those statutes. He was likewise a member of the county government advisory commission of 1927.

Engineers Inspect Duke

Prof. T. F. Hickerson took the senior civil engineering students on a tour of inspection of the new Duke university Tuesday. The object of this tour was to inspect the structural aspects of the new buildings which are being built.

The most important operation seen was the pouring of concrete in the steel beams. This work is very complicated and is important in modern construction.

DEBATE SEASON TO OPEN TODAY

Meets With State and Wake Forest To Be Held; Veterans Compose Local Team.

The local intercollegiate debating season will be opened tonight when the Carolina debaters meet the Wake Forest forensic artists in Gerrard hall at 7:30. George McKie, professor of public speaking, will preside.

The query which will be debated is: "Resolved, that the nations of the world should adopt a plan of complete disarmament except for such forces as are needed for police purposes." G. P. Carr and T. E. Benton, representing the University, will uphold the affirmative side of the issue. The Wake Forest negative aggregation which will oppose the Carolina speakers is composed of W. A. Bostic and A. B. Carroll.

This afternoon at 4 o'clock the Carolina negative team will engage the N. C. State affirmative aggregation at Raleigh on the same question, thus rounding out the Carolina-N. C. State-Wake Forest triangular debate.

Tomorrow night, December 13, the other negative team of J. M. Bailey and C. W. Meares will meet the representatives of the University of South Carolina at Columbia. Both Bailey and Meares are ex-Mars Hill debaters and have excellent records behind them. This will be the last of the three debates on the subject of disarmament and will conclude activities of the current quarter.

Tar Heel Topics

The South Carolina road program has been held up by court officials, which means that the court officials will continue to be held up by the South Carolina roads.

Grain dealers are facing an inquiry by the senate lobby committee for resisting the farm board program. Certain congressmen probably could be investigated on similar charges with far more likelihood of guilt being discovered.

Colonel W. P. H. Miller, former director of the Illinois state department of registration and education, has been convicted on a charge of operating a "diploma mill." We expect to hear of quite a few resignations from college presidencies within the next few days.

"Mrs. Max Gardner clipped four ribbons on the twin bridges today and Wilmington hopped out of the Atlantic ocean into North Carolina for keeps"—Tom Bost's lead on his story of the Wilmington bridge dedication. Henceforth and forever more should the Wilmingtonites be dubbed "the hoppers."

A New Jersey juryman leaned over and whispered to a reporter yesterday, just as the case was drawing to a close; "Hey! What's this here case all about, anyway? I'm deaf and I didn't hear but a few of them questions and answers." The only difference between him and members of juries which have recently tried certain cases in North Carolina is that he is deaf instead of dumb.

We Receive An Undeserved Call-Down

Referring to an editorial published in the November 23 issue of the Daily Tar Heel under the heading "South Carolinian Wants Reformers Whipped," the Hornet of Furman University declares that "In our opinion the Tar Heel editorial was one of the most scandalous ones ever to appear in a college paper, and rightly arouses the resentment of Furman students and the people of Greenville."

The editorial in question censured Rev. B. D. Hahn, pastor of the Pendleton Street Baptist Church of Greenville, who is quoted as stating in an address before the Collegiate Press Association of South Carolina that "Northern reformers who think they are called upon to reform conditions in textile mill villages here should be whipped at public whipping posts." The Hornet declares "In the first place the editorial undoubtedly was based merely upon hearsay—not upon any official report, and it's mighty dangerous business for any editor to publish such slanderous remarks about any man without first being certain that his remarks are based upon the truth."

Although we dislike very much to engage in anything resembling an editorial controversy with the Hornet, we cannot allow the utterly false remarks of the editor to go unchallenged. We quote from an Associated Press dispatch which appeared in newspapers throughout the country under a Greenville, S. C., dateline of November 21: "Public whipping posts as proper punishment for 'northern reformers who think they are called upon to reform conditions in textile mill villages here' were advocated today by the Rev. B. D. Hahn, pastor of the Pendleton Street Baptist church.

"Dr. Hahn was speaking before the South Carolina college press association. He said northern newspapers were conducting a campaign of propaganda against southern textile mills 'lest the textile power of the north be transferred to the south,' and urged the college editors to oppose the northern press's influence through their papers."

Says the editor of the Hornet, "We had the pleasure of listening to Dr. Hahn, and if he said any such thing we did not hear it." From experience gained at several college press conventions, we are aware that speakers at such occasions get about as much attention as a cross-eyed old maid at a college fraternity dance. We don't question the veracity of the Hornet editor, but it is quite possible that Dr. Hahn made the statement all unknown to the editor. Indeed, the esteemed Hornet editor admits the possibility himself—"if he said any such thing we did not hear it." At any rate we would prefer by far to accept the dispatch of the AP, the greatest and most reliable news service in the world, without which the publication of modern newspapers would be impossible, than the mere unsupported opinion of a college newspaper editor, who admits himself that he may have been mistaken. Not meaning any disrespect to the clan editoria collegenia.

It is significant that the Raleigh News and Observer and several others of North and South Carolina's most important newspapers published editorials upon the same day that the Daily Tar Heel editorial appeared, denouncing Dr. Hahn in even more emphatic terms than those employed by the Tar Heel editorial writer.

Although we were attending the North Carolina Collegiate Press Association convention at Hickory when the editorial in question appeared and we did not see the copy before it was published, we more than willingly take full responsibility for its appearance. One of the assistant editors wrote the editorial; we congratulated him heartily upon it after we returned from the convention. Our only regret was that he did not more severely denounce Dr. Hahn.

Unless the AP correspondent committed a grave error in reporting Dr. Hahn's speech, which is entirely unlikely, the Hornet editor has made something of an ass of himself. He is either admitting his incapacity to grasp a speaker's meaning through lack of perceptional facilities or inattention, or he is upholding the unfortunately-phrased utterances of a man who exhibited more than a hint of inane bigotry.

Judge Lindsey Enters Another Fight

Monday's news dispatches told of the refusal of the supreme court of Colorado to grant Judge Ben B. Lindsey license to practice law, alleging that he was guilty of unethical conduct, having accepted a large gift from a wealthy woman who had been greatly benefitted by his decision in a case tried before him as judge of the domestic court of Denver. The chief justice who wrote the opinion used to be a political boss and fought many bitter battles against Judge Lindsey when he was trying to get his juvenile court started and was introducing his famous reforms in juvenile work.

A veteran of many heated campaigns the judge immediately announced that his political enemies were trying to even old scores and prepared himself for another battle. Whether the judge wins his fight or not, we are confident he will give his opponents a good fight and there will be plenty theatricals.

For many years Judge Lindsey has been fighting against the whole political machine of his state in an effort to secure reforms in domestic and juvenile courts. He has been outstanding in his success in his juvenile work; his ideas on domestic relations, especially his companionate marriage theory, have received widespread attention. His work was going on successfully until last year when a new election came; he was thrown out of office as the result of an alleged ballot fraud. His successor dedicated himself to the refutation of all of Lindsey's work and established a court with old ideas and practices; he repudiated everything that had been accomplished under Lindsey's administration.

No man has been more bitterly opposed than has Judge Lindsey. He is the type of man who makes a definite impression; one likes him extremely well, or hates him. The success of his work has been due almost entirely to the force of his personality. In going against the political machines, the frame-ups, the status quo, the old order of things, he has met opposition at every corner. Finally, he was stalled in his tracks by an amazingly crooked deal put over by his enemies; since losing his job he has been lecturing and writing.

When the next election comes, we hope to see the judge in a position to run and win his office again. In the meantime we hope he is able to administer defeat to his opponents in every contest that comes up; he has often been the victim of crooked deals, and we long to see him gain recognition once again.—J. D. M.

Now the movie actressses have to talk. They will be asked to think next.—American Lumberman.

The Campus

By Joe Jones.

Out of Iberia comes word that the people of Spain have recently paid half a million dollars for ninety-five parchments which were the sole legacy Christopher Columbus left his son Diego. Long sought after by the greatest museums of the world, passed from generation to generation of Columbus' descendants, the yellow sheaf has at last found a resting place in the national museum of that country which was the first to lend serious ear to the unstaple fabric of the mad navigator's dream.

Among the documents are letters written by Queen Isabella, proud letters bearing the royal seal of Spain; and letters written by Columbus himself, pathetic little notes to Diego, who, as a tiny motherless lad, followed his restless father from town to town.

From all over the world scholars are journeying to Madrid where the collection will be displayed after its long repose in a vault of the Bank of Spain. But among all these seekers of new light from old embers there will not be found the man who has already given the world its most extensive knowledge of Columbus, the man who for long weary years ferreted out, bit by bit, the full story of Columbus from countless archives in many cities, the man who wrote in his diary this to Chapel Hill, "I am leaving this damn place for the last time, thank God."

So once wrote Henry Harrisse, the greatest authority on Columbus who ever lived. That was long ago, for it has been many years, several score, since Henry Harrisse was a professor at the University of North Carolina. He was living a comfortable, perhaps a happy, professorial life here in a peaceful southern village; and suddenly he left it all and went away to Paris and fame, and died with too much nosing through of dusty, musty records in gloomy museum corners.

There isn't any moral to this column, no neatly turned ending. We just got to thinking how Mr. Harrisse would have enjoyed reading those letters brought to light in Spain. And we got to wondering why he should be so relieved to depart so unceremoniously from such a pleasant town as Chapel Hill, and whether he ever sighed for Chapel Hill, as Leonardo the Florentine in the foreign castle of Cloux suddenly sighed for the City of the Red Lily.

But we didn't do any research about it; perhaps because we wanted only enough to fill up a column, something to shoot the bull about, enough bull to fill up the last column before Christmas, etc., etc., etc., "—and so—ewig—usque ad finem!"

Strange as it may sound, those who remain on the level are usually those who rise the highest.—Christian Science Monitor.

Goodwin Leads Raleigh Y Cagers To 42-29 Win Over Tar Heel Varsity

Game Close in First Half, But Capital City Five Goes Ahead In Latter Part of Game; Slater Scores 13 Points for Carolina.

Flashing a brilliantly concerted attack, the Raleigh Y. M. C. A. cagers last night administered defeat to the Tar Heel quintet by a score of 42 to 29 before a large crowd of students and sport fans in the Tin Can. The Capital City quintet attack was centered about Frank Goodwin, captain of the N. C. State southern championship team last year, who scored 27 of his team's 42 points.

During the first half the game was a nip-and-tuck affair with the Y team holding a slight edge. The end of the half found the score 20 to 13 in favor of the Raleigh team. Both teams played evenly during the early part of the second half, but a sudden spurt put the Y cagers far ahead, and the Tar Heels were unable to catch up.

For the Y team, Goodwin with 27 points, Bremer with eight and Gurnau with five were the individual scoring stars. Goodman and Byrd playing excellently at guard were responsible for the low Tar Heel score.

For Carolina Slater was high scorer with 13 points to his credit, followed by Brown with eight and Harper and Marpet with four each.

The lineups and individual scores for both teams follow:

Raleigh Y (42)		Carolina (29)
Bremer (8)	F.	Slater (13)
Goodwin (27)	F.	Dameron
Gurnau (5)	C.	Harper (4)
Byrd (1)	G.	Marpet (4)
Goodman (1)	G.	Brown (8)

Substitutions: for Y. M. C. A.—Ellington, Meahle, Riddle, Johnson; for Carolina—Hutchinson, Cleland and Choate. Referee, Knight.

Wilmer Hines Wins Tennis Tournament

Displaying a driving forehand and playing an offensive game throughout, Wilmer Hines, Southern Junior Champion, drove his way to victory today in the final round of the University's fall tennis tournament.

Bryant Grant, Southern Senior Champion, furnished the opposition. The two Southern champions, both University freshmen, began the finals match two weeks ago. Hines led 10-8, 7-5, 6-8 when weather forced postponement. Hines won the final set today 8-6.

Grant had a wide edge on backhand and balanced game, but Hines made up with fine footwork for what he lacked in backhand and carried the final set throughout with his fine first serves and well-placed forearm drives.

Grant made a great rally, after dropping the first three games and squared the set at 4-all. The smaller boy was making sensational returns, but the best he could do today was to stave off victory for the time being. He obviously wasn't in as good shape as Hines, and Hines' forearm was too strong.

With the score 6-all, Grant brought the 13th game up to deuce, on Hines' serve, after Hines had a 40-15 lead, but the smaller boy couldn't hold the pace. Hines took two straight points for a 7-6 lead, and on the next game broke through Grant's serve decisively for the 8-6 margin of victory.

NASH FIRST BACK TO CAPTAIN TEAM IN NINE SEASONS

Strud Nash, captain-elect of the Tar Heels for next year, will be the first Tar Heel backfield captain in 9 years.

Election of Nash broke a continuous regime of line leaders that dated back to 1921 and the palmy days of "Runt" Lowe, rated by some as the Tar Heels' greatest quarterback of all-time.

The 8-year regime showed three tackles, two guards, two centers, one end—eight fine linemen. By years they were Grady Pritchard, tackle; Roy Morris, end; Pierce Matthews, tackle; Herman McIver, center; "Red" Whisnant, guard; Garrett Morehead, tackle; Harry Schwartz, center; and this year's captain, Ray Farris, All-American guard.

The sudden break from the well established tradition is hard to explain.

There was a time when Tar Heel teams were outstanding for fine defensive work. Defense was good this year, with all opponents held to a total of 53 points. But the 346-point offense was far more conspicuous. The Tar Heels had become an offensive machine, and if more reasons are wanted, Nash himself can supply them.

The kind of back who could usually be depended upon when a pass, catch or a tackle thrust was needed for first down, he was as fine also on defense and interference.

He played well all season, and really shined against Virginia and Duke, the traditional rivals of the Tar Heel schedule.

In the former he averaged 12 yards a run, broke off-tackle for 50 yards and a touchdown and scored another on a fine pass catch and long run. In the latter he scored the first three of seven touchdowns that put the Tar Heels in second place in the national scoring chase.

He was perhaps the most consistent back on the club.

Nash is from Charleston, S. C. He has just turned 22, is a good student, and is prominent in other extra-curricular activities at the University.

Fenner and Harden Can Play Another Year In Football

A check-up reveals that news stories sent out just before the Duke-Carolina game were in error regarding the eligibility of Julian Fenner and Pap Harden, veterans on the Carolina varsity this past season.

The report was that Fenner and Harden had played their third year for Carolina. As a matter of fact, they have played only two years. The mistaken impression was due to the fact that both men are seniors.

Fenner was a member of the 1927 squad, but did not get in a single game. Harden was not out that year.

Should Fenner and Harden return the Tar Heels would lose only nine veterans instead of eleven, as was first reported.

This should be mighty good news for Tar Heel supporters. Fenner was a regular end most of last year, and one of the finest flankmen in the state during the season just closed. He played particularly brilliant games against Georgia Tech, Georgia, Virginia, and Duke.

Fenner teamed with Don Holt, third-year veteran, to keep opposing gains via the flank route to less than 10 yards a game all season and played great ball on offense as well.

Harden was one of the most dependable fullbacks on the squad last year and again this year. With his 185 pounds, he carried lots of drive and proved a fine man on backing up the line, a good interference runner, and a fair pass receiver as well.

Their eligibility greatly enhances Tar Heel chances for the 1930 season.

Nine Tar Heel veterans played their last game for Carolina this year, leaving big gaps in the Blue and White line—Captain Ray Farris and Bud Eskew, guards; Bill Koenig, Fenton Adkins and "Puny" Harper, tackles; Don Holt, end; Phil Jackson and Jimmy Ward, halfbacks; and Yank Spaulding, fullback.

Duke has five letter men back in basketball.

PROMISING TRACK MATERIAL FOUND IN GYM CLASSES

The track meet held on Emerson field yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock, in which members of the freshman gym classes meeting on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays participated, was successful insofar as uncovering good track material was concerned. Several good men were found in each event.

Ellis Dudley, New Jersey boy, was the outstanding sprinter of the meet, running the 50-yard dash in six seconds flat, and the 50-yard low hurdles in seven and four-fifths seconds. W. B. Ridenhour and W. C. Mitcham equalled his time in the hurdles, while Tom Watkins, winner of the cake race, and C. W. Allison followed with eight and one-fifth seconds.

W. F. Howard, R. S. Sidney and N. N. Coates were best in the shot put, each throwing the 12-pound shot 35 feet. T. L. Glascock, by his 95-foot throw of the discus showed himself to be the best freshman weight man uncovered so far.

Tom Watkins won the broad jump, leaping 20 feet 6 inches, almost two feet further than his nearest competitor. W. F. Howard was second with 18 feet 9 inches. Howard was first in the high jump, clearing the bars at 5 feet 3 inches. A. S. Vinson was second, three inches below Howard's mark.

In preparation for their Monday night's appearance, the soloists either have visited or will visit Chapel Hill during this week.

Cobb Addresses Mitchell Society

At the meeting of the Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society held in Phillips hall Tuesday evening, Professor T. F. Hickerson, of the school of engineering, presented a paper on "A Design of Rigid Frames," and Dr. Collier Cobb, head of the geology department, gave an illustrated lecture on "The Human Habitation as a Response to Environment."

Mr. Hickerson described the method for designing rigid frames, and presented a series of tables showing moments of inertia of certain members in several types of frames when they are loaded at different points. He exhibited a series of cardboard frames which behaved under loads the same as rigid frames and explained that the results seen in the miniature frames coincided with the results obtained from substitution in the formulas used in the design of such frames on a large scale.

After first making the statement that men far apart in both time and space instinctively meet the same conditions in the same way, Dr. Cobb showed a series of slides which illustrated some of the different types of homes used by man. He pointed out the similarity between the homes built by savages and those built by civilized man.

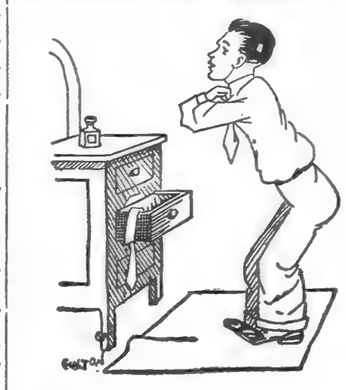
Dean Paulsen Gives Tag Champions Feed

The members of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity's tag football team, winners of the campus title, were entertained last night at a banquet given by the Dean and Mrs. Paulsen at their home.

The banquet was merely another expression of the Dean's interest in campus athletics. Besides being one of the most ardent backers of intramural sports he is one of the few that show their interest by banquets.

Besides 15 of the Betas that attended this banquet Mr. Bob House, Bo Shepherd, Mack Gray, and Dale Ranson represented the faculty and intramural department. The intramural officials stated that Dean Paulsen had been very helpful to the association and that he had done much to stimulate interest in intramural sports.

Mr. Bob House was the principal speaker of the evening and he stated that the attendance at the championship game last Tuesday was about the same size as the crowd that attended the N. C.-S. C. football game in his freshman year.



George Bradham, captain and playing manager of the winning team, spoke on behalf of the Betas and expressed their appreciation for all that the Dean had done.

Geologist Here Wed.

Horace Butt, who graduated from the University in 1921, visited in Chapel Hill yesterday. Mr. Butt is now geologist for the Atlantic Refining Company in Venezuela.

After his graduation he went to Mexico and worked there for a short time as assistant geologist for a petroleum company. He was transferred to Maraciabo, Venezuela, and has been there for the past four years.

Mr. Butt has been visiting in the United States for nearly two months and plans to sail for Maraciabo on December 20.

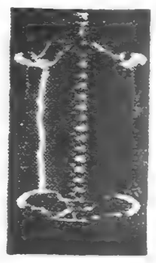
WHAT YOUNGER COLLEGE MEN ARE DOING WITH WESTINGHOUSE

LIGHTNING HAS LONG BEEN A COSTLY RAIDER OF POWER LINES



Wild lightning meets his master . . .

REMEMBER how you used to sit on the porch during a thunderstorm and shudder just a little at the forces that seemed to tear open the sky and shake the hills? Electrical men have often shuddered in grave seriousness over those same forces. For lightning has been a costly raider of power lines.

Now, however, many means of defense are available, and many more are being developed. Science has been studying lightning, and experimenting with it. Down in the mountains of Tennessee a group of Westinghouse men have been making photographic records of the voltages developed by lightning, with the cathode-ray oscillograph and the klydonograph. Guided by their findings, another group in New Jersey is enabled to reproduce lightning artificially, and study its effects on a high-tension line. And in East Pittsburgh, with a generator that will produce lightning strokes equivalent to 35,000,000 horse-power and with a laboratory that duplicates power line conditions, others are learning new facts about the behavior of protective devices.

Much of this work is carried on by young men recently out of college. Their achievements will save millions for power companies, and eliminate many hazards to life in substation operation.

Lightning jumps the gap between these Westinghouse arcing horns, and spares the insulators.

Koch Sets Closing Date For Drama League Play Contest

All North Carolinians Participating in Contest Must Have Manuscripts at Chapel Hill December 31.

Prof. Frederick H. Koch, state chairman of the national playwriting contest being sponsored by the Drama League of America and the play department of Longmans, Green, and company, announced today that all plays to be entered in the contest by North Carolinians should be in the hands of the state committee by December 31.

This is the third consecutive year this national playwriting contest has been held, the object being "the discovery of new authors and the development of native American drama."

Awards will be made for a full-length play, a one-act Christmas play, and a religious play, either full-length or pageant.

The winning full-length play will be produced by the New York Theatre Guild, and the author will receive an advance royalty of $500 and a percentage of the gross weekly box office receipts.

The winning one-act Christmas play will be produced by the American Academy of Dramatic Arts.

The religious play judged best will be produced by the Pilgrim Players of Evanston.

The author is to receive $500 advance royalty on the book and amateur acting rights for the full-length play, $150 advance royalty on the religious play and $100 advance royalty on the one-act Christmas play. The author is also to receive a certain percentage on the gross sale of the book and 50 percent of all collections from the sale of amateur acting rights.

North Carolinians entering the contest should send their manuscripts to Professor Koch, who will place them in the hands of a committee of judges composed of Professors Russell Potter, R. P. Bond and Dougald MacMillan of the English department.

The state judges will select the winning manuscripts for each contest and forward them to the national judges, who are Hatcher Hughes, Kenyon Nicholson, Alexander Dean, Dr. Herman L. Richardson, Prof. Harold A. Ehrensberger, and Mrs. A. Starr Best.

Freshman Notice

All freshmen will return to their regular gymnasium classes tomorrow. Men who have not reported for the track work in the last two days will be given an opportunity to do so some day after Christmas.

Tuberculosis Seal Sale Conducted By Community Club

The anti-tuberculosis Christmas seal sale is now being conducted on the campus under the auspices of the Chapel Hill Community club health department. The object is to assist in sending certain well known cases of tuberculosis in Chapel Hill to the state sanatorium and to defray part of the expense of the colored nurse in Chapel Hill.

Of every dollar collected from the sale of seals in this town, 75 cents remains in Chapel Hill for this purpose, 20 cents goes to the North Carolina Tuberculosis association, and 5 cents is used for printing seals, posters and advertising matter.

The 75 cents thus collected will help supply a nurse for which $450 is needed, and the tuberculosis emergency cases in town which need immediate attention require $150.

The patients who are the greatest menace to the students in the community are among the servants attached to various food dispensing units here.

The cost of sending a patient to the sanatorium is one dollar per day. There are actually 50 active known cases in Chapel Hill and since the town cannot tax its people that amount per day the only salvation for these unfortunate people is the raising of this money through the Red Cross.

Dr. N. B. Adams will address the Spanish club at its regular monthly meeting tonight at 7:30 o'clock in the parish house of the Episcopal church.

W. A. Starbuck was initiated Thursday night by the Delta Sigma Phi fraternity. Mr Starbuck is from Winston-Salem.

Student Awarded Carnegie Hero Scholarship When 13 Years Old

(By E. C. Daniel, Jr.)

We have in our midst a real hero, Curtis Lee Bradley, awarded a bronze medal and a scholarship by the Carnegie Hero Fund, for attempting the rescue of a drowning man.

His voice was pleasing as it came over the wire, "I will be in at eight o'clock tonight." And a few seconds before that hour I knocked on his door at 207 Manley dormitory.

The door was held open by a tall, blond young man, a muscular blue-eyed Nordic fellow. His reserved cordiality of manner agreed with the impression that I had previously received from hearing him speak. He immediately marked himself as a well-born son of southern townspeople.

He is a likable American boy with a lively interest in what makes the clock hands turn. I have no doubt that he is an admirer of Lindberg, for he showed an animated concern about aviation. Thus set apart by his character, so unusual among us, his conversation and opinions at once become far more interesting than the distinction that makes him an object of publicity, but this is the story of the deed for which he was honored by the Carnegie foundation.

The episode occurred when Bradley was only 13 years old. One afternoon during the summer of that year (the exact date and circumstances are a bit obscure to him) Bradley and a small group of friends were swimming in a pond near his nome town, Troy, S. C. In the group was an older man, a visitor in the town, who caught a cramp during the swim. Although the drowning man

Henderson Addresses New York Audiences

Dr. Archibald Henderson is to return tomorrow from New York where he lectured before several important groups.

He gave two lectures on Bernard Shaw in the McMillan theatre at Columbia University. His topics were "Humor and Wit of Bernard Shaw" and "The Philosophy of Bernard Shaw." He spoke under the auspices of the Institute of Arts and Sciences of Columbia University, his being two of a series of lectures in the field of adult education.

Prior to that Dr. Henderson had lectured before the League of Political Education at a meeting in Town Hall, his subject being "Eugene O'Neill and His Plays." He ranked O'Neill as a dramatist with Bernard Shaw and Luigi Pirandello. He said O'Neill was "the greatest technical experimentalist in the drama now living."

Ground Machine To Be Kept Here Until Saturday

Curtiss Flying Service Keeping Machine Here Because of Interest.

Mr. Threadgill of the Curtiss flying service of Raleigh announced yesterday that the model airplane with the full-size set of controls with which one can duplicate the flying of a real airplane will be on demonstration in the mechanical engineering laboratory this afternoon after 3:30 and again all day Saturday.

During the first three days when the machine was on demonstration, many students visited the lab and "flew" the plane, and because of the interest displayed by the students the machine is being kept here for two additional days. It will be taken to Raleigh Saturday night.

Another House Burned On Old Fraternity Row

Delta Sigma Phi House Almost Completely Destroyed By Early Morning Fire; Most of Furniture and Clothing Saved.

(By F. J. M.)

Today, Friday the 13th, may hold its terrors for many but Thursday, December 12th, will long be remembered by the members of the Delta Sigma Phi fraternity as one which saw Lady Luck far, far away from Fraternity Row.

No one definitely knows just who first noticed the clouds of smoke and bits of flame which were pouring from a room on the second floor. Allen Marshall or B. Ritchie were among the first to be awakened from their sleep. As soon as they realized that it wasn't an aftermath of the initiation they had had of W. A. Starbuck of Winston-Salem nor an attempt by the University to reclaim the property along the Row, they jumped up and notified the nine men sleeping in the house. George Cole, when he broke into Jimmie Ward's room, was rudely repulsed by the eminent football player, who thought that George was up to another practical joke. It required great physical force to arouse Ward to the close danger.

Once fully awake and cognizant of the seriousness of the conflagration, Ward immediately tried to get in touch, through telephoning, with the fire department. The proper connections could not be made and Ward hastened back to his room to join with the others in reclaiming and saving as much of their property as possible. After packing most of his belongings and entrusting them to the safekeeping of some helpful neighbor, Ward, in company with Ritchie, dashed down to the fire house in an automobile. As Chief Foister says, "I heard the horn of the car blowing a mile-a-minute. I thought it was some rum-runner being chased by the police. It was lucky I was up, for it was 4 o'clock in the morning, but I had just finished a telephone conversation. But when I saw, as I looked out of the window, a single car was tearing down, horn going full

WAKE FOREST AND STATE SPEAKERS DEBATE CAROLINA

First Intercollegiate Affair Held Here Last Night; One Team Goes to Raleigh.

(By J. C. Williams)

In the first local intercollegiate debate of the season the Tar Heel debaters last night won a unanimous decision over the forensic artists from Wake Forest on "Resolved, that the nations of the world should adopt some plan of complete disarmament, except for such forces as are needed for police purposes." Carolina's representatives, G. P. Carr and T. E. Denton, upheld the affirmative side of the issue. The Wake Forest negative aggregation was composed of W. A. Bostic and A. B. Carroll.

Last evening H. H. Hobgood and T. M. Mashburn debated against N. C. State in Raleigh. In this fray the local representatives took the negative end of the query, thus rounding out the Carolina-Wake Forest-N. C. State triangular debate. The decision had not been learned when this issue of the Tar Heel went to the press.

The Carolina-Wake Forest debate in Bingham hall last night was well-attended, the question of disarmament being one of the foremost political issues in the field of national and international politics at present. Professor George McKie of the department of public speaking presided.

Both teams treated fully the effect which disarmament would have on international trade, with special reference to the effect which it would have upon the commercial policies of the United States. Both teams gave thorough consideration to every phase of the question of disarmament in both its national and international implications. The discussion from start to finish was an intelligent one and showed profound knowledge of the question, as attested by the interest shown by the audience.

Upperclassmen To Register Next Week

The Registrar's offices announce that all upperclassmen, (juniors and seniors), and students in the professional schools will register during the examination period, December 18-21.

Students in the college of liberal arts will register in the offices of the department in which they are majoring; all others will register with their deans.

No registration will be accepted by the Registrar's office unless all courses needing assignments to classes are properly validated and all outstanding fees at the business office and library have been paid.

First and second year students will register on January 2.

Y DELEGATES GO TO RALEIGH MEET

Members From the Senior-Junior, Sophomore, and Freshman Cabinets Attend State Y Conference.

Dr. John R. Mott, famous Y leader, gave an interesting talk Wednesday to a group of Y delegates attending a conference at State College. The subject of his discourse was "World Relationships."

After being introduced by Major C. C. Early, head of the military instruction at State College, Dr. Mott began his speech by saying that the doors of the foreign countries were opened to the United States as he had never before seen them. He gave three reasons for saying this. "First," he said," I say this because of the rising tide of nationalism; second, because of the plastic age of the world today; and finally, because of the rising spiritual tide." He continued by stating, "I find far more interest in religion than I have ever seen before, and I also notice a great returning tide of faith."

When asked if he thought that the foreign countries wanted the United States to come in, he replied in the affirmative. "But," he said, "there are a great many commercial companies of the United States in the foreign lands that are causing a gradual decrease of this desire for us to come in." Dr. Mott closed his talk by answering a great number of questions of the delegates.

From 75 to 100 delegates attended this conference, and the colleges represented were the University, Duke, N. C. C. W., State, E. C. T. C., Wake Forest, and others. Those going from the University Y were: from the junior-senior cabinet — Jimmie Williams, Ed Hamer, Joe Eagles, Johnnie Lang and Beverly Moore; from the sophomore cabinet—J. Elwin Dungan, John Parks and F. M. James; and from the freshman council — Alex Webb, Bob Barnett, William McKee, Charles Brawley, Charlie Rose, Schuyler Schenck, Charlie Rose and Schuyler Schenck. Mr. Comer and Grady Leonard also attended.

Students Experience Thrills As They Drive Model Plane

(By B. H. Whitton)

The wind whistles by, he banks slightly to make this turn, but not quite enough and he side-slips a bit, comes out of it, and continues on his way, winging over the vast expanse of territory far below. The field comes into view as a small light speck; he runs on with the throttle wide open. The field comes closer; he noses down, approaches the field, and makes a perfect three-point landing. The plane coasts to a stop. He steps out on solid ground once again, and the trip is over.

He has had the long desired experience of piloting an airplane, and as he relinquishes his seat to the next man, he agrees that the conditions in the model airplane and controls which is on demonstration in Phillips hall is surely life-like.

Another student sits at the controls, but we really wouldn't care to ride with this budding aviator. He makes a jerky take-off, and the manouvers he performs with the plane are enough to make one swear off that form of transportation forever.

He goes up with such force that one would surely hit the ceiling, if there were any such thing in the sky. Then as if to make up for that unexpected thrill, he dives the plane earthward. Things reach a crisis, and he jerks the controls again. The plane responds perfectly, and up we go. Then as if this were enough he decides to land, and such a landing. Hold your teeth everybody!

He gets out of the "plane," and another young "pilot" takes his place to experience the thrills of really piloting a plane, even if it is only a miniature which is so arranged that it cannot give one a spill but can still furnish all the thrills. So it continued, first one and then another, and everyone had taken the opportunity to pilot the plane.

All day yesterday and again today the machine is being demonstrated in the mechanical engineering laboratory in Phillips hall, and students are welcome

Tar Heel Topics

Friday the 13th, fires and rumors of fires. Better cut out smoking today!

Three down and four to go! Looks like the fire demon is playing a great game on Fraternity Row.

Now if someone would start an investigation of the senate lobby investigating committee somebody might get investigated after all.

New York movie directors evidently are not as enterprising as their Hollywood brethren. Not one of them took advantage of the Harlem movie studio blaze to take a big fire scene.

The buildings department has erected a safety fence around Memorial hall, but it doesn't hide the darn thing in the least. A mammoth shroud to completely cover the monstrosity would be much more desirable, to our way of thinking.

We hear from reliable sources that certain of the faculty are highly wrought up over the fact that the Tar Heel will not be issued during exam week. And yet they frequently remind the staff that we are going to have to get down to work on our courses if we expect to pass any of them.

A Problem And A Duty For Undergraduates

America is the richest nation in the world. Other nations are inclined to look upon this country as the golden land of opportunity and wealth, of luxury and comfort for everyone. Even we collegians, familiar as most of us are, with the deplorable conditions existing in many of the nation's industries, presumably possessed of the intelligence and liberality of thought to recognize the fundamental injustices perpetrated every day upon workers in many of our industries and agricultural occupations, are inclined to regard these conditions as natural and inevitable, to sing the praises of our "perfect" economic system in true Rotarian fashion.

Economists have incontrovertiably established, with statistics and entirely logical deduction, that the income of the United States is more than adequate for the comfort of everybody, but it is so unevenly distributed that a large proportion of our population is in poverty. Gastonia, Marion, Elizabethton—these recent and tragic chapters in our economic history represent a natural but ill-advised attempt to correct the fundamental inequality of incomes.

A tragically large proportion of the nation's leaders toward the warfare now raging between the forces of capital and labor. In both camps are thousands of influential persons, intellectual and civic leaders, who are exhibiting collossal intolerance, an unwillingness to approach the basic problems in the light of sane, unprejudiced reasoning, that is nothing short of criminal. With today's undergraduate generations, who will be the nation's leaders of tomorrow, lies the greatest hope of a satisfactory solution for the problems which are threatening to wreck our economic system, to send our entire national industrial and economic structure crashing into a pile of ruins.

As thinking men and future leaders of the nation, the present undergraduate generation should familiarize themselves with the true state of affairs in this country, develop a liberal and rational attitude toward and knowledge of the fundamental problems underneath the ominous portents of national unrest which are sweeping the country, and prepare to cope with them. This problem of unequal distribution of wealth is, in our opinion, the basis of all our industrial unrest, and should merit the close attention of every college man.

The New Matrimonial Outlook

Along with numerous developments in recent years which go to make up what we call progress have come important shifts of thought in the field of matrimony. The institution which the writer has in mind is that of companionate marriage.

The principle of real companionate marriage is as old as matrimony itself. Many lovers in the porch-swing talks and evening strolls which precede every normal wedlock have preferred companionship, with its resultant individual and professional freedom, to parenthood. But in the years following, criminal ignorance of medicinal facts has done much to wreck these early plans. The modern girl, however, will seldom let ignorance of these facts cause her to unwillingly "replenish the earth." The problem, therefore, takes on a different aspect in this modern age in which we are now living.

The only thing new about companionate marriage is its recent admission to the limelight of discussion and subsequent practice. Advertisement of companionate marriage as a legitimate substitute for family-life is, however, a bit unusual as yet. As the situation stands today this development in the realm of matrimony is hardly reputable enough to be termed a fad, yet it has become a real issue and one which demands careful scrutiny by conservatives and progressives alike.

One feature of the companionate marriage institution (if it may be so termed) warrants special consideration. We refer to the mutual independence of each party to the matrimonial contract. Many contend that it is high time for young men to cast aside their obsolete notions that they must support their wives in order to command respect from them. The statement that "all gentlemen support their wives" seems to be losing ground rapidly in this present age. Regardless of any opinions concerning the matter, everybody must agree that all marriages are properly partnerships. No thoughtful husband will lay claim to supporting his wife merely because he pays grocery bills and house rent. He is rather forced to conclude that she earns his protection by her domestic labors of which he himself is a beneficiary. This fairly recent change of attitude on the part of husbands toward their wives is a product of a changing civilization, the final result of which can hardly be prophesied. Interestingly enough, this phase of the new matrimonial outlook is strikingly akin to the underlying principle of companionate marriage.

Although we are inclined to doubt the general feasibility of companionate marriage, we feel that it does deserve a favorable eye. Although a worthy son cannot afford to say that his mother's type was not wisely chosen by his father, he should think long and carefully before choosing a support-me sype of wife in this present age. Now that the average woman knows she can work and thereby pay her own bills the support-me type will often withdraw from the ties of wedlock, unless she is fabulously supported and treated as though she were a queen. This fact we believe to be worthy of very exacting consideration.

Although companionate marriage may never gain any very widespread acceptance, it is a real issue at present and one which is not to be looked upon in the light of a mere passing fad.—J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

WILL DURANT AND HIS SCHEME FOR BROADENING OF THE MIND

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

On less than two typewritten pages Will Durant has compiled for the December American magazine a list of books that he promises will make of one a scholar and a philosopher if read in accordance with his scheme. If one is to become a scholar and a philosopher according to his dictates one is to read from the books that he has chosen one hour a day for four years. Durant calls his list "The Road to Freedom."

It is not my idea to go into detail concerning this movement—it is well worthy of being called a movement, since it is such a well concocted scheme for the advancement of literature and broadening of the mind—for it is easy enough, and well worth the while, for anyone to secure an American magazine where the project is explained much better than I could explain it. My idea is merely to bring Durant's idea more fully to the eye of the undergraduates of the University in order that they may all see the significance of such a movement. After personally calling this article to the attention of several students I find that I am not the only one that has wished for such guidance as Durant gives. It is quite evident that the most of us are eager to learn in a systematic way but have not up to this time found that way. With the exception of the different writers, scientists, biologists, poets, and philosophers that we run across while pursueing our varied courses here, we read or hear very little of them. For what student is going to the library and read from Sophocles' Oedipus Tyrannus, Schopenhauer's works, or La Rochefoucauld's Reflection? It just isn't done by the average person. But with Durant's compilation before that person there is more than likely to be some heavy thinking done.

Mr. Durant states in part:

"Will you sit down with me? Perhaps you are a college graduate and are ready, then, to begin your education. Perhaps you have never had a chance to go to college and have considered what else our children learn there except the latest morals. They might learn many fine things if they came to it old enough; but our youngsters take so long to grow up in these hurried days that they are too immature, when they enter college, to absorb or understand the treasures offered them there so lavishly. If you have studied with life rather than with courses, it may be as well; the rough tutelage of reality has ripened you into some readiness to know men. Here at this spacious table you shall prepare yourself for membership in the International of the Mind; you shall be friends with Plato and Leonardo, with Bacon and Montague; and when you have passed through that goodly company and you shall be fit for the fellowship of the finest leaders of your time and place.

Can you spare an hour a day? Or, if some days are too crowded with life and duty to give you leisure for these subtler things, can you atone for such bookless evenings by an extra hour or two on those Sunday mornings when the endless newspaper consumes you to no end? Let me have seven hours a week, and I will make a scholar and philosopher out of you; in four years you shall be better educated than any new-fledged Doctor of Philosophy in the land.

But let us understand each other: You must not expect any material gain from this intimacy with great men. Some lucre may flow incidentally in later years from the maturity and background that you will win; but these dividends, like those of the insurance companies are not in any way guaranteed; you take your chance. Indeed, you will be "losing time" from your professions or busness; if you long for millions, you had better lay aside this map of the City of God, and keep your nose to the earth. And there well be blocks along the line: occasionally you will come to an obscure or lengthy book, a bad up-grade; and all your strength will have to be subpoeaned to your task. Remember that we are not making a list of the absolutely best one hundred books, no list merely of the masterpieces of belles lettres; we are choosing those volumes that will do most to give a man education, civilization and culture.

Since we wish to have orderly minds and to avoid the chaos of desultory reading, we shall want to begin at the beginning—even with the distant stars and the antique earth—and these beginnings will be the worst obstructions n our path. Initium oimidium facti, said the Romans; the start is half the deed. Let us gird up our loins and screw our courage to the sticking point for these initial hills, and the rest will be level road, with wisdom or sublimity at every milestone and pleasant riches of beauty everywhere. We want here not entertainment only, but education; and we want it in such order that the knowledge we win may fall into logical sequence in our memories and give us at last that full perspective which is the source and summit of understanding."

In this commentation on Durant's scheme for the broadening of the mind I have possibly quoted too much, yet it is justifiable in that one should learn more of this modern philosopher; learn more of his views, and learn to think with a better knowledge of humanity. Durant makes an honest effort to humanize knowledge by centering speculative thought around certain personalities. He thinks that epistemology has about ruined modern philosophy and awaits the time when the study of the knowledge process will be recognized as the business of the science of psychology, and when philosophy will again be understood as the synthetic interpretation of all experience rather than the analytic description of the mode and process of experience itself.

PAYMENT OF "Y" PLEDGES URGED

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I wish again to remind those students who have not taken up their "Y" pledges that we would be mighty glad to get it before the holidays. For those who find it impossible to part with cash at this time, for your convenience we remind you of the opportunity to apply your laundry refund on the pledge as a number of students are doing. Arrangement has been made with the laundry whereby students sign a laundry refund release card at the "Y" office, and upon the instruction of the card the laundry delivers that refund check to the "Y" office. If your refund is more than your pledge the difference will be returned to the student, when the refund is less than the pledge it is simply credited on your card for whatever the amount may be. This method for payment of pledges is a convenience to the student and will enable the "Y" to get a larger amount of cash for December obligations. We thank you heartily for your cooperation.

Here's a new stepper in the right direction!

IT'S the newest dance record by Guy Lombardo and His Royal Canadians, so of course it's another peppy foot-warmer.

Lombardo plays these two snappy hits (no need to introduce them to you!) in the smooth, moderate tempo you hear on all the smartest dance floors. And into each number he injects skilful musical embroidery of his own that will have you saying, "Give me that one!"

WRESTLING TEAM EXPECTS TO HAVE SUCCESSFUL YEAR

Only Two Regulars Lost From Last Year; Quinlan Calls for Heavyweight Aspirants.

According to advance information, the 1929 varsity wrestling team shows every indication of having a successful season.

The candidates for this season show some unusually good prospects. Stallings, 115 pound weight, should show up well before the end of the season. Woodard, captain this year, is making a fine showing in the 125 pound weight. Both of these boys have a fine chance for all-southern honors. Other weights include Zealy and Albright, 135 pounds, and Tsumas, G. Saunders and Spell on the freshman teams last year and the year before, in the 145 pound weight. Higdon, Moore and Whitener are doing good work in the 155 pound weight and should come through this season in fine style. Cowper has been out for football but will enter the 165 weight after Christmas.

There are a number of good prospects from the freshman team last year and before the 1929 season has closed several are expected to show up well.

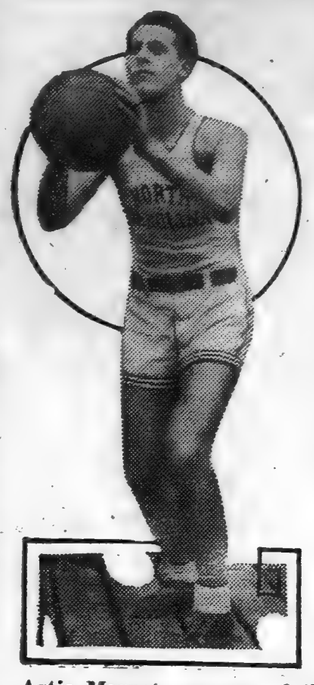
The weakest positions now are the heavy weights. Every year this weight seems to be the hardest to fill due to the few candidates who come out. Peyton Abbott, assistant to Coach Quinlan, who is in charge at present, urges all candidates for heavier weights particularly to come out. Former experience is not necessary and every one is given an equal chance to show what he can do. Before a meet every one is given an apportunity to try out. There are good chances in the heavy weight for those who wish to come out and work.

The varsity has a hard schedule ahead of them, and meets the strong Penn State team about the middle of the season. Other matches are with State, Duke, Davidson, V. M. I., V. P. I., Washington and Lee and Virginia.

A Southern Conference meet is assured for this year and the Carolina team has a good chance at the championship.

If the team shows up well in the coming matches, they may be entered in the national intercollegiate championship meet at Philadelphia in March.

Gym Track Meet



A track meet similar to the one held Wednesday was staged yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock on Emerson field. The participants in the second meet were members of gym classes meeting Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays. Probably due to the intense cold the results were not up to yesterday's standards, none of the records being broken and only two being tied.

L. W. Whitehead, running the 50-yard dash in 6 seconds, equalled the time of Ellis Dudley, winner Wednesday; and J. T. Griffith tied T. L. Glascock's 120-foot javelin throw.

Whitehead was also the fastest man in the hurdles, running the distance in 8 1-5 seconds. Griffith and R. B. Riddle each threw the discus 72 feet for a tie for first place. In the broad jump R. W. Johnston carried off the honors by jumping 17 feet 6 inches; and three men, D. M. Sewell, R. B. Brock and R. W. Johnston, tied for first place in the high jump, each with jumps of 4 feet 9 inches.

The Wigue and Masque will hold an initiation this evening, Friday the 13th, at 7:15 o'clock in Gerrard hall. All members, both active and inactive, are urged to be present.

Art Marpet

Artie Marpet was one of the best defensive guards in the state last year. This is his second year on the varsity.

COACH ROWE HAS FOUR LETTERMEN

Southern Champion Boxers Have Big Gaps to Fill; Captain Allen, Sheffield, Goodridge, and Warren Back.

With a southern crown to defend, a North Carolina boxing squad of 35, that shows four lettermen back from last year's champions, is driving away in daily practice to carry on the fine Tar Heel ring record.

Preliminary announcement of a schedule lists eight hard meets, one an intersectional test with an outstanding eastern university.

Coach Crayton Rowe has three big gaps in his lineup, and is striving hard to whip his squad into fair shape before the holidays.

Captain Archie Allen, a southern champion last year, is back to take care of the 145 pound weight.

Harry Sheffield, Noah Goodridge and John Warren, all of whom had fine records and went far in last year's tournament, are back to fill the 125, 135 and 175 pound berths.

Evan Vaughn and Obie Davis were due to return for the 115 and 160 pound berths and give the Tar Heels a veteran team except for the heavy berth.

Both boys dropped out of college at the last minute, and now Coach Rowe has three big vacancies.

Bill Koenig, football star, who boxed his freshman year, is coming out for the heavyweight post, but so far there isn't an outstanding bantam in the camp.

Avery, Smathers and Rosenfeldt are all showing well in the 160 pound class; but it looks as if the Tar Heels will have to go quite a while before finding a bantam who could match the speedy, hard-hitting Vaughn.

A number of other candidates are showing no little promise in the daily practice session and bid fair to give the veterans some keen competition for their posts.

Hoke Webb, who boxed in several meets last year, is one of these, in the 145 pound class.

Several up from last year's fine freshman team are also looking good — Jack Farris, 145 pounds, and Cohen, Gray and Gatlin in the featherweight class, being outstanding.

Bernard Shaw says he might be willing to write an original movie plot for three billion dollars. It seems quite reasonable, since the outlay so far for the plot now in use has been about as much.—Detroit News.

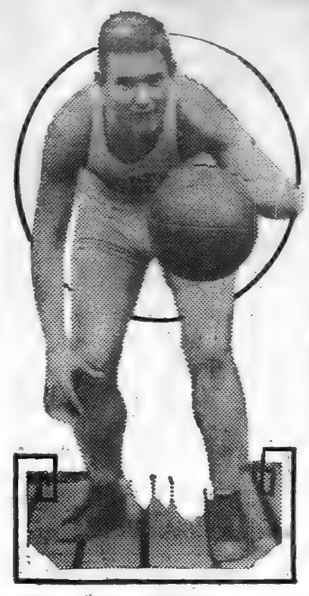
("Heinie")

THE CAMPUS FOOTBALL TITLE has finally been settled and the next intramural production will probably be the basketball league. No definite date has yet been announced for the opening of the basketball league, but it is expected that the intramural association will open up court activities early in the second quarter. Several of the dormitories and fraternities have already been working out and it is expected that a large number of teams will enter the league. More interest was taken in the football league this year than usual and there is every indication that such will be the case in basketball. None of the teams went through the basketball season last year without a defeat, and it is hardly likely that any will be undefeated in the coming season.



TRACK OFFICIALS REPORT that interest in the cinder path is picking up and that a larger number of candidates than usual are expected to turn out for winter practice in the Tin Can and on the track. Vernon Cowper is assisting Coaches Fetzer and Ranson this year, and will probably give special attention to the pole vaulters and broad jumpers. It is a difficult task to fill Cowper's place in the pole vault this year. Last year he broke several University records and the Tar Heels came out first in the pole vault in every meet last season. Carolina will probably show more strength in the sprints this year than in any other portion of track. Ken Gay, last year's sprint star, and Charlie Farmer, one of the fastest freshmen in the south last year, will compose one of the strongest sprint teams in the south. Gay secured a place in the Southern Conference meet last year, and Farmer was the most outstanding freshman sprinter in the south.

A BASKETBALL CAPTAIN has not been selected for this season, the plan being to have Coach Ashmore select a leader before each game. The co-eds, however, have started activities by electing Ida Currie to lead their aggregation this year. Dave Nims succeeds Johnnie Henderson as captain of track this year, and Jimmy Maus takes Nap Lufty's chair in baseball. Ed Yeomans will lead the tennis team this year, while Archie Allen is captain of boxing. Strud Nash was recently elected to captain the 1930 football team.

DEAN PAULSEN WAS true to his word and Wednesday night the Betas feasted at his home. Dean Paulsen has been one of the most ardent supporters of the University teams and has especially boosted the intramural athletic association. This reward to the winners of the campus football title was merely another way of showing his interest in the intramural teams. The winning of the campus title by Beta Theta Pi made the second time within the past two years that a fraternity has won this title.

THE BASKETBALL SCHEDULE for pre-season games will probably be against as strong or stronger teams than during the season's games. Some Y. M. C. A.'s with which these games are scheduled should have some of the strongest teams in the south as many former college stars are playing with them. The Durham Y. M. C. A. team, for example, is mainly composed of former Carolina and Duke athletes. Rufus Hackney and Henry Satterfield, two of Carolina's most outstanding players last year, will probably hold down their old positions on the Durham quintet.

Billie Brown

Billy Brown will be one of the mainstays of the Carolina team this year. In spite of his position as guard, he was one of the highest scorers on the squad last year.

GRANTLAND RICE LAUDS TAR HEELS

Lack of publicity may have quite a lot to do with the rating a football team gets alongside other teams in the country. The fact that a college or university happens to be near a center of publicity can make a lot of difference. Grantland Rice, in his column in the New York Herald-Tribune Tuesday, December 10, classed Carolina and Colgate as two teams which failed to get one-third of the credit due them. This, Mr. Rice said, was because of several reasons: one, that both dropped an early season game and thus were eliminated from title aspirations, and another reason was lack of publicity.

The word of Grantland Rice carries considerable weight in football circles, and his complimentary comment on Carolina's season showing is not to be overlooked. In part, he said concerning Colgate and Carolina: "Up through November they had each lost one game. Both had run up big scores against good teams. For example: North Carolina beat Maryland 43 to 0. Colgate beat Brown 32 to 0. At the finish of the season North Carolina and Colgate would have been ready to go against almost any team in the country and provide one of the busiest afternoons of the year. Both teams were big, fast and well coached. Yet they dipped back of the main skyline because Colgate lost an early game to Wisconsin and North Carolina fell before Georgia. Together they scored over 600 points against less than 70 for the opposition, which is pretty fair evidence they were playing quite a bit of football here and there. Neither happens to be close to any large center of publicity and this can make a lot of difference. But if football is played for publicity it might as well be canned. Colgate and North Carolina seemed to be pretty well satisfied with what they did on the field—not in the papers—which is one of the few outbreaks of sanity the late season has shown."

Carolina 41 Greensboro Y 10

Last night the Carolina varsity basketball team overwhelmed Greensboro Y. M. C. A. 41-10 in the Tin Can. At the half-way point the Tar Heels were leading by a small margin, but soon after the beginning of the second period the University team hit its stride and ran wild. Much of Carolina's superiority was in the guards, Marpet and Brown. Coach Ashmore used his substitutes freely throughout the game.

Tonight the Tar Heels close their pre-holiday schedule with Durham's Y. M. C. A. in the Tin Can.

Wray To Speak On Telephone Business

G. W. Wray, representative of the Southern Bell telephone company, will be in Chapel Hill today to talk to students who are interested in considering the telephone business as a life work.

Mr. Wray plans to present the proposition his company offers to students in the school of commerce, college of liberal arts and in the schools of electrical and mechanical engineering. Any other students who are interested in attending his talks are invited by him to do so.

The meeting of all interested students will take place at chapel period (10:25 a. m.) today at 103 Bingham hall (auditorium on the first floor).

blast, towards the fire department, I raised the window and heard the car stop, then Ward yelled to me that the house was on fire behind the old library. They got on-the-minute service over there."

Before the engine left the engine-house, the fire siren was set in motion but due to some error, the signal blown was that for a fire in the vicinity of the new library. This caused a bit of confusion but due to the reddened sky, most of the volunteer firemen disregarded the siren and rushed to the Delta Sigma Phi house.

Chief Foister expressed himself as being highly satisfied with the efforts and results of his force of fire-fighters. With the aid of Dr. Frank Graham, who ably directed the score of volunteers who were eager to assist the professional firemen, the fire in the house was within control within 20 minutes. Perhaps of greater importance was the necessity of preventing the adjoining bungalows from bursting into flame because of the sparks. Although handicapped by the fact that only one hose could be connected to the hydrant, which, if functioning properly, should be able to feed water to three water-lines, the fire-fighters were helped by the fortunate direction in which the wind was blowing. Had the wind been blowing in the opposite direction, that is, northeasterly, the harmful consequences of the blaze would have been far more extensive. As it was, the men were able to concentrate their efforts in pouring gallons of water upon the house.

Unofficial estimates place the loss at no less than 75 per cent of the entire value of the house. This loss, it is surmised by several members of the fraternity, will be fully covered by insurance. But Allen Marshall, Baron Ritchie and Richard Battley suffered heavy personal losses.

There are several reasons that have been suggested as to why the walls burst into flame. The one that is most current, and believed to be the authentic one by the fire-chief, is that the heaters, which were located in the room in which the fire originated, became so over-heated that they caused the walls to burn. Others place the blame on a short-circuit. But this latter theory is scouted by people who claim that the electric lights were still working when the fire engines came to the flaming building. Defective flues are also said to have caused the fire. But the house was so thoroughly burned that it is difficult to arrive at a positive conclusion.

The brothers who lived in what was once the Delta Sigma Phi fraternity house are now separated. Some are living with friends in dormitories, in boarding houses, or in fraternity houses.

Students Operate New Model Plane

to try their hand at flying a real plane. Not real in size, but real in that all the controls are regular size and the model plane acts as a regular plane would under the same conditions.

The machine consists of a wind blower which blows from a large metal barrel across the model plane and into the face of the operator who sits at the controls and manipulates them. The plane, which is about 15 inches long is guided by the controls, and as the "pilot" moves a small lever, just like the throttle of an airplane, the fan in the windtunnel begins to speed up and duplicates the breeze created by an airplane running along the ground. The "pilot" raises the tail, and with increasing speed the take-off is completed. He navigates the ship, putting it through the different manouvers and then makes a landing.

Mr. Threadgill, who is demonstrating the machine, states that the plane is a scientifically designed instrument which duplicates exactly the flying of an airplane. The model plane can perform every manoeuver of a real plane except a loop or a spin, and these are impossible because the plane is fastened to a vertical supporting rod.

When asked yesterday if the machine was open to the public, Mr. Threadgill stated that he wished for everyone interested in airplanes to come down and feel how a real plane is flown by actually flying the model. All students are invited to try their hand at flying the plane.

Air Club To Meet

The Model Airplane Club, one of the activities of the Mechanical Engineering Society, will meet Friday afternoon at 4:00 o'clock in room 214, Phillips hall.

This club was organized primarily to furnish an activity for the first and second year student members of the mechanical engineering society, but all students interested in the subject of model airplanes are urged to be present.

Student Was Awarded Carnegie Medal At 13

weighed something over 200 pounds, Bradley, alone of the three left on the shore, swam out to his assistance. Because of the superior strength and overpowering weight of the fellow, Bradley was unable to effect a rescue and was considered fortunate to escape without losing his own life.

Through the newspapers and several interested relatives of the boy the attention of the committee of awards for the Carnegie fund was brought to this deed. As a result he was cited for his valor with the presentation of a bronze medal and a scholarship of $1600.

When asked why he had selected the University for the continuance of his education, Bradley explained that he had become interested in electrical engineering. For this study the Carnegie committee recommended North Carolina first and then Georgia Tech. He considers his final choice well-made, but sarcastically says that he doesn't see how the fellows ever prepare their work with so many girls around.

And that brings us to another interesting trait of this young man: he is an admirer of beautiful young women, especially movie stars. When he can spare the time, he is off to the talkies.

Upon coming to the University he was interested in electrical work, but now he has become quizical about propellors, air-cooled motors, and tail spins. If the members of the faculty speak favorably he intends to try the new aviation course here. No detail of the exhibition plane in Phillips hall has escaped his inspection. He has even crawled into the cockpit and tested her "airworthiness."

And now regarding the miscellany which has been hitherto omitted: He is only 16 years old, with all his size, but he will have a birthday in December. His father is a druggist in Troy. He is on the freshman wrestling squad, and although he doesn't expect to make the team he prefers to keep in condition that way than to take gym. He comes here as a graduate of a grade A high school in McCormick, S. C. He says that he was one of the only mechanically minded boys in school and was consequently forced to study his beloved math and physics in large classes of nonsensical girls. The engineering course is hard, but he likes the work.

TAR HEELS WIN OVER DURHAM Y IN HARD GAME

Contest Closes With Score 28-27; Former Carolina Stars On Durham Team.

Carolina defeated the Durham Y. M. C. A. here last night in a fast, hard-fought game. The final score was 28-27, Devin missing a free throw that would have tied the score on the last play of the game.

Both teams started slowly. After four minutes of play Harper got a crip. Carolina was never headed after that, although the Y twice pulled into a tie in the early minutes of the game. Near the end of the half Carolina had an eight-point lead, but Durham rallied and reduced it to two. Hutchison shot a goal as the half ended, making the score 14-10.

Carolina opened the half with a rush that threatened to turn the game into a walkaway, Brown getting three goals and Cleland two, while Hackney was getting Durham's lone point on a foul. With the score 24-11 Durham staged a rally that put them one point behind the Tar Heels. Hutchison got a two-pointer, but O'Neal threw another to make it 26-25. Hutchison scored again and Devin followed with a goal to bring the score to 28-27. The game ended as a foul was called on Harper. Devin missed the throw that would have tied the score.

Rufus Hackney, former Carolina star, shared honors with O'Neal for the visitors. Hackney was the high point man for the game with 11 points. He was followed by O'Neal with ten. The team was captained by Billy Devin, another former Carolina star. Cleland led the Carolina scoring with seven points.

Lineup and summary:

U. N. C. (28)		Durham Y (27)

Cleland (7)	R. F.	Hackney (11)
Harper (5)	C.	O'Neal (10)

Extensive Improvements Will Be Made On Peabody Building; To Remodel Interior Of Hall

School of Education To Have New Auditorium, More Classrooms and Improved Offices.

Plans which have been announced concerning the remodeling of Peabody building provide for a large auditorium, more classroom space and a much improved arrangement of offices for the administrative force and the professors in the school of education.

The legislature made appropriations last year for a new wing to be added to Peabody, but owing to lack of available funds, the trustees' building committee decided instead to enlarge the basement and to make an entirely new layout for the first and second floors. The University is following the same policy with Peabody that it followed in reconstructing the interior of South building, New West, Old West, Old East and New East. The alterations will take place only on the interior. The inside will be remodeled entirely, while the outside will remain unchanged.

While the work is going on in Peabody, the University school of education will be quartered temporarily in the old library building, which is in the process of being converted into a home for the music department. The construction of the auditorium at the rear of the library, where the pipe organ is to be installed, will be able to proceed without interfering with the activities of the school of education in the main building. The reconstruction of Peabody is expected to be completed soon after the Christmas holidays, or during the winter quarter at the latest.

Classes Next Quarter

Classes of the winter quarter will begin on Friday, January 3rd. There will be 30 days of probation for each day of classes that any student fails to attend. A late registration fee of $5 will also be charged to those who register after the regular days assigned for that purpose.

Folklore Course Here Next Quarter

A general course in folklore will be established in the University next quarter in the comparative literature department. Dr. R. S. Boggs will be instructor and the course will be listed as comparative literature 85. The hour has not been given, but, according to Dr. Boggs, it may be in the afternoon.

The course will define the various types of folk literature—the folk tale, ballad, legend, myth, riddle, etc. Theories of origins will be discussed and individual studies of a comparative nature made, following the different themes in their vagaries through different countries.

CHAPEL HILL SCHOOL TO ENTERTAIN WITH CIRCUS

A school circus is being given at the high school building at 7:30 this evening. The main event will take place in the auditorium, after which there will be a series of side shows in the rooms above.

As a preliminary to the circus, a parade, starting from the school building at 4:30, will pass down Franklin street and through the campus.

Admission to the main show will be 15 cents, and to the side shows 5 cents. Sandwiches, cakes, lemonade and candy will be sold. Proceeds will go to the high school annual.

Gerrard Hall Closed

Gerrard hall was closed yesterday until after the Christmas holidays, so that repairs may be made to its roof.

Abernethy Will Return To Chapel Hill Today

Dr. Eric A. Abernethy, university physician, who is undergoing treatment at McPherson hospital, Durham, for sinus trouble, is expected to be back in his office today. Dr. Abernethy was taken to the hospital Thursday and was under the care of Mr. McPherson.

Community Xmas Tree

Chapel Hill is to have a community Christmas tree again this year. A holly tree, illuminated with vari-colored electric lights, will be placed on the campus lawn not far from Franklin street near the new dorms. Santa Claus, in his traditional costume, will distribute gifts to the boys and girls.

At 4:30 on the afternoon of Monday, December 23, a brief program will be conducted at the Presbyterian church. Rev. A. S. Lawrence, rector of the Chapel of the Cross, will read the story of the first Christmas tree, and George H. Lawrence will lead in the singing of Christmas carols.

Every child is asked to bring toys and clothing for the poor. The county welfare officer reports that this year there is more poverty than usual in and around Chapel Hill.

Quarter's Chapel Over

There will be no further chapel exercises this quarter. Gerrard hall has been closed for certain repairs to the interior which will not be completed before the close of the Christmas holidays.

A Correction

In the news story appearing in yesterday's Tar Heel the following statement appeared under the heading, 'Tuberculosis Seal Sale Conducted By Community Club': "The patients who are the greatest menace to the students in the community are among the servants attached to various food dispensing units here." This statement is misleading. Mrs Otto Stuhlman, chairman of the local committee, states that there are no tubercular patients connected with the various food dispensing units here.

Baptist Church Will Give Pageant Sunday

Sunday night, December 15, the Baptist church will present a Christmas pageant entitled "Bethlehem." Oriental costumes will be worn by the cast, and the scenery and stage effects are to be very picturesque according to the committee in charge. Some forty persons will take part in the pageant. It will be held in the main auditorium of the Baptist church Sunday night at 8:30 P. M.

Home Gets Trees

W. B. Sanders of the University department of sociology has announced the gift of 75 fruit trees and 25 grapevines as a Thanksgiving gift from Paul C. Lindley, president of the Lindley nurseries of Greensboro, to the state home and industrial school for delinquent Negro girls.

The school, located near Efland in Orange county, was founded by the state federation of Negro Women's Clubs. For the past few years this organization has made numerous efforts to have the institution taken over by the state, but so far they have succeeded only in getting a small annual appropriation for this purpose. Consequently the equipment of the school is inadequate.

Bradshaw Urges Use Of Loan Fund By Students

Dean of Students Says No One Should Give Up School Because of Monetary Reasons.

Dean Francis F. Bradshaw issued an invitation yesterday afternoon to those students who feel doubtful about returning to school next quarter because of financial difficulties to make use of the student loan fund.

Although the fund is not suffering from an over abundance of wealth, there is enough money at its disposal to enable every student who needs the money for his continuation at school to obtain it.

The dean of students, who had originally intended to bring this before the students in chapel exercises Monday and Tuesday, but who is prevented from so doing by the repair work on Gerrard hall, stressed the fact that no student need give up his education because of lack of funds.

Anyone who has been considering giving up school for monetary reasons should make an appointment with the student loan fund officials before the Christmas holidays. Room 205 South building is the office of the dean of students and loans will be granted through that office.

Sociology 11 Will Be Offered Winter And Spring Terms

Dr. E. R. Groves, professor of sociology, will offer his course Sociology 11, "Marriage and the Family," in both the winter and the spring quarters this year. The course has heretofore been offered only in the final quarter of the year.

Sociology 11, which is open only to male senior students, will take up a study of the family, parent-child relationships, wife - husband relationships, problems of the home and the like. This is the third year which the course has been given. A number of colleges and universities over the country have realized the need for courses dealing with the family and marriage problems and have recently instituted them.

Dr. Groves is an authority on the subject and has written a number of books dealing with marriage and the family. The course is offered next quarter at the 12 o'clock hour.

Upperclassmen To Register Next Week

The Registrar's offices announce that all upperclassmen, (juniors and seniors), and students in the professional schools will register during the examination period, December 18-21.

Students in the college of liberal arts will register in the offices of the department in which they are majoring; all others will register with their deans.

No registration will be accepted by the Registrar's office unless all courses needing assignments to classes are properly validated and all outstanding fees at the business office and library have been paid.

First and second year students will register January 2.

Engineers Complete Culvert Pipe Test

The school of engineering in cooperation with the state highway commission has recently completed a study of the behavior of a new type of culvert pipe under an earth fill 44 feet high. The fill is one being made during the construction of the re-located route of highway No. 60 between North Wilkesboro and Boone.

During the field tests of this pipe, which is made of cast iron with spiral corrugations, observations were made and accurate deflections were taken at a point inside the 30-inch barrel vertically under the center of the roadway.

The re-location of highway No. 60 is considered little short the masterpiece of highway construction in this state. Many extremely heavy cuts and fills have been made and at one point, to avoid a very heavy and expensive fill, a concrete bridge 105 feet above the stream bed will be built.

H. A. Schmitt made the field observations as the representative of the school of engineering and was on the work during the entire time of construction.

This new type of pipe is the same as that on which laboratory tests were made at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, which were observed by Dean Braune of the school of engineering.

FOUNDATION DIRECTOR VISITS UNIVERSITY

A. J. Warren, who is in charge of the fellows of the Rockefeller Foundation, was recently in Chapel Hill for the purpose of visiting the school of engineering and seeing Dr. J. R. Martinez-Ponte, a holder of a Rockefeller fellowship from Venezuela, who is taking graduate work here.

While in Chapel Hill, Mr. Warren, who is a brother of J. A. Warren, treasurer of the University, was entertained by Professor Thorndike Saville of the school of engineering.

One Year Ago Today University Was Closed Due To Flu Scare

(By Browning Roach)

"Hello, this the infirmary? Well, listen, we have five cases of flu here at C dormitory. Can you take care of them?"

"We have only two or three cots left, but bring them around and we'll make arrangements somehow."

The time was a year ago yesterday, December 13. The characters were: first, and most important, three undergraduates, a junior, a senior and a freshman; and second, an attendant at the infirmary. Another telephone call at the infirmary. The attendant picked up the receiver. "Hello," came the words over the line, "this is so-and-so speaking at J dorm. We have four or five cases of flu here and want you to prepare to receive them in a few minutes."

"I don't know how we'll take care of them, but bring them around anyway. We'll do the best we can."

In a few moments another phone call, and still another. This must be a serious epidemic, thought the infirmary attendant. We'll have to let Dr. Chase know that the situation is growing worse.

And those of you who were here last year will recall that at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, December 13, the hastily-got-together University committee called it a holiday and dismissed classes almost a full week early to forestall the advance of the influenza epidemic. Now, whether or not these entirely innocent telephone calls had anything to do with the final decision of the committee is a matter of mere speculation, and we'll let it rest at that.

And look at us this year—everybody on the campus as healthy and hearty as can be, no flu, no pneumonia, no nothing (I believe there are a couple of chaps—Henry London and C. G. Stafford—confined to the infirmary with colds, however.) Guess we'll all just have to stay here until next week and face exams. No three weeks' holidays this year.

Much Comment Caused Here By News Of Collins' Offer From Georgetown University

(By Browning Roach)

With the publication of articles in the Washington Times and the News and Observer concerning Coach Chuck Collins' offer from Georgetown, rumors have arisen and discussions have sprung up as to the possibility or probability of any immediate action being taken by the Carolina coach. His contract here at the University still has a year to run.

Coming to Carolina after one year's coaching experience and building up the football team to its present standard, Coach Collins has earned the confidence and esteem of everyone connected with Carolina.

It is possible that the salary question will come to bear on the situation. It would take a considerably larger sum than he is now receiving to lure Collins away from the Hill. The coaching situation here, as things now stand would present a more attractive proposition than that at Georgetown. The eastern university will be handicapped next season by a noticeable lack of material, while very few men will be lost from the varsity squad for Carolina.

It will take some skillful coaching to build a strong team for Georgetown next year, while here Collins would have only to continue with the work already well started. The inauguration of a new system of coaching is quite a task and ordinarily requires several seasons to produce favorable results. The results of Collins' work here are just coming to light, and the recognition due him is now being accorded. He would have to begin again at Georgetown the job of building up a team, just as he did at Carolina four years ago. When he came to Carolina Collins faced the problem not only of building up a team worthy of note but of acquiring a reputation also. National recognition has descended upon the young Notre Dame coach and the team he has engineered through a prosperous season.

Since the entire football coaching staff, as well as the graduate manager, are out of town, reports of the Georgetown offer have yet to be verified, and Collins' attitude has yet to be ascertained.

Tar Heel Topics

The chief reason for Mr. Grundy's appointment to fill the Vare vacancy seems to be that no one pays any attention to the rumpus kicked up by a senator anyway.

President Lingle of Davidson tells of a bootlegger who passed through the stands selling whiskey in Coca-Cola bottles during a recent game. He wouldn't do much business at games here—everybody prefers to carry his own.

The model airplane in operation at the mechanical engineering laboratory gives all the thrills of piloting an air buggy except that of breaking your neck when the darn thing sideslips and crashes.

It is rumored that the AP will carry a big story in a day or so from the White House concerning Dr. Odum, but it seems to us that the story in yesterday morning's Daily Tar Heel just about scoops them all.

Up at Burnsville, where the state is trying the eight Marion officers charged with mortally wounding six strikers and injuring 15 others, they have admitted the testimony of W. L. Hicklin, Asheville newspaper reporter. The defense will probably object to his testimony on the basis of the time-honored opinion that you can't believe a word a newspaper man says.

Governor Fisher may be an ass for appointing Grundy to the Senate, as Norris of Nebraska points out, and the appointment may be a "stench in the nostrils of the people," but you've got to admit that the newest senator is a good business man. He brings his woolen goods to the Senate, gets them displayed, and the reporters eat it up. There's free advertising for you!

A Few Discrepancies In Mr. Gossett's Textile Situation Views

B. B. Gossett, chief executive of the Chadwick-Hoskins mills at Charlotte and one of the state's leading textile manufacturers, presented the mill owners' viewpoint of the textile industry and its recent labor disturbances in an address at State College Thursday night. Mr. Gossett admirably outlined the position of the more liberal and intelligent mill owners, but in our opinion there were a few rather important discrepancies in his remarks.

Pointing out that the industry is operating on an unprofitable basis, Mr. Gossett attributed this condition to the policy of many mills which fail to realize the importance of adjusting their operations to demand. He urged greater cooperation of the mill owners in efforts to promote the sale of cotton goods through advertising, the development of new uses and the opening of new markets. Pleading for reduction in output, he declared that close cooperation between the manufacturers is imperative if the industry is to be made profitable. Yet he stated without qualification that unionization of the workers, which represents the sort of cooperation among the employees that he declared imperative for the employers, would be "nothing less than disastrous for workers and manufacturers alike."

Referring to the reports of brutally low wage scales and terrible living conditions in the mill villages, Mr. Grossett asserted that they were nothing more than the propaganda of outside agitators. "By and large the mills are providing their workers with excellent homes and surroundings," he declared. Anyone familiar with mill villages in the south realizes that they are certainly not composed of "excellent homes and surroundings." As for wage scales, how can the $8 and $10 per week wages for unskilled textile mill workers be termed anything but brutally low? Although Mr. Gossett quoted statistics to prove that the average wage of cotton mill workers in North Carolina is the highest in the southern textile industry ($16.46), he discreetly failed to mention the vast number of workers who receive $12 a week and less.

Repeatedly urging that the mill owners "take their employees into their confidence," Mr. Gossett did not state what benefits the workers would receive from these "confidences." With any sort of power definitely denied the workers by their lack of organization, which Mr. Gossett implied to be the proper state of affairs by his declaration that unionization is impractical and undesirable, they would certainly have nothing to gain by being "taken into the confidence" of the employers. Any "confidences" of the executives could be nothing more than commands disguised under a sugar-coated exterior.

The so-called "stretch-out" efficiency system was defended by Mr. Gossett. He asserted that it did not place any more work upon the employees, merely eliminating the unfit. Savings in decreased costs are returned to the workers in the form of higher wages, he declared. Although theoretically the "stretch-out" system should not place a heavier burden upon the workers, those familiar with its operation in southern mills state that it has been installed so inefficiently and ignorantly that it has actually increased the duties of the employees a great deal in most cases; very rare indeed are the instances in which they have received increased wages due to installation of the system.

Alluding to the efforts of labor in this state to organize as the work of "foreign and unsympathetic organizers" entirely, Mr. Gossett deplored these efforts. He did not seem to take cognizance of the Marion case, when the workers themselves practically begged the American Federation of Labor to allow them to become members of the union. Asserting that "the right of a man to join the union is in keeping with the constitutional guarantees not only, but it is one of those sacred and inherent rights based on justice and individual freedom to which all men are entitled where not in conflict with the best interests of society," Mr. Gossett failed to show how unionization is "not in conflict with the best interests of society" as a whole. Perhaps unionization is in conflict with the interests of capital, but it is certainly not in conflict with the best interests of the workers, who constitute the bulk of our society. No mention was made of the strong-arm tactics of many manufacturers, who discharge every employe who joins the union.

Night work was deplored by Mr. Gossett. He attributed its continuance, now that it is harmful to the industry as a whole in view of the tremendous overproduction, to humanitarian motives on the part of owners who do not wish to turn their employees out without work. He offered no explanation for the 30-hour week recently placed in effect in many mills, which effects a tremendous hardship on the already underpaid workers, who have been given no increase in per hour wage. Would it not be much better if the night shifts were gradually eliminated by filling the frequently occurring vacancies in the ranks of the day workers with men recruited from the night shifts?

With evident truthfulness Mr. Gossett stated that higher wages can come only from larger profits. His remedies for the desperate condition of the cotton manufacturers are excellent, but in dealing with the labor problem he exhibits the rather natural bias of a mill owner. Labor in the textile industry may be receiving its just share of the profits, but it is certainly not in a position to demand this share if it is not now receiving it. The mill owners should work out among themselves the solution to the problem of overproduction, but they should also allow the workers an opportunity to secure their rightful portion of the fruits of their labor. Through unionization alone can the interests of the workers be safeguarded, and we believe that once labor is in a position to be assured of receiving its just portion of the profits in the textile industry, it will cooperate fully with the manufacturers in attempts to increase these profits.

Attitudes, Methods And Results

One knows that an inherent sense of and a degree of appreciation for the drama and the theatre is present in every student of that composite art. There is every indication that, at this university, that flame has been fanned and not snuffed, for it takes sympathy and not perversity to obtain such results as Professors Koch and Heffner get from their playwriting and play producing classes. Their general attitude and particular methods are remarkably sympathetic and tend only to aid their students to attain their ends.

A most recent innovation has been a practice of experimentally producing the plays written by the members of the playwriting class conducted by Professor Koch to ascertain how well the plays act in the embryo. The purpose of this proceeding is to determine the merit of the play to perform the function of all plays—that is to act; to point out affects and defects to the writer that he might better improve upon his work; and to foster interest on the part of the student in the various phases of the work.

Those working in the dramatic department are fortunate in that they work under extremely congenial conditions and sincere people—a condition not evidently prevalent in many departments in the University.

Readers' Opinions

J. O. IS ANSWERED

To the Editor of the Tar Heel:

A correspondent, J. O., complains in last Saturday's paper about some of the things said in the discussion of Mr. Bertrand Russell's philosophy at the meeting of the Philosophy Club last week, and some of his remarks should be answered.

In the first place, Mr. Paul Green, the speaker, did not state that the large number present should have been only five or six. What he said was that he expected only five or six.

In the second place, if the discussion on this occasion was "a fine example of pedantic hair-splitting" I wonder how your correspondent would label a thorough inquiry that got down to the roots of the questions involved—for what was said at this meeting was necessarily brief, because of the little time available. If one so wishes, he can term inquiries of this kind hair-splitting, but to do so betrays a want of acquaintance with the nicer points involved. You do not reach finality in philosophy, science, religion, art or any of the deeper concerns of life without the most painstaking search and a scrupulous regard for the niceties of your subject. If you want quick and snappy results, something tangible, you had better forego intellectual pursuits and turn to the realm of things which you can see and feel—the realm of the bare senses, which is the home of the most of mankind, including nearly all undergraduates. If, on the other hand, your purpose is to understand, and if you have the patience and I think the humility necessary to understanding, you will not be content with mere sensual things nor with the manifest reflections of them found in the writers mentioned by J. O., and you will find that what you at first thought was hair-splitting, was something quite different. Our field of knowledge, failing to understand or appreciate another, does, it is true, sometimes attempt to belittle it by accusing it of hair-splitting; for example, I heard it asked not long ago by a journalist when preparations were being made to remeasure the spread of light, "What difference does it make whether it is 186,000 miles a second or only 185,900? No difference, surely, to him nor to any who think, or rather feel, with him, yet to a physicist or an astronomer or a philosophical thinker it may make a great deal of difference. Let me remark in passing that you will notice that people of this type are those who are continually snorting about what they call "tolerance"— by which they obviously mean tolerance of their own attitude of intolerance toward those whom they dislike or cannot understand. Sometime when in need of a topic for one of those pointed editorials which you have been writing, you might devote your talents to exposing the close kinship which exists between these fellows and the Ku Klux Klan.

Again, your correspondent speaks of "asininely old precepts and morals." In the sphere of precept and morals, J. O., age—the test of long time and experience—is one of the highest recommendations to the reflective mind. Nowadays many think it is a great new discovery that people can cheat, deceive, carouse, and in general go on the loose, and they of course loudly acclaim those writers who give countenance to his view of life. But an acquaintance with history, and a little reflection of one's own, inevitably shows that it is a view which is neither new nor true, but only ridiculous.

Finally, as to Mr. Russell's philosophy, or rather as to the smattering of it contained in his address here. A good part of what he said was inconsistent with other elements of his system, and much of the rest was invalid on its face, as was indicated in some of the discussion before the Philosophy Club. I suppose J. O. is not aware of it, but Mr. Russell is now, and for some years past has been, engaged in diffusing mere pap, so that he is much criticized by philosophers for squandering his talents, which talents are exceptional, as his work in mathematics and logic has shown.

"TEN MILLION WHITE CROSSES"

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

"Ten thousand hills covered with ten million white crosses;" in memory of the Legion of those who gave their lives for the "Fatherland," for "National Honor," or to "Make the world safe for Democracy."

Truly, "There is enough intelligence, there are enough men of good-will in the world to warrant us to believe that peace on earth is not just an empty yearning but a practical possibility."

The quotations are from an Armistice Day newspaper article by Judge W. S. Criswell.

His words would have been true as far back as 1916; probably even in 1860.

It was stated in the House of Representatives in February, 1917, that the J. P. Morgan interests, allied with the steel, shipbuilding and powder interests, got together twelve men high up in the newspaper world and employed them to select the twelve most influential papers in the United States. Twenty-five papers were finally decided upon and editors hired to urge preparedness, incite hatred against Germany and work up sympathy for the Allies. A paragraph in the Congressional Record of February 9, 1917, and repeated in the Congressional Record of May 26, 1921, refers to the policy of these "Big Interests" papers.

"This policy also included the suppression of everything in opposition to the wishes of the interests served. The effectiveness of the scheme has been demonstrated by the character of the stuff carried in the daily press throughout the country since March, 1915. They have resorted to anything necessary to commercialize public sentiment and sandbag the National Congress into making extravagant and wasteful appropriations for the Army and Navy. Their stock argument is that it is "patriotism." They are playing on every prejudice and passion of the American people."

On the later date (May 26, 1921) a few facts given in a history by M. Hanoteaux, former Minister of Foreign Affairs in France, were also brought to light in the House of Representatives. The history states, in effect, that France was ready to make peace in the latter part of 1914, but was dissuaded from doing so by three Americans; Robert Bacon, of the house of J. P. Morgan and Co.; Myron T.

THE POINTER

By J. C. Williams

Fire Again!

No sooner do we build one fraternity house on this campus than another one is destroyed by fire. It seems to be a case of taking something out of one pocket and putting it in the other one. 'Tis a good thing that we're building quite a few houses over in Fraternity Court, for old Fraternity Row seems to be on "it's last leg." That is certainly a hot section of town.

The Tariff Once More

According to this paper, the Di and Phi recently went into an extended debate over the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill which has been pending before the late special session of congress. Since the local Senators and Representatives finally agreed that the bill was "all wrong," we suggest that Senator Smoot and Representative Hawley be admonished concerning many glaring defects which the local congress found in the measure.

We Write a Verse

(With apologies to Longfellow)

Under the spreading mistletoe
The homely co-ed stands,
And stands, and stands, and stands,
And sees each Christmas go.

This dame a mighty lass is she
With large and forbidding hands,
And the tone of her strange demands,
Enough to make the righteous flee.

Why Not a Ring?

On the continent of Europe, especially in Germany, it is said to be customary for men to signify that they belong to the married state by wearing a matrimonial ring. In those regions people claim that failure to do so might sometimes cause awkward mistakes. Why, after all, should the wearing of a matrimonial badge be confined to the fairer of the two partners in wedlock? The sign of the firm should be mutual and the emblem of the alliance unmistakable.

Personally, we are very much in favor of compelling married men to wear matrimonial rings. Under such circumstances "dutiful husbands," unaccompanied by their wives, would not have the air of gay bachelors, thereby causing many of the unmarried members of the other sex to waste valuable time.

Christmas Gifts

It seems to be customary at this season of the year to prepare a list of so-called appropriate Christmas gifts. At the outset, we intended to print our list in this column, but the remembrance of the disaster which we encountered last year while playing Saint Nick has overcome our first intent. Last Christmas we suggested a certain present for a co-ed friend and are yet to receive forgiveness for our gross blunder. This time we're leaving this Christmas gift business to Santa Claus himself.

"Negro Hits Auto; Instantly Killed," headlines a local newspaper. The best way to handle balky and rebellious engines on cold mornings is to deal gently with them. This rough stuff doesn't work any longer.

Farewell

This is our last
Column this semester.
If it doesn't suit you
Please, decline to pester!

But whether you scold
Or whether you praise
We wish you untold
Joy for the holidays!

(By J. G. Hamilton, Jr.)

BASKETBALL has occupied the center of the stage for the last three days. Wednesday night the Tar Heels went down before the strong Raleigh Y. M. C. A. team. Frank Goodwin, former State star and all-southern center last year, was chiefly responsible for this defeat. Thursday night Carolina displayed a reversal of form and defeated the Greensboro Y 41-10. Last night the team continued its winning ways against the Durham Y, a team composed largely of former college stars. Former Carolina players, Billy Devin and Rufus Hackney, were stars for Durham. In these games the team, while having a tendency to miss a great number of easy shots, has displayed a smoothly working organization that gives promise of becoming a strong team. Brown, Marpet, Slater, Choate and Hutchison have all shown up well. Last night's game was the last of the games to be played before Christmas. The next game on the schedule is against the Greensboro Y and will be played on January 10.

FOOTBALL CREDITS are suggested by Dean James D. Hoskins of the University of Tennessee as part of the school's physical education program. He would permit these credits to be substituted for certain elective subjects. "Minds are quickened and judgment is developed more by football lettermen," Dean Hoskins said. "The assistance is equal to or better than that acquired in an equal amount of time spent studying academic subjects. The question of allowing credit for all extra curriculum activities is now being considered. None of these has acquired the intensity of football." We think that there is a good deal in the Dean's plan but we see no reason to confine the credits to football. Baseball, basketball; in fact, most athletics, develop the qualities of judgment and mental alertness. The plan might settle the worries of the Carnegie Foundation. All schools give scholarships to worthy students and if playing football is part of an education there can be no objection to giving scholarships to football players.

COACH JIMMY DEHART'S failure to produce a winning team at Duke this year has aroused the ire of the alumni of that institution. In regard to this row and any others of the type, we would like to borrow a remark from the Ring-tum Phi of Washington and Lee: "It's a great old game, this thing of blaming bad seasons and rotten teams on the coach. In many instances it is possible that the blame is deserved by him, but in more it belongs elsewhere." Glancing back over the Duke schedule for the year we can say only that if Coach DeHart had turned out a winning team under such circumstances he would have been a miracle coach.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Association of Southern Coaches and Athletic Directors is being held in Baton Rouge, La. The coaches were to act on a number of proposed amendments to the constitution of the Southern Conference. The most important of these are the long proposed split conference, a central booking agency for officials in the south, eligibility rules as applied to junior college men, and the possible elimination of scouting in Dixie. We would welcome the split in the conference; in its present form it is too unweildy to handle efficiently and properly. In our opinion, two conferences, with the set of officers to insure harmony, would be much more desirable.

STATISTICS TELL HOW TAR HEELS SCORED 53 TIMES

Team Scored 28 Extra Points; Thirty-Two Scores Came From Runs; Eighteen From Passes.

Figures tell an interesting story about the way the North Carolina Tar Heels got their 346 points to lead the south and east and place second in the national scoring chase.

There were 53 touchdowns and 28 extra points. Thirty-two touchdowns came from runs from scrimmage that ranged from 1 to 63 yards and averaged 19 2-3 yards. Eighteen came from passes that ranged by total gains from 3 to 67 yards and averaged 31 yards. Two came from punt returns, 55 and 60 yards, respectively. One came from a blocked punt recovered behind the goal.

The total yardage on the 53 scoring plays was 1300, an average gain of 24 1-2 yards on each touchdown play.

Jimmy Ward, senior halfback and triple-threat, led the scoring parade, participated in by 13 players, with 12 touchdowns and 72 points. Yank Spaulding, third-year fullback, leading the extra-point kickers with 16, and with 7 touchdowns, placed second with 58 points. Captain-elect Strud Nash, hard-running right half, was third with 54 points.

Other scoring leaders were Johnny Branch, quarter, 32; Jim Magner, half, 31; Rip Slusser, half, 24; Chuck Erickson, half, 18.

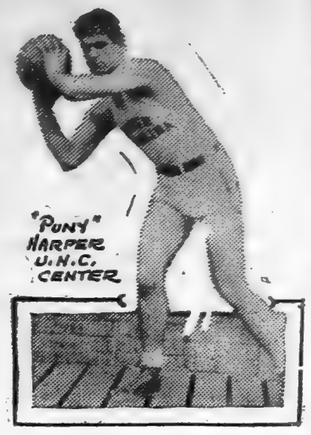
Jim Magner turned in the longest touchdown gallop from scrimmage—a 63-yard sprint against Maryland. Jimmy Ward was a close second with a 62-yard run against Davidson and a 47-yard sprint against Duke.

Chuck Erickson and Jimmy Maus accounted for the longest pass gain. Maus hurled Erickson a 20-yard pass in the N. C. State game that Erickson converted into a 67-yard gain.

Johnny Branch, broken field ace, was on the receiving end of two passes that both netted 60 yards, and Spaulding likewise once.

Nash's 60-yard sprint at N. C. State's expense was the longest punt return for touchdown, pushed closely by Branch's 55-yard gallop against Georgia Tech.

The longest run with an intercepted pass was Erickson's 71-yard run against N. C. State, but Erickson lacked 4 yards of a touchdown.



Frosh Basketball To Begin In January

Freshman basketball practice will start immediately after the Christmas holidays, Coach Rex Enright announced yesterday. Equipment will be issued on the first day of school and practice will start that afternoon at the Tin Can.

The Codex of Roda, lost for about 175 years, is now safely housed in the Spanish National Library at Madrid. It was purchased recently by the government at a cost approximating $11,000. The Codex deals with the events of the later 10th and the 11th centuries.

Courses in navigation for young women fliers are included in the fall curriculum of Barnard College for Women at New York.

"Puny" Harper

"Puny" Harper is Carolina's only three letter man. He is playing his last year for Carolina. His size always makes him a troublesome opponent.

FINE OUTLOOK FOR FRESHMAN BOXING

Gray, Miller, Landis, Hubbard, And Levinson Appear To Be Best.

The prospects of the freshman boxing team for this year are much brighter than those of last year's team. While not as many men reported for boxing at the end of the football season as had been expected, the squad makes up in quality for what is lost in quantity. The team will probably be built around Jimmy Gray, Bill Miller, P. W. Landis, R. Hubbard, and Martin Levinson.

Gray, a fast and shifty man, will probably make one of the lighter weights on account of his hard hitting and good boxing. Miller, a heavyweight, carries a terrific wallop, is fast for his size and build, and boxes well. His left handed style seems to bother his opponents to the extent that he is able to get in extra blows. Hubbard broke his thumb in practice, but will be in shape before the matches start in January. Landis, a football man, has not had much chance to show what he can do on account of being preoccupied with football. Levinson gives promise of being the outstanding man on the team. He is an experienced man with a powerful wallop.

Receiver's Sale Monday

A receivers' sale of the office furniture, and bills and notes receivable of the Chapel Hill Insurance and Realty Company will be held at the post office door Monday, December 23, at 12 o'clock noon. A list of the bills, notes and accounts to be sold at this auction is placed for public inspection in the office of the Chapel Hill Insurance and Realty Co.

Failure of highest bidders to pay for property bought at auction has caused a delay in closing up the receivership. These bidders are being pressed for payment and it is expected that the court will be able to give the receivers their discharge in January.

Some of the real estate could not be sold for as much as it was mortgaged for, and will be turned over to the holders of the mortgages.

Local High School Football Letters

Short talks by Coach Jones and Superintendent Hoyle featured the chapel program at the local high school this week. Each complimented the football team on its excellent showing made this season and the improvement it has made over the last several years. Both Coach Jones and Superintendent Hoyle stated they believe that the same spirit was being revived that led the former teams during 1919, 1920 and 1921 to championships, and that another season would see Chapel Hill at her rightful place among the leading teams of the state.

Coach Jones introduced Mr. Hoyle as the most loyal of high school supporters and asked him to present the coveted "Block C."

The following men received awards: Captain Odell King, Tom Lawrence, end; Coley Ray, tackle; Taft Teague, guard; Frank King, center; Julian Renn, guard; Edward (Bob) Ray, end, captain-elect; Claude Council, quarterback; Dick Dashiel, halfback; Walter McKnight, halfback; Bayman Upchurch, guard and halfback; Paul Pendergraph, center; Duncan Neville, tackle, Harold Ray, halfback, and Bill Canada, manager. A monogram for service was given to one man, Billy Barbour, quarterback.

November 6 was to have been the end of the world according to three persons who were awaiting the Judgment day atop a hill overlooking the little town of Masefield, Saskatchewan.

Wigue And Masque Stages Annual Initiation Ceremony

Campus Musical Organization Takes In Seven New Members; Breaks Precedent With Admission of Co-eds.

Marking a radical change from the accepted custom of not having girls as members of student campus organizations, the Wigue and Masque initiated last night six blushing co-eds and one more abashed, if possible, male student.

The initiation ceremonies began early yesterday morning. Professors, as well as students, were surprised to notice Elizabeth Barber, Phoebe Harding, Helen McKay, Beth Colley, Celeste Edgerton, Kelsoe Currie, Maurine Forester and Harry J. Galland going about the entire day, attired in the most correct formal evening wear. Quizzes, examinations, questions and answers, cat-calls, foolish remarks and scores of belittling assertions had to be experienced in high heels and decollete dresses by the girls and a stiff-bosomed shirt and an uncomfortable collar by the sole, solitary neophyte who represented what is termed the "stronger" sex.

But at 8 o'clock in Person hall, the rough treatment that aspirants to the membership of this well-known musical organization must undergo, commenced.

Dressed in the oldest clothes that the initiates could find hidden in forgotten corners of their closets, blindfolded with heavy, white (?) bath-towels and carrying long, ominous-looking paddles in their hands, the group proceeded, after a half-hour of secret torments in Person hall, to Spencer hall, better known as the "Co-ed Shack." Their course led through Franklin street, which at that time was a crowded thoroughfare. Many were treated to the hilarious view of six girls and one boy being led by 20 members of the producing company of the successful show of last year, "Mum's the Word." Many were so attracted by the procession that they trailed along behind it.

The grape-vine system of broadcasting news in Chapel Hill has long been known as an efficient one. And last night, it seemed as though it had been working extremely well, for the reception room in the co-ed dormitory was crowded by expectant observers.

All the future Wigue and Masquers had been told to prepare skits for presentation last night. They did not know, when they were told, that their efforts at being humorous were to be unfolded before a "packed house" in the Shack. And as one observant bystander said, "My, but girls hate to be embarrassed. Especially before others."

Tendering of songs was the means that the group of "pledges" employed to amuse the spectators. All manners and kinds of melodies were sung. Maurine Forester, with her song, which was the hit of last year's show, "tore the house down" with applause. But the peak of the evening was reached when Harry Galland, whose reddened cheeks and nervous mannerisms were witness to his state, staged a touching love scene with Beth Colley. Not for long will Harry forget his role as Casanova, or perhaps it was Don Juan.

At 9 o'clock the actors as well as the audience were exhausted from their mirth and merriment. The return procession wound its way around the quiet campus paths. The unsteady steps, due to the blindfolds, the rollicking songs and caustic comments rudely broke the quiet of the night. But like all good troupers, they kept on with the show.

Person hall was finally attained. The blindfolds were taken off for several moments until the more serious and important events of the evening were to take place.

Shortly before 9:30 word was given that the time was ready for the "show people" to once again don their masks. The members took their places and the room was quiet. The grave ceremony of reading the oath and other serious words to the almost-members commenced and soon it was over. Henceforth, these seven who "had undergone such trials and tribulations and had fared well under them" were full-fledged and accredited members of the famous Wigue and Masque.

Congratulations were heaped upon them, as well as refreshments, which were welcomed with evident delight. Enjoyment which could be enjoyed mutually began and lasted for some time.

The announcements of this year's activities were also made at this time. The officers of the club for this year are Wex Malone, president; George Race, vice-president; Craig Sheldon, treasurer, and Jack Kirkpatrick, secretary. Elmer Hall, technical director of the Playmakers, succeeds John Weaver, who for many years aided the annual show-makers as faculty advisor.

The presentation this year will be a musical revue, entitled "Little Campus" and written by Wex Malone and Moore Bryson.

Although serious obstacles are in the path of the producers, for no substitute for Memorial hall has as yet been found, try-outs for the roles of "Little Campus" will be held during the winter quarter. The Wigue and Masque members state that they are looking forward to their most successful venture this spring, for the lyrics and tunes of "Little Campus" promise to be more engaging and pleasing than those of any previous production.

Much Comment Caused By News Of Collins' Offer From Georgetown

in the Washington Times says: "Father O'Brien (faculty adviser on athletics at Georgetown) stated that an announcement of the new coach probably would not be made until the end of the month, at the time of the football coaches' meeting in New York City, December 27, 28 and 29.

"Collins would be somewhat reluctant about accepting the position at the Hilltop in view of the wholesale loss of players from this year's squad by graduation, and the difficult schedule that the Hilltoppers will confront next fall, it has been learned, but would do it if his terms are met.

"With a paucity of material and the inauguration of an entirely new system, it is almost certain that it would take Collins at least two years to get things going in a satisfactory manner.

"Collins is aware of this situation, which, while decidedly unencouraging, is certainly no worse than the one he confronted when he took charge of the North Carolina destinies four years ago. At that time the Tar Heels were wallowing at the bottom of the heap in Southern Conference circles. Since the advent of Collins, however, the Tar Heels have advanced to the front by leaps and bounds, completing their most successful season this year by going through a ten-game schedule with the loss of only one game."

UNIVERSITY GRADUATE IS EMPLOYED ON CARNEGIE

The December 6th issue of Science contains an article about the destruction of the non-magnetic ship "Carnegie," which blew up in the harbor at Apia, Samoa, on November 30, killing its captain.

Employed on this research ship was H. R. Siewell, a graduate of the University, who obtained his B. S. degree in geology in 1927. Soon after his graduation from the University, Siewell became oceanographer on the "Carnegie," which was making a magnetic survey of the earth.

The "Carnegie" was built to make thorough magnetic observations of declination, intensity etc., and in order to avoid interference with the delicate magnetic instruments the ship was built with little more than a ton of iron and steel.

Siewell escaped injuries and has recently returned to the United States. At present he is in Buffalo, N. Y., working up his material gathered on the ill-fated ship.

THREE ADDRESSES MADE BEFORE ALPHA PSI DELTA

The Alpha Psi Delta fraternity met this week in New West building. The following program was rendered: Dr. Trabue spoke on "The Validity of High School Examinations," Dr. Dashiell discussed "A Method for Increasing the Reliability of Mazes." Dr. Crane's subject was "A Study of Type Faces in Advertising."

Dr. Hans Prinzhorn, a well known scholar from Frankfort, Germany, was a guest of the fraternity of which he is an honorary member.

The following were elected to membership: Mrs. L. M. Brooks, Dr. J. M. Valentine, G. A. Metz, and J. W. Eaton.

About 25 members were present.

"TEN MILLION WHITE CROSSES"

Herrick and William G. Sharp. These men promised French officials that they would organize propaganda that would put the United States in the war on the side of the Allies. The Hanoteaux history states that the sum of money provided to goad this country into war was too great even for American comprehension.

* * *

In the "key-note" speech nominating Woodrow Wilson for a second term, June 14, 1916, Martin H. Glynn, then Governor of New York, said in reference to neutrality and peace:

"This is the paramount issue. No lesser issue must cloud it. No unrelated problem must confuse it.

"In the submission of this issue to the electorate we of this convention hold these truths to be self-evident to every student of America's history, to every friend of America's institutions:

"That the United States is constrained by the traditions of the past, by the logic of the present and by the promise of the future to hold itself apart from the European warfare, to save its citizens from participation in the conflict that now devastates the nations across the seas.

"For 200 years neutrality was a theory; America made it a fact.

"And today in this hall, so all the world may hear, we proclaim that this American policy which the present Administration pursues with patriotic zeal and religious devotion, while Europe's skies blaze red from fires of war, Europe's soil turns red from blood of men, Europe's eyes see red from tears of mourning women and from sobs of starving children."

Wilson was nominated and elected. But even while the campaign slogan, "He kept us out of war," was being flung to the breeze, the Administration and the J. P. Morgan and kindred interests had the "wires" fixed for a declaration of war.

And thus it is that a part of the ten million white crosses that cover ten thousand hills are in remembrance of American boys that Wilson sent to French trenches to safeguard the interests of Big Business.

Yes, truly, there was enough intelligence and enough men of good-will in our land in 1916 to vote for neutrality and peace, and they did. But they got conscription, war, and the most severe demonstration of gag-rule ever before enforced in any so-called civilized country. The less the justification for war the greater for the suppression of free speech.

It was, and is, possible for a half-dozen men of unlimited wealth and still more unlimited greed to override the expressed will of millions of voters.

Yet there is progress toward universal peace. Many factors are at work. Among them a demand for a change in the defining of the word "treason" in the Constitution of the United States, making it include the greatest of all traitors against mankind.

Telephony knows no barriers

Telephone lines must cross natural barriers. This means construction methods must be flexible, readily varied to peculiar local conditions.

Special problems arise, too, in telephone laboratory, factory and central office. How to protect poles from insect attack? How to develop more compact equipment for use in manholes? How to assure a sufficient number of trained operators? How to build long distance business?

It takes resourcefulness to find the answers, to surmount the barriers. There is no stereotyped way.
